The Synchronized Swimming Group along with the H2O Club will present the water show. Practice is held each week and is already under way.

The new members of the Synchronized Swimming Group are Linda Barren, Dana Brooken, Lucy Plannagen, Lynn Gardner, Julie Glass, Jean Gould, Also, Lynn Howard, Kathy Kolva, Mary Long, Susan Lawler.

Also, Laura Lee Meyerhoffer, Gail Nolan, Rosalie Palumbo, Connie Parkins, Janice Smith, Arlene Steiner, Sue Stone, Betsy Stuart, Susan Williams.

Student Interviews New School Director

(Continued from page 1) student-exchange plan by which various students from the free school association will visit in other high schools throughout the country for a week. (Dr. Sullivan says that this is done quite frequently in the North.) Other student activities follow the usual pattern of schools all over the country — various sports, clubs, and organizations. Probably the only outstanding structural difference between this Free School Association and most other United States schools is its utilization of the non-graded system and team-teaching methods.

Defines Team Teaching

Team teaching is generally defined as "an arrangement whereby two or more teachers, with or without teacher aides, plan, instruct, and evaluate cooperatively one or more class groups during a given period in order to take advantage of their respective special competencies. Obvious advantages result from such a method — among the most important being the fact that 'the quality of the education of a student is no longer dependent upon the competence of a single teacher.'"

The definition of the non-graded school is usually stated thus: "It is an organizational pattern of education which can provide continuous learning for every child and by which he will be able to achieve success at each level of instruction."

"Each child will progress from level to level as rapidly as he masters the skills and the content at each level of achievement. He will not experience failure as it is sometimes experienced in the graded system."

Neither will he experience boredom, not matter how able or gifted, since he will be stimulated and challenged to progress to new levels when he is ready to do so."

Learning Differs

Because some children develop their capacity for learning more slowly than others, it is the intention of the Association to allow each child to proceed at his own particular rate of learning.

On the other hand, the more advanced students will not be allowed to suffer; for them, there is a directed study program enabling them to work to their capacity. Each student may therefore easily find his proper niche.

Tying all these favorable factors together is that one element which is vital to any successful venture — enthusiasm. According to the superintendent, this component is prevalent among both faculty and administration and the students themselves.

For many reasons, on the part of various organizations, the N.A.A.C.P. in particular, the majority of the Negro children of this area have been without the education. Observing the result has not been pleasant. Today, something is being done and in an apparently effective manner. As far as the Free School Association is concerned, the education of these children is the most pertinent question.

Dr. Sullivan has asked me to extend his invitation to you, the future teachers of America, to visit the Free School Association and see both the new system and its end-product, enthusiasm, in progress.

Hull Plans Singing Career

Commenting on Longwood, Mr. Hull says that he enjoys working at a woman's college and was impressed by the traditions demonstrated here, but feels that there should be more emphasis on the academic side of college. Mr. Hull plans to continue working on singing professionally — concentrating on opera, but performing in all mediums — and to give private lessons on the college level.

for various violation and the students' rights and privileges.

3) Procedure for Trial Cases Involving Presence of Accused — what is involved when one appears before the Board.

4) Penalties — an explanation of the penalties given for certain infractions.

5) Appearance before the Board — an attempt to clear up some misunderstandings about what happens when one is "called up" to appear before the Board.

It is hoped that this first and long-needed attempt to present the Longwood student body with a clearer understanding of Judicial Board action will prove to be a strengthening factor in Student Government — student ties. Perhaps from now on it will be more a government of, by and for the students.

From The Files

The following is about Circus as reported in the November 26, 1920 issue of the Rotunda. At this time, the newspaper was only five issues old.

"All of us have attended carnivals before, but that one which came to the State Normal School Saturday, November 20, was the finest show of its kind which has been presented in the present day.

The opening performance was vaudeville held in the auditorium at 7:30 o'clock. One of the special features on the program was a solo dancer of exceeding grace and artistic qualities, rendered by one of the foremost artists on the vaudeville stage of this city. Beautiful chorus girls sang the popular songs of today, among which were "My Alice Blue Gown" and "Let the Rest of the World Go By." The Junior and Senior classes presented several stunts, one of which was "Monkey Monk."

After the vaudeville the crowd followed the parade, which was led by the jazz band, and composed of the various performers of the circus. There were clowns and acrobats, trained animals, gymnasts, and tight rope walkers, in the living wonders of the side shows, an old farmer and his wife, and the negro minstrels. The parade led the way to the gymnasium, where the marvelous acrobatic stunts and regular circus performances took place. The crowd found wonder and delight in the minstrel shows and side shows. Among the features presented at the side shows were Blue Beard's Wives, a Cherry Colored Cat, Siamese Twins, a Swimming Match, Tom Thumb and his Wife, the New Seven Wonders of the World, and many other unique attractions.

There were artistically decorated booths, where various wares were sold. But perhaps the greatest hit of the evening was the Most Beautiful Baby Ever seen. This baby has won many prizes at previous shows, and we can indeed consider ourselves fortunate to have obtained this extraordinary feature for the carnival presented here at S. N. S."

EXAM SCHEDULE

The examination schedule for Block I courses has been posted. Each examination will last three hours.

'Faculty Fireside' Proves Successful

By Mary Ann Lipford

"If these Danish dolls could speak, would they think like all the Longwood dolls?" Some fifty students, their curiosity piqued by the poster's query, gathered Thursday night for the first Student Government-sponsored Faculty Fireside.

Dr. Rinaldo C. Simonini, Jr., Chairman of the English Department and noted advocate of the linguistic approach to English grammar, virtually assured his responsive audience that Danish and Longwood dolls have widely different thoughts.

He made two basic propositions around which his discussion and subsequent student questions centered. First, contented Dr. Simonini, the language of a culture controls the thinking of its speakers. "Not merely an inventory of words, language is a self-contained, dynamic, and creative entity in itself which molds and controls our thoughts, habits, and behavior."

His second proposition concerned this behavior: since our thinking and behavior is dependent on language, language may compel us to behave illogically.

LC Newmanites Attend Seminar In West Virginia

With the distinction of having the largest delegation to the Formation Seminar of the National Newman Club Federation's Piedmont Region, Longwood Newmanites participated in a weekend of study, planning, and prayer. This seminar, hosted by the Newman Club of Shenherd College, was held in Martinsburg, West Virginia, the weekend of October 11, 12, and 13.

Those persons attending from Longwood included Theresa Albright, Linda Bassford, Amy Haley, Rosalita Bay, Betty Clements, and Joan Dahman. Also attending were Karen Engdahl, Judy Hedrick, Debbie Linton, Sheila Murray, Nancy Tymosko, and Ginny Sturm.

Delegates from seventeen colleges and universities listened to noted speakers Father Shaun McCarthy, M.S.S.T., and Father Warren Reich, M.S.S.T. Their respective talks on "Responsibility of the Catholic Student in the Secular Campus Community," and "Population Explosion" were received with assimilation and enthusiasm by the students.

At the close of the seminar new regional officers were elected. Chosen to be Vice-President were Ginny Sturm, a senior at Longwood.

The Catholic students of Longwood invite all interested persons to attend their Monday night theology course, held in Dr. Schlegel's classroom. The 7 o'clock class is taught by Father Carl Reikowsky, chaplain of the Longwood Newman Club.

To substantiate his first proposition, Dr. Simonini displayed a color spectrum of what English speakers consider six different colors. A Liberian dialect, however, allows its users to see only two different colors, having names for only two colors. The language of botany, too, classifies all the colors of nature into two groups.

A culture names the items on which it places most emphasis. We have one word for the white stuff that covers the Rotunda lawn each winter: "snow." But in the life of the Eskimo, snow assumes a much greater significance, and three different words for snow reflect this cultural interest in it. There are separate words to indicate snow which is in the air, on the ground, and the kind of which igloos are constructed.

On language obviously of an agricultural society, has named two hundred nine different kinds of potatoes. The Australian Aborigines exhibit the many kinship terms often found in exotic languages; they have a single word for the kinship which we would have to explain as "your father's mother's brother's son." It is not surprising that our own technologically centered society should have given "nails" numerous names and descriptions.

Dr. Simonini pointed out, too, morphological proof of his proposal that language controls thought. While English and Indo-European derived languages are concerned with time and possess many past tenses, the Hopi Indian dialect, having no past tenses, makes it impossible for an Indian to think in terms of time. Small wonder that he would adjust poorly when drafted into the Army.

The Legislative Board, highly pleased with its first venture in utilizing faculty members' special interests to broaden Longwood's horizons, looks forward to its November Faculty Fireside.

UNC To Host English Meet October 26

Five members of the Longwood College English Department will attend the meeting of the College English Association of North Carolina and Virginia on October 26.

They will meet at the University of North Carolina to exchange ideas and discuss the latest developments in teaching English.

English instructors from Longwood who will be going are Dr. Rinaldo C. Simonini, Jr., Dr. Sprague, Dr. Dorothy Schlegel, and Mr. White.

Dr. Simonini, who is a past president of the association, will give a talk during the morning program on "Structural Linguistics: Its Aims, Methods, and Accomplishments."

FIRESIDE CHAT

Speaking on how language influences our lives, Dr. Rinaldo Simonini, Chairman of English Department, presents two propositions to that effect during first Faculty Fireside, sponsored by Student Government.

LC Literary Delegates Attend New York Meet

The Associated Collegiate Press Convention met in New York this year. Longwood sent four delegates to the convention. From the "Colonnade" Barbara Poland, the editor, went. Gina Williams represented the "Virginian." From the "Rotunda" went Donna Humphlett, the editor-in-chief, and Nancy Morrow, the desk editor.

The purpose of the ACP Convention is to instruct editors and other staff members of collegiate publications how to better their yearbooks, newspapers and literary magazines. Series of meetings were held in the various rooms of the Hotel New Yorker. These meetings were of interest to specific editors. There were also short courses including the basic newspaper course and the advanced yearbook course. These meetings were conducted by experienced journalists, journalism professors, and other experts in the fields of layout, photography, and special fields.

The convention was held in the Hotel New Yorker. It commenced with a speech which dealt with serious thoughts about journalism as a career. The concluding banquet, held Saturday in the Grand Ballroom, was the time of announcement of the awards. The "Colonnade" was awarded a first class standing.

The convention offered an opportunity for students with similar problems to get together to discuss their individual solutions. Often suggestions from representatives of other college and universities were helpful.

The wedding festivities last for three days — usually Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. The bride must have a house fully furnished when she is first married. Diedre commented that, although these customs seemed strange, they resulted in very few divorces.

Discovers Movie Difference
Attending movies there is a little different too, as Diedre discovered. The movie is like a drive-in, except there are seats for those who are attending. Girls cannot go alone. They must go with their brothers, parents, or other male relatives. In addition, the male escort or escorts always sit in such a manner that no other male may sit by any of the girls.

"I really enjoyed traveling over there but, really there's no place like the U. S.," Diedre exclaimed. "We take too many things for granted here. One lesson I did learn was to appreciate what I have."

'Rotunda' Reporter Attends Rights Talk

By Pat Wallace

William vanden Houvel, special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, presented a civil rights lecture, centered around the free school system to the students of Hampden-Sydney College and interested townspeople last week. Mr. vanden Houvel has been largely responsible for the development of the Free School here in Prince Edward. When the federal government decided to look into the situation, he was sent to conduct a detailed study on the educational problems of the area. "Last summer I was not treated as a Yankee intruder," said Mr. vanden Houvel, "but neither was I invited to run for a local office."

Mr. vanden Houvel gave credit for the success of the Free School system to the cooperation of the townspeople, the state government, and the federal government. The Free School is being financed by corporations, foundations, and private donations — money has been coming in from all over the country and through the N.E.A. teachers throughout the United States pledged to send in $1.00 each for its continued support.

No Secret Formula

Deciding that there is no secret formula for a solution to the problems facing the Prince Edward area, Mr. vanden Houvel feels that "good will and cooperation among the peoples of the county will better answer the questions and problems that are now forced on the courts."

Acknowledging the right of a parent to send his children to private schools, vanden Houvel asks, "Can't we exercise this right without destroying the public school system?" Noting that Virginia is a land rich in history, he expressed the hope that a compromise can be brought about in 1963 that reflects the ideas of compromises used in the past.

"The great changes that have occurred in the nation are not the result of interference by the federal government or of decisions of the Supreme Court—they are the changes of growth, industrialization, increasing wealth, and international power," says Mr. vanden Houvel.

"The only equality this nation or any other nation can offer the Negro is the equality of opportunity. We cannot exempt him from work and there are loads he must carry. We can only give the opportunity to aspire to their ambitions and desires." Mr. vanden Houvel also feels that "a society where men have no check upon their freedom will soon produce one where very few will have any freedom."

In closing, Mr. vanden Houvel urged everyone to keep open the channels of communication and be informed of the personal concerns of the President and the Attorney General that initiated the negotiations and discussion which resulted in the Prince Edward Free School System. He also related to us the Attorney General's gratification that assistance at the federal level was welcomed and helpful.

Other speakers in the series of lectures on civil rights will be Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss and James Jackson Kilpatrick.

Stringfellow Expands Ideas To Episcopalians

By Linda Deming

The weekend of October 11-12th the annual fall conference of the Virginia Canterbury Association was held at Roslyn Estate in Richmond.

About sixty delegates attended from such colleges as Mary Washington, Hampton Institute, Shenandoah, University of Virginia, St. Paul's, Old Dominion, William and Mary, Hampden-Sydney and Longwood. Those from the Hampden-Sydney Longwood Canterbury were Carolyn Mohler, Claudia Pryse, Linda Deming, Bob Swann, and Shack McSwain.

The purpose of the convention was to stimulate critical thinking. This was done by the speaker, William Stringfellow, a layman who is an amateur theologian, and an author of several provocative books. During the informal conference - discussion period, Mr. Stringfellow talked on some of the topics of his latest book which will be published during Lent by Seabury Press.

Among his many philosophies was one concerning the 6th Commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." Mr. Stringfellow feels that gossip and slander are just as killing as a knife in the back. He also brought to attention the concept that at the same instant that life begins, so does death. One statement that summed up Mr. Stringfellow's philosophy occurred when he spoke of the Last Judgment. He said, "I'm looking forward to the day of Judgment; it will be a riot. . . I expect to enjoy it. I expect that some of those things referred to by society as evil may not be. . . I especially can't wait to hear about some of the bishops."

A report and group discussion of the topics treated at the convention will be talked over at the next Canterbury meeting. This will be held at the Episcopal Parish House at 5:45, October 30.

From The Board

The Legislative Board thanks Dr. Simonini and those who attended the first "Faculty Firesides" program in the Cyprus Room Thursday. A special thanks also is extended to the members of the National Mason Society who have initiated the nightly "Daily Dope" program which presents the world news of the day. Both programs will be continued.

Dr. Barron's first class in Parliamentary Procedure was held Wednesday at 5 o'clock in the English Department of West Wing. All presidents, parliamentarians, and other interested members of college organizations are invited to attend the next meeting same time, same place.

Members of the board are investigating the possibility of installing a milk and change machine in the main building of the college. Such requests have been made by members of the student body.

The proposed new election time for major-minor elections, explained in last week's column, have been passed by the Legislative Board pending the approval of the YWCA and Athletic Association.

Board Adds New Election Procedures

The Legislative Board of Student Government has added a new election procedure to its by-laws. A change in the procedure has been advocated for some time.

This change will enable the Education Department to locate Student Government officers in schools more suited to what the student wishes to teach.

Student Government wishes for all students to read the following procedure carefully. There will be a meeting of the student body on Thursday to present the case procedure of the Judicial Board and also this new election procedure. If there are any questions about the procedures, they may be asked in the meeting.

There will be an election committee set up.

A. The purpose of the Election Committee will be to schedule and oversee certain specified elections.

B. The Election Committee must function under the following restrictions:

1. The Election Committee will consist of a Chairman and Vice Chairman to be elected by the Legislative Board and one (1) representative from each class to be elected by the class. These elections must be completed before November 15.

2. The Election Committee will post the time and place of the elections fifteen (15) days before the elections.

3. The Election Committee will supervise the elections to see that the following procedures and restrictions are maintained:

- a. Any person meeting the qualifications for an elective office may become a candidate for the same by filing a petition of nomination, supported by the signatures of 10 per cent of the members of the student body, with the chairman of the Election Committee one week or more before the election.

- b. No student may sign more than three (3) petitions for each office.

- c. No candidate, or any of her supporters, may expend any money in support of her candidacy. However, at his expense, the Association will provide an appropriate and equal amount of advertising for each candidate. A picture and the qualifications of the candidate, submitted by the candidate, will be posted.

- d. The primary election for the following offices will take place the Tuesday of the second week in December. The major election for these same offices will take place on Thursday of the second week in December.

1. President of the Association
2. Chairman of the Judicial Board
3. President of House Council

4. President of the YWCA
5. President of the AA

c. The primary election for the following offices will take place the first Tuesday in January. The major election for the same offices will take place the first Thursday in January.

1. Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer of the Association
2. Vice Chairman and Secretary of the Judicial Board

3. Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer of House Council

4. Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer of the YWCA, and Freshman Counselor

5. Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer of the AA

6. May Day Chairman and Business Manager

- f. The election of class representatives to the Legislative and Judicial Boards must be completed before the ten day period of first semester.

- g. The number of candidates in major elections will be limited to two (2).

- h. In case of a tie for first or second place in the primary election, those candidates tied shall run in the major election. In case of a tie in the major election, a revote will be taken the following Monday.

- i. All newly elected officers and representatives of the Association, House Council, YWCA, and AA will take office January 31st.

4. The Election Committee will prepare and distribute the petition blanks for candidate nomination.

5. The Election Committee will review all petitions of candidacy to see that they have the proper number of signatures, the proper class standing (70 semester hours before taking office to be a senior and of 45 semester hours before taking office to be a junior), and meet the requirements set up by the Activities Committee.

6. The Election Committee and the Legislative Board will count the votes and post the results of the election within 24 hours of the election.

- C. The Election Committee has the power to supervise the election procedure and report any infractions of the rules to the Legislative Board. The Legislative Board will handle these matters.

Recorder Lessons

Any student interested in learning to play the recorder (block flute) may join a small class to be taught by Dr. Joanne Curmish.

She will meet any interested students at 12:45 p.m. on Monday, November 4, in her Jarman office.

Elementary education majors are especially welcome to join this class, as this instrument is particularly applicable to classroom instruction.

French Club To Interview New Professors

There will be a meeting of the French Club, "Les Francophiles," Thursday, October 31, 1963, at 4:00 p.m. in the Games Room near the Little Auditorium.

"Les Francophiles" would like to invite students, faculty members, and everyone who would be interested in becoming a member of the club.

This week there will be an informal panel discussion to interview the new faculty members of the French Department, Dr. Russell and Mlle. Pedroletti. Questions will be asked them by French students and there will be a translator. In addition to the panel discussion French songs will be sung and refreshments will be provided.

Previously the French Club was a compulsory organization for French students. This year, however, by not making attendance compulsory the club hopes to attract only those who are willing to participate and who will be interested in the club's activities.

The sponsor of "Les Francophiles" this year is Mlle. Pedroletti. In discussing the club with her she said, "I hope this year 'Les Francophiles' will have activities which will be enjoyable for everyone interested in France, its people, and its language. The principal aim of the club would be that the students have the impression that they are in France so that they might speak French naturally. In that way the study of French will lose its artificiality."

Atkinson Reigns Over Red 'N' White Circus

ROYALTY ON PARADE

Circus Court is honored with bouquets during last Saturday night's Circus performances. Queen Betty Ann Atkinson reigned with court Billie Sue Board, Mary Lea Shoulders, and Nancy Via over Circus festivities.

Sophomores Set "Vigahrous" Pace While Seniors Play In Graveyard

Queen Betty Ann Atkinson reigned over a red and white circus with a clean sweep of first and second places by the Sophomores and Seniors, respectively.

The queen's court was Nancy Via, Junior representative; Mary Lea Shoulders from the Sophomore class, and Billie Sue Board, Freshman representative.

"Tired Town" was the setting for the sophomore skit. As a small country town, they were facing the threat of becoming flabby from just sitting around.

The town council called in a physical fitness expert from Washington, D. C., who helped them build their strength to beat neighboring Musselville in a tug-of-war.

Graveyard Scene

Seniors took to the graveyard for their performance. All the demons of the underworld with the "master" as their leader were scheming a "diabolical plot" for the world. They were determined that evil will prevail over good.

The Green and White classes had themes of "city sides" learning the pleasure of knowing their country cousins and a flower garden that has its domestic problems, by the Juniors and Freshmen, respectively.

Unheretofore were seniors Judi Hackney and Ginger Grooby, Juniors Winnie Walker and Kathy Dodge, sophomores Fran Lipford and Carl Hoge, and Freshmen Julie Glass and Nancy Piland.

After the judging, the scene moved to the Midway in the old gym. Booths were sponsored by the respective classes, the Northern Neck Club, the Granddaughters Club, YWCA, and House Council. Seniors sold cookies; Juniors, hot dogs; sophomores, Pepsi and Oranges; Freshmen, popcorn; Southern Neck, candied apples; Granddaughters, ice cream cups; YWCA, cookies; and House Council, snow cones.

Pi Gamma Mu Selects 23 Students For Group

By Barbara Mellon

The spotlight last week focused on Pi Gamma Mu, honorary social science fraternity, which chose new members. The membership requirements are eighteen hours of social science with the student's maintaining a "B" average in those courses. Also the student must not carry a grade of "F" in any other course.

Those students who have met these requirements and were chosen as new members are: Anne Meredith Cordle, Judy Davis, Barbara Ray Flinn, Roberta Lee Gunther, Sally Phelps Hall, Donna Humphlett, Ann Hutchinson, Jean Louise Leary, Linda Jane Leigh, Nancy Jean Mowrey, Pauline Leslie Pasako, Joyce Payne Powell, Betty Anne Wall, Patricia Sue Wallace, Debra Carol Watkins, Judith Bryson Gibson, Marilyn Louise Kilgore, Lynn Ellen McChitchee, Pauline Elizabeth Perrow, Mrs. Alice Janesh, Mrs. Barbara Wilsher, Joyce Ann Waldburger, and Mary McCraw Ward. Initiation will take place on Thursday. Pi Gamma Mu is striving hard not to be just another fraternity. It is trying to be a working organization, one which serves a useful purpose by creating enthusiasm. Its main purpose, of course, is to foster an interest in the social sciences, not only of members, but of the whole student body as well.

The club accomplishes this through such programs as panel discussions, debates, and speakers. Many of these meetings, which are held once every month, are open to all interested students.

Pi Gamma Mu has a number of projects planned for the coming year. In conjunction with Forum and the Nathaniel Macon Society, it is sending delegates to a model United Nations which will be conducted at Duke University in February. Although it may seem premature to mention this, preparation for this event has already begun. The delegates

Richmond Group Honors Howard In Organ Recital

A native of Atlantic City, a former student here at the Hermiton County School.

Howard, a student of organ for eight years of piano and four years of organ instruction. She is organist at Farmville Methodist Church.

Howard is a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, national fraternity for women; Kappa Delta Pi, a national honor society of education; and now is again a member of Zeta Tau Alpha sorority.

Spirit Or Spite

Whenever class spirit is at a peak, or whenever Longwood girls just feel like singing, they gather in the Rotunda. Each class and each color has spirited songs which are sung with great enthusiasm. And learning to sing these songs has for many years been one of the ways by which each one of us has felt that she has become a part of Longwood.

Usually, each group politely waits its turn to sing, and allows the other classes to have their turns to show their class spirit. Recently, however, there have been several ostentatious displays of rudeness during the sings in the Rotunda. The various classes have interrupted one another's songs and have drowned out the songs of their competitors. Such behavior is not in keeping with the tradition of the Rotunda sings.

Interrupting one another's songs does not add to class spirit, nor does it win Circus skits, or add points toward the Color Cup; it only displays our lack of consideration for others.

If we allow all the classes to have their turns at singing, we can show our spirit and our consideration for our competitors at the same time. It is this consideration for one another that overshadows both the spirit of Red and White and Green and White, and adds to the spirit of Blue and White.

A Challenge

The concluding paragraph of G. M. Morant's United Nations booklet, The Significance of Racial Differences, contains two sentences which can be a challenge to us who are the future of our State, our region, our nation, and our world. Dr. Morant says, "Variety among populations would be a boon to humanity if all had good opportunities to develop their potentialities."

We must accept that challenge and take it one step further. We must see that those who have the opportunity to develop their potentialities have the incentive to take advantage of their opportunities.

All of us are aware that there is a heavy weight on the negro. Unlike us who can climb toward our goals unimpeded once we have set them, the negro must carry the weight of his color, and that weight is like a bag of rocks. It is often that bag of rocks that discourages the negro.

None of us knows what it is to carry the weight of color, and we will never know. However, we do know that we are responsible for some of the rocks in the negro's bag. And we know that we do not want the weight of those rocks on our backs.

We can not say to the negro, "Let me carry your burden for you." We can, however, destroy the rocks that cause some of the weight. We can destroy the rock of our own ignorance of the significance of race, the rock of prejudice, and the rocks of fear and hatred. It will take time to destroy those rocks, but if we are willing to destroy those for which we are responsible, the negro will be given an incentive to destroy the ones for which he is responsible. The two races must work together to diminish the weight of color.

Ignorance and fear can be overcome only through education. Therefore, we can begin our part in the search for solutions to the racial problem by reading books and magazine articles on the real problems the two races now face.

Next, we must realize that as individuals we can accomplish little; therefore, the students interested in the racial problems we face should form a committee the goal of which would be to study the many sides of the problems and to look for possible solutions.

The question: In there an organization on campus that is willing to sponsor such a committee?

Letter To The Editor

Writer Supports Nonconformity

This letter is directed to a minority group — The Longwood "Egghed".

I represent the Longwood majority. I look, dress, and talk as do most of the other students here. My shoes are Westerns and my head scarf is minute. I know when, where, and how to speak, to listen, and to commit myself. I shall be the denmother, the cookie baker, and the well adjusted classroom teacher of tomorrow. My family will love and approve of me and I shall be happy.

But you, you are different. Let us thank heaven that you are different. My type will sustain civilization — yours will further it. To posterity I shall leave more posterity (reared, as was I, with middle-class morality).

You must bequest more.

At this moment, I hope you are somewhere thinking the deep thoughts, dreaming the unusual dream, and hoping the "impossible" hope. I pray you are not "well-rounded" . . . in the sense that you are dulled by conformity.

Dear Egghed, do not wither under the blasts of our demands upon you. Though we hoot you, though we smile condescendingly at your "un-iv" attire — please, do not conform to us. Dream your dreams, build your fantasies, and do the "impossible" — for whom? For me, and for my children's children, of course. Don't allow us to persuade you to conform and thereby cheat the world of the strange little 20th century woman who reouted history.

Sophomore's Journey To Japan Proves Interesting, Colorful

By Judi Hackney

Artistic, colorful, friendly, happy, and eager are the words Carees Hazelrigs uses to describe Japan. Of all the places Longwood students went this summer, Carees' Japanese stay was probably one of the most unique.

As a member of an Army family she went to Japan by boat from San Francisco soon after the end of school. Her father is a hospital administrator and head of the laboratory for the Far East where the causes and cures of diseases are researched for use at a later time. The Hazelrigs family began their three-year stay there this summer. They also have two teen-age sons.

The American section where they live in duplex houses is no on the army post but backed up to the Japanese settlement of Sagahara. Tokyo is a 40-minute train ride or two-hour car trip away. On the extremely bad roads, cars are allowed a maximum speed of thirty-seven miles per hour. The train, which is actually an elevated railway, travels at about one hundred miles per hour.

Ride Bikes, Scooters Many Japanese people ride bicycles and motor scooters. On a bicycle, they heap many things, and Carees says the load they can carry is unbelievable. Few people have cars because gas is forty-five cents a gallon.

Carees spent most of her time shopping and sight-seeing. She tells about having two kinds of money: the MPC type used on the base and the Japanese money which she describes as "flimsy, sorta like play money." She says that that money seems to get away just as fast as ours does, however. She bought china rice bowls and bamboo stationery. For $1.35 and a magazine picture of the style, Carees got a hair cut, shampoo, and a massage with no English involved. The massage is a bonus that goes along with all beauty and barber shop work.

Massage Cattle The Japanese even massage their cattle! The meals bought there are very tender and delicious because of this. The countryside is covered with beautiful fields planted in designs. The vegetables are larger and more colorful than ours, but the Americans are not allowed to buy them. Consumption of these vegetables will poison our systems because they were grown with human-waste fertilizer.

Baseball is a favorite sport of Japan. The business men take baseballs to work in briefcases so they can play at lunch time. Carees recalls a day when she passed a field at 6 a.m. and there were eight ball games going on.

Remove Shoes At the temples, the visitors remove their shoes and try to get their feet into the extremely small slippers provided. Carees doesn't know when the people go to the temples because they wear every day and the children go to school five and a half days.

The typical Japanese name is what we would imagine: open,

Circus Chaos Reigns Offstage If Not On

The excitement of the Big Top is over and the Red and Green competition has died down — now is the time to look back on Circus '63 and laugh about the little backstage crises.

Working lights for Circus presented quite a few difficulties for Bobbie Rice. On the first night of mass rehearsal the area around the light board was so congested that the only way to change the readings and still have room for herself was to ride the handles up and down. And then there was the red gel for "Prince Mallevolence" that someone kept stepping through.

Did anyone notice the abundance of green ties on the "city men" in the Junior skit? It seems that "Charlie-Hop" has a preference for green ties.

The green and whites suffered two casualties during Circus. Dixie Grant fell up (?) the stairs on the side of Jarman while running back and forth between the auditorium and the classes to report on the performances — five stitches in the line of duty.

The other casualty — well, it seems the Junior class was to have a surprise guest in their skit who was residing in the rabbit cage over in Stevens' Hall. The night before Circus the hall broke loose, leaving the room in disorder, and has not been seen since. Saturday morning found members of the class cleaning up the residue. It has been suggested that the class sell this residue to local farmers to pay for the lost pig.

The flowers for the Freshman class Circus court representative barely arrived on time — they had even begun making plans to pick some "flowers" off the stage for her.

The Seniors almost lost their star when Betty Ann Atkinson nearly strangled on her cape Friday night. The Sophomores had difficulties keeping their train together — it arrived at the station one car at a time.

Did anyone notice the lack of "hunder in the Senior skit Saturday night? It seems that Jar-man's "Dennis the Menace," Mr. Willey's son, Pete, bumped into Ann Persak just as she was about to play the thunder sound tape.

Circus ended with a last gust of spirit on Sunday night when a mass "rumble" was waged between the red and whites and green and whites.

Staff Adds Hall, Duke Graduate in U.S. History

By Janet Lacy

These days in the newly renovated Education Building is a smiling young history professor. He is Mr. L. Marshall Hall, Jr., who teaches American history and the history of western civilization.

Mr. Hall graduated from Cradock High School in Portsmouth after which he went to Duke University where he received his A. B. Degree. Returning to Duke after four years in the Navy Mr. Hall obtained his Master's Degree in 1956, while at Duke he met his wife, Janet.

Mr. Hall spent the next two years in Uluka, New York where he taught in a high school.

In 1958 Mr. Hall went back to the University of North Carolina to work on his Ph. D. degree. He is "within a stone's throw" of obtaining this. His major field of study has been United States history particularly the nineteenth century.

Mr. Hall likes, among many things, folk music. He has a guitar on which he says he can "pick out a few things." He also finds old paintings and picture taking to be enjoyable.

He likes all sports especially basketball and football.

Mr. Hall stated that he would rather teach in college, but feels that there is a real need in our high schools for competent and energetic teachers.

Mr. Hall further stated that he felt the girls of Longwood were courteous and attentive. He likes the general attitude of the majority of Longwood girls. He went on to say that everyone has been extremely helpful since he and his wife arrived in Farmville.

Coming Play Boasts 3 Freshmen As 'Major Barbara' Moves Ahead

By Marla Siegfried

Rehearsals for the coming play, Major Barbara, are well underway. The play is to be presented by Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights, November 7, 8, and 9 at 8:00 p.m.

This play of three acts takes place in George Bernard Shaw's time in England with a typical enigmatic Shawian moral.

Freshmen in Cast An interesting aspect of the cast is the number of talented freshmen in starring parts.

Freshmen from Longwood are Pat Holmes, of Alexandria, portraying Lady Britomart, mother of the Undershaft family; Karolyne McAdoo, of Norfolk, as Barbara Undershaft, headstrong eldest daughter who finds a temporary happiness as a Major in the Salvation Army; and Mildred Gwatney, of Richmond, the charming Mrs. Baines, general of the Salvation Army who can get donations even from Bodger, the whiskey distiller. All three girls have brought some dramatic experience with them from their prospective high schools.

Longwood Ties Richmond Club 1-1

A 1-1 score was the result of the Longwood-Richmond Club hockey game held Saturday, November 26 at 1:30. Later in the afternoon another game was played which also ended in a 1-1 tie. This game was between the second varsity team and the alumnae of Longwood.

Struggle for ball takes place between Longwood and Richmond Club during Saturday's hockey game. The touch-and-go game ended in a 1-1 tie.

In the Richmond Club game, both goals were made in the first half. The first score came for the Richmond Club and was soon followed by a Longwood goal. No score was made in the second half.

This was a fast-moving game. Said Peg Waldo, "We were very much pleased with the game."

The Richmond Club is made up of outstanding women in the hockey world. Among them was Barbara Gray Martin who was graduated from Longwood last year.

Those playing for the Longwood varsity team were Chris Longstreet, Phyllis Collins, Barbara Rastand, Carolyn Cline, Lurline Robertson, Peg Waldo, Nancy Morefield, Gay Taylor, Judy Wilson, Earline Lang and Cheryl Howe.

Hedena Hall, Ginny Morton, Becky White, Melody Saunders, Connie Gallahan, Nevis Born, Sarah Jane Lynch, Phyllis Lasley, Dianne Davis, Jayne Eddy, Pat Lyndane, Peggy Gill and Carrie Lee Wilson were those who played on the second varsity team.

Winnie Ekoff, "Lefty" Snyder, Lundy Hatch, Delo Dove Eanes, Diana Childress, Marge Nocher, Paye Ripley, Gale Cunningham, Willie Taylor, Susan Coe, Sandra Phlegar Waisand, Betty Lou Dunn, Mrs. Bobbitt and Mrs. Jackson were the members of the alumnae team.

These two hockey games were a part of the annual Circus celebration.

Taylor Participates In Sports, Other Phases Of LC Activities

By Marcela Siegrid

A physical education major from Gretna, Virginia, senior Gaynelle Taylor has been active in all phases of sports life her four years at Longwood. Gay is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Taylor and has one brother and three sisters.

During her first two years, she played varsity basketball and for the past three years has played varsity hockey, being manager of the team her sophomore year. Along with varsity sports, Gay has participated in all class sports such as tennis, volleyball, and softball.

A member of Orchesis, Gay was secretary of the club her sophomore year and vice president her junior year. Gay has been on the Athletic Association Council three years, secretary last year and president this year.

Gay is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority which she was Activities chairman last year. She is also a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, honorary leadership fraternity, for which she was registration chairman for the recent AKG convention, and was AKG publicity chairman for Circus.

Gay has participated in Circus, class productions and May Day in various capacities. Last year, as a delegate for the AA Council, she attended the ARFCW (American Recreation Federation of College Women) Convention at Woman's College in Greensboro, North Carolina.

Gay plans to teach Physical Education in the secondary schools next year and is student teaching the second block this year at Appomattox High School. For all her busy activities, Gay still has time for many friends, who say of her, "The only thing she's ever done wrong is kicking a turtle."

most study organization manuals of the United Nations, and also must study the problems and issues confronting France, Pakistan, and South Africa, one of which Longwood will represent.

Another useful project of Pi Gamma Mu is the formation of archives for Longwood. It will be more or less a history of the college through such things as pictures, letters, and documents. Members of the club have been busy collecting this material from various sources. It is evident that Pi Gamma Mu is stopping short of nothing of becoming one of the most active organizations on campus.

HOW SMALL CAN YOU GET?

Today let us address ourselves to a question that has long rocked and rolled the academic world: Is a student better off at a small college than at a large college?

To answer this question it is necessary first to define terms. What, exactly, do we mean by a small college? Well, sir, some say that in order to be called truly small, a college should have an enrollment of not more than four students.

I surely have no quarrel with this statement; a four-student college must unequivocally be called small. Indeed, I would even call it intime if I knew what intime meant. But I submit there is such a thing as being too small. Take, for instance, a recent unfortunate event at Crimscott A and M.

Crimscott A and M, situated in a pleasant valley nestled between Philadelphia and Salt Lake City, was founded by

A. and M. Crimscott, two brothers who left Ireland in 1825 to escape the potato famine of 1841. As a result of their foresight, the Crimscott brothers never went without potatoes for one single day of their lives—and mighty grateful they were! One night, full of gratitude after a wholesome meal of French fries, cottage fries, hash browns, and au gratin, they decided to show their appreciation to the bountiful land of potatoes by endowing a college. But their generosity contained one stipulation: the enrollment of the college must never exceed four students. They felt that only by keeping the school this small could each student be assured of the personalized attention, the camaraderie, the esprit, that is all too often lacking in larger institutions of higher learning.

Well sir, things went along swimmingly until one Saturday a few years ago. On this day Crimscott had a football game scheduled against Minnesota, its traditional rival. Football, as you can well imagine, was something of a problem at Crimscott, what with only four undergraduates in the entire college. It was easy enough to muster a backfield, but to find a good line—or even a bad line—baffled some of the most resourceful coaching minds in the nation.

Well sir, on the morning of the big game against Minnesota, its traditional rival, a capricious fate dealt Crimscott a cruel blow—in fact, four cruel blows. Sigafos, the quarterback, woke up that morning with an impetuous incision. Richards, the slotback, flunked his taxiometry exam and was declared ineligible. Beerboom-Tree, the wingback-tailback, got his necktie caught in his espresso machine. Yuld, the fullback, was stolen by gypsies.

Consequently, none of the Crimscott team showed up at the football game, and Minnesota, its traditional rival, was able to score almost at will. Crimscott was so cross after this humiliating defeat that they immediately broke off football relations with Minnesota, its traditional rival. This later became known as the Sisco-Vanetti Case.

So you can see how only four students might be too meagre an enrollment. The number that I personally favor is twenty. Why? You ask. Because, I reply, when you have twenty students and one of them opens a pack of Marlboro Cigarettes, there are enough to go around for everybody, and no one has to be deprived of Marlboro's flavor, of Marlboro's filter, of Marlboro's staunch and steadfast companionship, and as a result you have a student body that is brimming with sweet content and amity and harmony and concord and togetherness and soft pack and Flip-Top box.

© 1963 Max Shulman

There are twenty fine cigarettes in every pack of Marlboro's, and there are millions of packs of Marlboro's in every one of the fifty states of the Union. We, the makers of Marlboro and the sponsors of this column, hope you will try our wares soon.

Sportin' Chance

By Linda Turner

The director asked "Ready?" and then gave the order to begin "play!" On guard and attack! After one of the players had raised his hand, the director called "Halt," for a touch had landed. Conceptions about fencing have become distorted due to the matches between flying Sir Galahads on chandeliers, and their opponents leaping from stairways to tables. Fencing had only seemed to be a game of "You sir kiss me, and I will strike you," so I sat in amazement at my first formal matches.

Two staunch figures paraded before us then to themselves, saluted, and stood at attention. They were distinctive figures dressed in white costumes which appeared to be canvas, and which fully covered the neck, trunk, arms and legs of their bodies. A canvas bib was attached to some type of umpire's masks to completely smother their heads. The announcer explained that this match would be foil, and the one to follow be epee, or sabre. Foil must be the skinny weapon with something stuck on the end of the blade.

The attacker executed his attack; the defender parried. Straight lunge, disengage, cutover, and fleche-back to an guard position. Their reflexes were so spontaneous that each had difficulty in tagging the other, but the taller of the fighters called that he had "Hit," and they ceased the stumping, jumping maneuvers for a rest. The man who had hit pointed to the spot of contact. "Ready," again, the combatants walked to the center of the long narrow mat, crossed foils, and reacted to the director's call of "play." Backs arched stiff, the steps resembling Russian dancers began and the rapid pace didn't cease until one had been disarmed. Rules of honor caused the other to stop lunging.

That's fencing. The observer has to be quick to see what the attackers are doing. Now reading about this sport will make literature more alive for the amateur can imagine vividly the scenes in novels, drama and his story.

Players, Jongleurs Present Shaw Play

AKG Chooses Eight In Tapping Ceremony

Alpha Kappa Gamma tapped five seniors and three juniors for membership in this national honorary fraternity for leadership. The tapping was held in Jarman Auditorium on October 29.

Among the seniors tapped were Dana Brewer, Jean Käfer, Lynn Osteen, Peggy Waldo, and Peggy Whittaker.

The three juniors are Sandra Craig, Lurlene Robertson, and Milly Woodward.

History - Spanish Major

Dana Brewer, a senior history and Spanish major from Alexandria, has been very active in the Student Government Association. She served as secretary of the Association and was chairman of the Evaluations Committee her junior year. This year, Dana is chairman of the Activities Committee.

Her junior year, Dana was President of the Student Education Association and secretary of the Spanish Club. As a sophomore, she served as class representative to the screening board.

Kappa is presently secretary of Kappa Delta Pi and is also a member of Pi Gamma Mu.

Class Secretary

Another newly tapped senior is Jean Käfer, a business major from Arlington. Jean has been secretary of her class during her sophomore, junior, and senior years.

A member of Pi Omega Pi, Jean is also President of Phi Beta Lambda. This year she is serving as treasurer of Kappa Delta Pi. Jean also holds membership in both the Student Education Association and the Honors Council.

Jean is in the Phi Mu social sorority. She was treasurer last year and is presently serving as assistant treasurer.

President of House Council

A senior French and history major from Norfolk, Lynn Osteen is currently serving as President of House Council.

During her junior year, Lynn was secretary of House Council, after being a member for a year as sophomore dorm President. Last year, Lynn was a junior representative on May Court. She is also a member of Kappa Delta social sorority.

Active In Sports

Peggy Waldo is another member of AKG. She is a physical education major from Churchland.

Among her activities are membership on the A.A. Council and present Vice-president of the Athletic Association. Peggy is also the vice-president of the EPO Club. In the Monogram Club, and a member of the varsity hockey team. For her participation in sports, Peggy was awarded a white blazer this year. Because of her shown interest in dramatics, Peggy has been elected to membership in both the Longwood Players and Alpha Psi Omega.

This year Peggy is serving as second Vice-president of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority. Throughout her four years Peggy Whittaker, an art major from Roanoke, has been very active in school affairs.

Dorm President

Her freshman year Peggy was President of her dormitory and a member of House Council. She was co-chairman of the freshman production and a member of the Cushman Club. Peggy was also transportation chairman of May Day that year.

During her sophomore year Peggy was elected as her class representative to Student Government and has been re-elected both her junior and senior years.

Peggy is a member of the Longwood Players and has been Art Editor of the Virginian for the past two years.

As a member of the Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority, Peggy has served as culture chairman, historian, and is presently chairman of the standards committee.

Active In 4

Sandra Craig, an Elementary major from Roanoke, is one of the junior members. Her main area of participation has been in the Young Women's Christian Association. She was a member of the Freshman Commission and served as the freshman counselor her sophomore year. This year Sandra is secretary of the Y. W. C. A.

Sandra has served on the screening board and is past secretary of the Wesley Foundation. This year she is President of Wesley. She was picked as an orchid-to-you her freshman year. For her outstanding leadership, Sandra was chosen by Alpha Kappa Gamma as ringmaster for the 1963 Circus.

Yearbook Editor

Lurlene Robertson, another of the juniors tapped by AKG, is a physical education major from Chatham. She is the Editor of the 1964 Virginian, and was assistant editor last year. For her work in journalism she was selected for membership in Pi Delta Epsilon.

She has been on the A. A. Council for the past years. Lurlene was varsity basketball manager her sophomore year and this year is managing the varsity archery team.

Lurlene was on the varsity

LIGHT THE LIGHTS!

Rehearsals are underway for Longwood Players' production of Major Barbara by George Bernard Shaw. Performances are scheduled for Thursday Friday, and Saturday, November 7, 8, & 9, at 8 p. m.

Schlegel Speech Given In Geneva Appears As Book

In the recently published Transactions of the First International Congress on the Enlightenment there appears a speech, "Didnot as the Transmitter of Shaftesbury's Romanticism," by Dr. Dorothy B. Schlegel, a Longwood College faculty member.

Mrs. Schlegel was a delegate to the International Congress this summer and gave the speech in July in Geneva, Switzerland.

Her essay appears in the fourth volume and it appears in the same series with such well-known international scholars as Hugh Trevor-Roper, Julia Huxley, and Norman Torrey. Mrs. Schlegel received her copies of the book, which was edited by Theodore Besterman, last week.

Convocation

Convocation will be held Thursday, November 21, at 1 p.m.

The speaker will be Dr. Francis Lankford, President of Longwood College. The Rev. J. Hoge Smith will give the invocation and the benediction. There will be an academic procession.

Brown Attends Deans' Meeting In Washington

Dr. Frances R. Brown, Assistant Dean of Women, recently attended the Regional Deans' Meeting. This annual fall meeting was on October 25 and 26 at the Catholic University, Washington, D. C.

The regional group of deans is a part of the National Association of Deans and Counselors and includes deans from women's schools in Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, and the District of Columbia.

There were fifty members at the Washington conference to discuss "the educational problem raised by automation." An address was given at the Friday night banquet meeting by the dean of the Engineering School of the Catholic University, Dr. Brown says that he spoke further about "the impact upon the junior or community college level of what he fears will be even greater unemployment in that age group as automation increases."

One of his examples was the man-operated elevator vs. the automatic or self-service elevator and he pointed out how automation has almost completely destroyed this particular job area for the less-skilled worker. On Saturday there was further discussion on this speech, and a business meeting was held. The next regional meeting of deans will be at Foxcroft School in Middleburg, Virginia.

Fall Play, Major Barbara Begins Nov. 7 In Jarman

The Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs under the direction of Mr. David Wiley will present George Bernard Shaw's "Major Barbara" in Jarman Hall. The play will run November 7-9. Performances will start each evening at 8 p.m.

Major Barbara: And where are your works?

Andrew Undershaft: At Portvale St. Andrews. Ask anybody in Europe!

Moxy, salvation and social mores are recurrent themes throughout George Bernard Shaw's comedy, Major Barbara, which will be presented in Jarman Auditorium tomorrow, Friday and Saturday evenings. Curtain time is 8:00 p.m. The play is jointly presented by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs.

Major Barbara takes place in 1905 in England and centers around the unusual Undershaft family. Andrew, the father, played by John Marshall Jones, is a millionaire maker of guns and cannons who is separated from his wife, Lady Britomart, played by Pat Holmes, a narrow-minded mother who tries to rule her family with a strong hand.

The children are Stephen played by Joe Whitted, the son who finds it difficult to like or approve of his father; Barbara played by Carolyn McAdool; oldest daughter who finds temporary happiness as a headstrong major in the Salvation Army; and Sarah, played by Pat Newton, a typical high society English girl.

Fiances of the daughters are Adolphus Cusins, played by Dave Muggleworth, a professor of Greek engaged to Barbara; and Charles Lomas, played by Bill McGuffee, an unsophisticated young sophisticate engaged to Sarah.

Also, almost a part of the family, in terms of years of service, is Morrison, the pained old butler, played by Dave Coulson. Bolton, the conscientious foreman of the cannon foundry, is played by Blackford Nolan.

Characters from the West Ham Salvation Army Shelter are Runny Mitchens, played by Maria Konovloff; Snobby Price, played by Dave Relyea; Peter Shirley, played by Dave Coulson; and the hot-headed bullfish Bill Walker, played by Ed Baker.

Helping Major Barbara in her attempts to save souls are Mrs. Baines, the charming general, played by Mildred Gwaltney; and Jenny Hill, a young and ardent Salvation Army worker, played by Mary Lynn Lander. Admission for students of both colleges is free.

Forum Features Bailey In Speech On 'Adolescence'

Stephen K. Bailey, Professor of Political Science and Dean of Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Syracuse University, visited the Longwood campus this afternoon.

The program was sponsored by the Longwood Forum.

The topic of Dean Bailey's lecture was "American Maturity and Adolescent." The lecture was held in the "little auditorium" Wednesday at 3 p.m.

Dean Bailey, a native of Newton, Massachusetts, holds five degrees, A. B. A. from Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio; a B. A. and an M. A. from Oxford University; a M. A. and Ph. D. from Harvard University. He was a Rhodes Scholar from 1937 to 1939.

He served on the faculty of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut, professor of Public Affairs at Princeton before he joined the Maxwell faculty in 1959 as Professor of Political Science. In 1961, he became its fourth dean.

Dr. Bailey has published many articles and speeches about legislation, politics and more recently, ethics in government and related subjects. His books include "Congress Makes A Law" (1950), "Congress at Work" (1952), with Howard Samuel, and "Government in America" (1957), with Howard Samuel & Sidney Baldwin).

TAPPING HELD

Newly tapped members of Alpha Kappa Gamma are Milly Woodward, Peggy Waldo, Sandra Craig, Lurlene

Robertson, Lynne Osteen, Dana Brewer, Peggy Whittaker.

A Campaign Proposal

Last week the Legislative Board introduced a new election procedure. However, only the nominating procedure is new; the method of electing major and minor officers remains the same as the old system. The Legislative Board has not provided a way by which the candidates for office can be introduced to the Student Body.

The by-laws governing campaigning state: "... At its expense, the Association will provide an appropriate and equal amount of advertising for each candidate. A picture and qualifications of the candidate, submitted by the candidate, will be posted."

Pictures and posters do not speak; therefore, the Student Body does not have a chance to hear the candidates for office before elections. If names and faces and even lists of qualifications are the only ways by which the Student Body can evaluate candidates, elections on this campus will continue to prove more favorable to the persons who have had their faces and "personalities" in the limelight. Such a system is unfavorable to those who have not had considerable publicity before elections.

In past years, the Student Body was small and candidates needed no formal introduction, because "everybody knew everybody" on campus. Such is not the case today. Therefore, candidates for the major and minor offices should be presented to the Student Body in a pre-election assembly.

In this pre-election assembly, each of the five major organizations would have an allotted amount of time on stage. During this time, each of the candidates would be introduced to the Student Body by the chairman of the Elections Committee. After the introduction of each candidate, the floor would be open to questions from the Student Body. Thus, the Student Body would be able to discover how the candidates feel about certain issues before elections, and the candidate would prove whether or not she is qualified for the office she seeks.

The Student Body should be allowed the right to vote on the basis of a candidate's qualifications and her attitudes and opinions toward campus issues. A system such as the one outlined above can guarantee that right.

An Answer

The preceding editorial comments are exemplary of the gratifying student interest the Legislative Board has noted since the introduction of its new election procedure in assembly last Tuesday. A number of concerned students attended — and contributed much to — our open board meeting last Thursday night.

The insight of these non-board members was both refreshing and revealing; they geared our thinking toward heretofore unforeseen difficulties in the December election proposal, and it was largely their arguments that led to our referring the December election idea to a year of more intensive planning and school-wide preparation. Abandonment of the original idea, I feel I should stress to you who must initiate the perfected plan next year, would be unwise. Equally unwise would be our own hasty baptism of the plan. Perhaps our "brainchild" needs to grow a year yet! Your continued suggestions and interest will assure her eventual success.

The Rotunda editor's suggested assembly for introduction and questioning of candidates meets a need unmet by previous election methods or our new proposals. No one could deny the value of hearing the candidates views on the positions they may hold, and I am certain the voters will be afforded this opportunity in the spring.

Indeed, the concern and ideas of those cited in this article are making our legislative efforts this year a joy.

Letters To Editor

Editorial Policy Provokes Letters

Students Charge Editor's Policy Of Brainwashing

Dear Editor:

I have been concerned since my return to school this fall with the college newspaper, the Rotunda, and its editorial policy. I am aware of the various types of editorial policies, but I feel that they can not be as freely applied in the situation at Longwood College as it might be if it were a privately owned — profit making concern.

As I understand it, the two major editorial policies are 1. the editor is solely responsible to herself and may publish anything she wishes or 2. the editor is responsible to her readers also and should see that all viewpoints are presented. Since the students at Longwood do not have the choice of buying another newspaper and officially rejecting the present editorial policy, I feel the editor must allow the other viewpoints to be presented (although she need not necessarily omit her own).

As far as the present editorials are concerned — why are subjects of concern to the student body often neglected every week for the same "ole theme" by the editor? Why must the editor continually use the editorial column to "tear" and "brainwash" the readers the viewpoint? And why do the other members of the editorial staff not have a chance to express their views? Have they ever been asked?

I think that the editor should seriously consider these points when she prepares the editorials each week. This is a school newspaper and as many viewpoints of the students as possible should be presented. A school newspaper is no place for a one-man crusade — all people are not represented.

Editor's Note:

There is no means by which Longwood students can criticize the editorials which appear on this page — through "letters to the editor." However, until this issue no one has taken the time to write letters in protest to the editorials which the editor has written concerning "the situation."

Members of the editorial staff are allowed to write editorials. However, they have until this issue failed to take advantage of their way of protesting.

The editor of the "Rotunda" this year — and in past years — can represent the opinions of only one person — herself. Varying opinions can be presented only if the readers realize their responsibility to write letters when they disagree with the editor.

Student Defends Editorial Policy, Uses Webster's

Dear Editor:

Upon many occasions I have found myself involved in discussions, debates, and arguments concerning the editorial policy and the nature of the editorials of the Rotunda. I have learned through these discussions that the issue is not always clear to the students. Is it a question of policy, or is it a question of subject? I maintain that the issue is whether or not the editor has the right to present her viewpoint through the editorials, and not whether the students agree or disagree with that point of view.

Many students seem to become confused in their arguments. They say such things as, "She shouldn't present one point of view," or "She's too biased."

I would like to present the following definition of an editorial as quoted from Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary: "... an article in a newspaper or magazine giving the editor's views ..." That alone provides justification of the editor's use of the editorial space.

As far as the students' agreement or disagreement with the editor is concerned, the editorials are the editor's medium of expression. The "Letter to the Editor" are the students' medium of expression. The editor has merely been exercising her rights as an editor. It is up to the students to exercise their rights.

Both columns carry the same weight in the Rotunda, and both are read as widely. Therefore, I would like to say that arguing with the members of the Rotunda staff will not accomplish anything, but writing will.

Student Letter Takes To Issue Editorial Policy

Dear Editor:

In an article which recently appeared in the Rotunda, as well as a few other larger newspapers, there was a generalization concerning the student body which I feel was falsely ascribed. First of all, may I point out that very few students which attend Longwood are residents of Prince Edward County. Therefore, since we are not residents, as such, it is not up to us to assume such responsibilities. We pay no taxes here; we do not participate in local elections, nor do we play a part in community activities. We are just students under the rules of Longwood College. I don't feel it is up to us to solve the racial problems of this locality. This, in my estimation, should be left up to the people who are residents of the county.

Secondly, in the October 30th issue of the News Dispatch the Rotunda's administration was rather underhandedly criticized for their objection to the editor's article of October 16. Personally, I have no idea what the article was about; however, I feel our administration is composed of competent persons able to make decisions in or (the student body's) best interest. As I was told by a member of the faculty, the reason the editor's article was banned was because of its content.

It seems this article would have caused hard feelings between the student body and the "townspeople." Perhaps this reason seems rather mild, but the people in Farmville have been mighty good to Longwood students. Many have been taken into the homes and hearts of these people and have made friends which will last a lifetime. Do a minority of people at Longwood have the right to destroy these relationships? This can surely happen if we as outsiders try to tell these people how to clean their houses.

In summary, the Rotunda is supposed to be a campus newspaper, not a nationwide publication of answers to the racial problems of Prince Edward County. I don't think one member of the student body has the right to jeopardize the whole student body of Longwood just because she feels so strongly about a particular situation. There are a number of us who feel rather strongly about seeing our administration, our names, and our Longwood plastered all over the newspapers of the U. S. A. I don't feel that a campus newspaper should be anyone's soap box.

Former Student, Coulter, Urges Policy Support

Editor's Note: Sharon Coulter is a '63 graduate. She is now attending the graduate school of Rutgers University.

Dear Editor:

Sunday, October 27, 1963, the New York Times featured an article Longwood College. The article dealt with a blank column which recently appeared on the editorial page of the Rotunda.

It seems to me indeed unusual that Longwood has achieved national publicity for something as foreign to American beliefs as censorship of the press. Supposedly, as Americans, we enjoy the heritage established in 1734, when John Peter Zenger was acquitted of charges of libel for having published articles which criticized the governor of New York. No one from "outside" can insure that you enjoy this "freedom of the press."

You must act to protect it yourself. There is another freedom that is being abused in the county where you live for nine months a year. I dare not suggest the concrete steps you as students might take to protect that freedom, or this letter might not see publication. But I urge you to act and to support the efforts of others who are trying to alleviate tensions. To protect this freedom, others will intervene. This outside pressure will create more problems for the community and for the South.

Do what you are able to do as your conscience must direct. The next time Longwood appears in the New York Times, let it be for reasons that will reflect the pride and faith I have in Longwood and her students. Sharon Coulter

Professor Gives Word Wranglers Working Advice

Dear Editor:

In the past several issues I have observed letters and comments employing the words "egg head" and "intellectual," in contexts favorable or unfavorable. Depending on the point of view of the writer or commentator. With all due respect to the same, may I venture to suggest that both the pro's and con's seem to be generating more heat than light about what is, essentially, a quite simple matter?

"Egg head" is a word of opprobrium popularized by an individual who, whatever his virtues may have been or are, was not noted for his intellectual acumen. It is a coined word, like "finalize" and "accessories", and, like them, rather fuzzy and silly. What precisely does "egg head" mean? That the possessor of one cracker easily and all spills over? Observation surely bears out the reverse — the person of trained intelligence to whom that term is customarily applied is, usually, less likely to "crack" or liable to be "cracked" than one who is not.

As for "intellectual" — this has come to be one of those general purpose words, apparently meaning all things to all men. Like the Mother Hubbard, it covers everything and touches nothing. Perhaps the simplest thing to say is that the real intellectual has no need to carry a flag proclaiming himself as such, any more than a lady or gentleman has. It might be noted further that the words "intellectual" and "lady" or "gentleman" are not mutually exclusive. In fact, such a flag would probably be a most definite indication that its carrier was not an intellectual at all!

Would it not be better if all semantic wrangling, and got down to business that presumably brought them to Longwood in the first place? That of using whatever degree of intellect they each possess to its fullest possible extent, and beyond, if possible? The consequence of such an action might make the gods of Olympus tremble, but the faculty here is fully equal to that challenge and brave enough to accept it.

Most sincerely,
Rosemary Sprague

Student Lauds Basic Honesty Of Money Finder

Dear Editor:

In this time of questioned morals and honor, I would like to share with your readers an experience I had on this campus last semester.

It happened at the time when we were supposed to pay our $10 room reservations fee. My parents had sent the money to me with some extra or personal expenses. In all, it was a $20 bill. I put this bill in my sweater pocket with the intent of going by the business office after my class. When that class was over, I reached in my pocket — no $20 bill! I was horrified!

I retraced my steps in a vain search for my money. Nothing! I was practically in tears.

I went to the Home Office with a small hope that some very nice, honest person might have found it and turned it in. There had been nothing turned in, so, in despair, I returned to my room.

That night at supper an announcement was made: "If anyone has lost a large sum of money, please go by the home office."

I gulped down the rest of my supper and rushed to the Home Office. "Yes, a $20 bill was turned in this afternoon. You may pick up the money in the Dean's Office in the morning."

Longwood College is full of people, however, thanks to one person, my faith in the whole school, and my faith in all humanity was restored.

Since I was very young, I have looked for the good in people. In the past three or four years, it seems that looking for the bad has been the approach to take. I like the way of youth better. Don't you?

White Applauds Study Challenge

Dear Editor:

I would like to applaud the suggestion made last week in The Rotunda that an organization on the Longwood campus sponsor a student committee whose purpose would be to study the race problem and "to look for possible solutions." I like to think the White youth of America will be as bold in helping to answer the problem as the Negro youth has been in helping to state it. Here in this committee is an opportunity for boldness to begin.

Sincerely,
Ellington White

Two Students Ask For Changes In Sunday Meal

Dear Editor:

Time and again our friends have returned from the Sunday night buffet bedraggled and haggard from their laze over their food. However, we two, being extreme cowards in some respects, have never subjected ourselves to these rigors. Having been forewarned upon our arrival in September to wear our track shoes to Sunday night buffet, we at least some of us, knowledge that such a meal exists.

Can't something be done about this situation? Perhaps prizes could be awarded to the fastest runners. At least some of our braver students will return to their rooms with the knowledge of a victory well deserved.

Unlimited Cuts?

The many pro's and con's of an unlimited cut system have been thrown around verbally for quite awhile. A cut system has been in effect for some years; however, the students have not been given the opportunity to prove whether or not they could adjust to "unlimited."

Of course the final action will have to come from the Administration, but it is up to the students to make the initial inquiries.

It seems as though, being considered young women in a non-compulsory institute of learning, there should not even be a question of unlimited cuts. One is here to get an education. If she doesn't want one, she can quit or flunk out. Perhaps this is oversimplifying the matter, but in essence that is what it means.

Another point — an unlimited cut system could possibly weed out those who are here for the social life only. The ones who want a well-balanced education do not have to be told when to come to class and when not to.

Anyone who really wants a college education is mature enough to make the most of all opportunities. A cut system is insignificant to learning; it is high-schoolish and almost an insult to a real student.

The abolishment of the cut system would also serve to build up the teaching power. A professor would have the continual challenge of putting forth his best in order to hold the students' interest and to increase their thirst for knowledge.

Where is the wrong in this? And why should it not at least merit a chance?

—Maria Grant

Note: Any member of the Administration, faculty or student body who has a suggestion or comment on the possibility of unlimited cuts, please write them down and drop them in the Rotunda box by the old wires.

Farmville Boasts History Of Famous Landmarks

By Barbara Melton

When we think of historical places in Virginia, our minds travel to all the well-known places—Williamsburg, Yorktown and Jamestown. However, we should consider that one hundred years ago the attention of the country was focused upon Farmville and the surrounding areas.

Of course we realize that by going back a hundred years we find ourselves at the end of the War Between the States. Then, Farmville found itself the hub of activity of both the Union and Confederate armies.

"Lee Slept Here"

One of the many interesting places in this town of which we may not be aware is the Prince Edward Hotel. In the days of the War Between the States, however, it was called the Randolph House.

Both Generals Grant and Lee used the facilities of the hotel. Lee spent the night of April 6, 1865 there, and Grant stayed in the same room the next night, the 7th. While at the Randolph House, Grant wrote a note to Lee in which he suggested surrender. Lee sent back a reply in which he expressed his desire to avoid any further bloodshed. However, Lee disagreed with Grant as to the circumstances of his position. Nevertheless, Lee surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox on April 9.

The hotel stands at the corner of Main and Second Streets, and in 1907 it was completely renovated by George M. Serrill. Then, too, it was formally opened as the Prince Edward Hotel.

Today restoration procedures are being initiated to preserve this historical place. Of course the Prince Edward Hotel tells only part of Farmville's Civil War story. Still standing at the end of town near the Norfolk and Western Railroad is one of the remaining wards of a convalescent hospital for Confederate soldiers, then called the Confederate General Hospital. It had a capacity of from 1,200 to 1,500 beds for convalescents and cases of chronic diseases.

One of the results of Reconstruction was the move of the Prince Edward Courthouse to Farmville from Worham in January of 1872.

Another structure which has its roots in years gone by is the house at 114 High Street. Although sections have been added, the original portion is recorded as having been built in November 1858. It is believed to be one of the oldest houses in

YEARS AGO

Hotel. On the right may be seen the sign of Brown, the Photographer. To the far right is the steeple of the Farmville Baptist church, which was located about 25 feet from the street line. Notice the pedestrians, soil streets, no sidewalks, and the trees on Main street.

Farmville, though information as to the builder and exact date of construction is not available.

Depicts Southern "Image"

Located one and one-half miles from Farmville is the old Scott-Greene house. The exact date of the construction of this house is not known, but it was named for two Revolutionary leaders — Generals Nathaniel Greene and Winfield Scott. Nevertheless, it is known that it was built some time before 1834. At one time it was a prosperous southern plantation, but today after years of weathering plus the effects of the Civil War, one would never think it was once the epitome of the Southern Image.

There are many other historical landmarks in or near Farmville, such as the Debtor's Prison located in Worham. Also the Presbyterian Church has a long history.

Farmville had its moments of glory during the days of the War Between the States and Reconstruction. However, it was fortunate in that it escaped the devastation that many other towns experienced.

Lockwood Joins English Faculty, Teaches Speech, Drama Courses

By Barbara Melton

The coming of the new college year also saw the coming of many new professors to the Longwood faculty. Among these is Dr. Patton Lockwood. He has a very interesting background which began with his birth in mysterious India. There he lived twelve of his first nineteen years. During the course of his education, he has traveled over many lands. He attended high school in a city called Kodakinal, and spent his first year of college at Ceylon. After that he came to the United States where he received his B.A. degree in speech from Oberlin College in Ohio. He was the first person to receive a degree in speech from that college.

Not long after that Dr. Lockwood earned his M.A. in education from the University of Virginia with an emphasis on

The following two years found the future Dr. Lockwood serving

DR. LOCKWOOD

Uncle Sam in the Army's signal corps. However, he returned to college when his tour of duty was over, and went to Michigan State where he earned his doctorate.

Dr. Lockwood began his teaching career at the University of Connecticut, where for three years he taught speech and dramatics.

Although he is very interested in the theatre, the only major role he ever played was that of "Feste" in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night while attending the University of Virginia. Oddly enough, the director of this play was our own Mr. David Wiley.

This year at Longwood Dr. Lockwood is teaching speech and makes the following comment concerning his classes. "Most of my classes are freshmen. But I am tremendously impressed by their curiosity and eagerness to ask questions — spirit!"

In addition to his teaching, he is in charge of the radio studio. He arranges the programs for the radio show, "Longwood Speaks," which represents the cultural and intellectual interests of the students.

He is also interested in continuing the program, "Listening at Longwood," which is on the air Tuesdays at 4:00 p.m. Any organization which is interested in presenting a program may contact Dr. Lockwood at his office.

Longwood Wins; Ties In Lynchburg Games

Longwood played Lynchburg in two hockey games on November 1. The first game ended in a 2-2 tie. Longwood raced to a 3-0 victory in the second game.

One play took place in the first game that rarely happens. The Lynchburg goalie fell down on the ball to prevent the Longwood forwards from rushing into the goal. A penalty bully then occurred; this is the first penalty bully that has taken place this year.

A tea was held in the Athletic Association Council room for the members of the Lynchburg team.

Slater Trophy Presents Aims In Class Games

The Slater System has established a sportsmanship trophy which has been placed in the dining hall. It was begun last year under the supervision of Mr. Clark, the former manager of the dining hall.

The Slater System decided to let the Athletic Association award it to the class that showed the best sportsmanship during class sports competition.

Sportsmanship is judged by a representative from each class and faculty members from the physical education department. The class is chosen by secret ballot of the Athletic Association.

It is hoped that a trophy such as this would put a different emphasis on class sports. Instead of just trying to win points, as for the Color Cup, this would put more emphasis on the means by which these points are won.

It is awarded at the Slater System picnic at the end of the year.

Waldo Plays Active Role In Sports; Contributes To Many Organizations

Peggy Waldo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Waldo, is a physical education major from Chesapeake. During her four years at Longwood, she has participated in varsity basketball and hockey. She was the varsity hockey manager in her junior year, and has participated in such class sports as basketball, hockey, tennis, volleyball, and archery. Peggy has also taken an active part in the water shows. This year, she is also a team member of the Tidewater Hockey Club.

A member of Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority, Peggy is the second vice president. She has just recently been tapped into Alpha Kappa Gamma, a national honorary fraternity. Peggy is also a member of Alpha Phi Omega and the Longwood Players where she has been a crew chief for the last two years.

ties, and perhaps the most interesting, is his direction of the plays, "Ghosts" by Ibsen and "She Stoops to Conquer" by Goldsmith.

We are glad to welcome Dr. Lockwood to the campus, and with such varied interests, he should prove a valuable addition to Longwood.

Peggy is vice president of the H2O Club and the Athletic Association. She was in charge of the Athletic Association's demonstration and has been on the Athletic Association Council for three years. She is also a member of the Monogram Club.

PEGGY WALDO

Peggy has had an active interest in the production of Circus as well as the May Day festivities. Her main interests include all sports, horseback riding, cooking and sewing, and making things with her hands. She plans to teach Physical and Health Education in the secondary schools next year and is planning to student teach in Richmond during the second block. Upon graduating, she plans to teach, with the hopes of eventually getting her Master's Degree.

Playing Areas Aid Congestion Of PE Classes

A new hockey field has been laid out to alleviate some of the congestion on the regular playing field caused by the increase in freshman physical education classes.

This field, although considerably smaller than a standard playing field, is used primarily for the girls to learn the skills of hockey and their playing positions.

Physical education classes will alternate using the new field one week and the regular field the next.

Miss Heintz, head of the physical education department, stated, "The new field will help control our crowded condition and it will give everyone a chance to play on a regular lined field."

Bermuda Trips Now Presented In Two Classes

Garber's Travel Service of Brookline, Massachusetts, is the largest travel agency in New England and one of the largest along the entire Eastern Seaboard. Garber's has four offices in the Greater Boston area and a sales office in New York. In the field of college travel, Garber's is the largest and has the most extensive program. Being in the Boston area, which is more or less the college capital, it has for many years, operated college trips.

Two trips will be offered to college students to Bermuda this year. The difference is determined by the type of room accommodations. One is an economy package for students wanting the most inexpensive trip possible to Bermuda, and this has rooms in guest houses rather than in a large hotel. This is for eight days and seven nights. Also included in the economy trip is a round-trip transfer service which takes you from the airport to the place where the students will be staying. The guest houses where the students will be staying are the famous college guest houses of Bermuda: Montgomery Cottages, Glendon Guest House, Grandview Coral Cottages, and similar types. They are all located in the South Shore of Bermuda right near the Elbow Beach area, which is the traditional College Week headquarters. This trip sells complete for $109.00 including all tips, at these guest houses.

The deluxe trip is exactly the same, but the accommodations are in the large hotels of Bermuda. They consist of the hotel room for the same eight days and seven nights plus two meals each day. This trip sells complete for $270.00, including all tips. The hotels here that are being used are the Carlton Beach, Castle Harbour, Harmony Hall, Belmont Manor, and similar types.

All of the trips also include the full College Week activities; that is, a beach barbecue, a full luncheon, beach parties at Elbow Beach, entertainment nights, and a cruise around the island of Bermuda.

In addition to the price of all of these trips, each student in Bermuda this year will be required to put down a $10.00 charge for breakage prior to his arrival. If, upon checking out of the hotel or guest house, there has been no damage to his or her room, the $10.00 will be refunded on the day of check-out. A $25.00 deposit is required by each student taking this trip, and the trip must be fully paid for forty-five days prior to departure. Within the forty-five day period, there will be no refunds, though substitutions will be accepted; that is, the student may find himself a substitute on the trip if he must cancel. Up to the forty-five day period, no money will be promptly refunded. Every student should be made aware of this so that no problems arise.

School Songs To Be Theme In Song Contest

Each year the Athletic Association sponsors a song contest in which each class is asked to participate. The purpose of this contest is to create school and class spirit especially for the athletic activities here on campus.

This year the songs are to be school songs. Each song will be judged by a faculty committee on originality, appropriateness of lyrics, class participation and enthusiasm and spirit. The winner of the contest will receive a cash prize.

The freshmen will sing their song first and sing it through twice. Sophomores, juniors, and seniors follow in the same manner. While the judges are making their decision, each class, with the exception of the freshmen, will sing a song that has been sung in a previous song contest. The freshmen may sing a song of their choice. After the winning class has been announced the winning song will then be sung again.

The song contest will be held during the regularly scheduled assembly period on Tuesday, November 19.

Four copies of the lyrics of each school song must be submitted to Brenda Isel by twelve o'clock on November 15, Friday.

In addition to the copies of the lyrics, Brenda would also like to have one copy of the song from a previous contest which each class intends to sing while the judges are making their decision.

For a persistent mustard stain in a washable fabric, textile chemists in the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Research Service recommend the article in hot detergent solution for several hours — or overnight, if necessary. If stain still remains, use a bleach.

From The Board

The Legislative Board held its weekly meeting Thursday, October 31 with a special invitation extended to all students who had questions and opinions concerning the new election proceedings. As a result of the discussion at the meeting, the Board voted to consider further the new time for elections (December) with the idea of putting it into effect in the 1964-65 school year. The petition method for nominations was also discussed and accepted, and the details will be published for the student body along with the remaining election proceedings which are to be decided upon in the coming weeks.

"Faculty Firesides" will continue with its second informal meeting on November 21. The discussion will be led by Mr. Chavot from the art department and will center around contemporary art. Further details will be announced.

By petition, a request has been made concerning the day on which classes are to begin after the Christmas holidays. The petition asked that instead of ending classes on December 17 and beginning them on January 2, thus making it necessary to return on January 1, classes end on December 18 and begin on January 3. This matter will be considered and discussed with Dr. Lankford on his return in November.

A report was given by Dana Brewer, chairman of the Activities Committee, concerning proposal changes for grade requirements of major and minor officers. The proposed changes are for the five major officers a requirement of 1.5 (2.5 on the 4.0 system); for the minor officers 1.2 (2.2); for the heads of all other organizations listed in the handbook, 1.3 (2.3); and for other organization officers 0.1 (2.1) average. The Activities Committee also urges all those who have not yet turned in their activities sheets to do so immediately.

Reports Of VEA Convention Of Interest To Future Teachers

By Pat Wallace

As students of a college whose primary concern is the education of future teachers, the recommendations put forth at the Richmond convention of the Virginia Education Association should be a matter of real interest to us.

Two very surprising and alarming facts were brought out in this meeting of over 12,000 white public school educators: 1) that Virginia spends less than other Southern states on public education and 2) that Virginia has the lowest percentage of degree holding teachers in the South.

In an effort to remedy this situation the members of the convention set forth the following recommendations:

1. The state should give financial assistance for the expansion of summer school programs.

2. Consideration should be given to including kindergarten in the public schools and this plan should be financed by state and local funds.

3. There is a need to set up a good basic salary schedule before there is a detailed consideration of teacher merit pay. The present pay scale ranges from $3,400 to $4,900 in 10 steps. The proposed scale would range from $4,200 to $9,200 in 20 steps.

4. There should be a difference in the salaries for those teachers who hold a Master's degree. The proposed scale would be from $4,700 to $9,700 in 20 steps.

5. There should be more state sponsored in-service training sources for teachers.

6. The pupil-teacher ratio should be lowered from the present 30 to 1 to a more manageable 27 to 1 in the elementary schools. In the high schools the ratio should be lowered from the present 22 to 1 to 20 to 1.

7. Physical education instructors should be trained and certified in driver training.

8. The uses of taxes for education should be reviewed and there should be a more equal distribution of these funds.

9. There should be continued support of community colleges to offer more students a chance for at least two additional years of study.

10. There should be a study of school drop-outs — showing the reasons and suggested remedial action — in each school division.

Twice during the convention there was a proposal that the Virginia Education Association endorse the effort to remove the state poll tax. It was decided, however, by a vote of 671 to 391 that the association confine itself to areas directly concerned with education.

Education is a state problem and it would seem from these reports that the problems are being met on a state level. It is our concern as soon-to-be educators to consider the proposed ideas, formulate an opinion as to their merit, and to work toward achieving the changes we deem necessary in our present educational system.

No, it's not any major event — it's only Longwood students waiting to get their fill after mad rush to dining hall for Sunday night supper.

Senior Does Independent Research

By HELEN W. MASON
(Farmville Herald Reporter)

All females are not afraid of mice. Some even have them for pets and one who is attending Longwood College is doing research on them.

"I saw a demonstration on the chicken embryo by a University of Virginia student some years ago. That led to my decision to do independent research on the embryo and breeding of white mice," Sandra Waugh said in explaining her interest. "I had always been fond of animals and had raised white mice."

Research in Future

She hopes to make research her profession and is learning its techniques here at the college. Her primary concern just now is with the developing mouse and she hopes to prove that the component parts of the blood plasma change as to importance in relation to the changing stages of the mouse's development.

In other words, (a) does the number of parts (alpha, beta, gamma globulins, albumin and fibrinogen) change during growth, and, (b) does the relative proportion change?

These component parts carry the "genes," which are what we inherit from our ancestors. Up to a certain stage, the action of these component parts from the mice's plasma has the same appearance as in human plasma. Observes Genes

From observation, the Longwood senior says, it is obvious that all genes inherited do not express themselves at any one time, but at different times, in development. Sandra is trying to determine the sequence of this gene action which will give important information concerning the time of action of the gene during development. Sometimes the action in her research shows up strongly, at others it seems almost to fade away.

All this can be seen with the naked eye but she and Dr. Robert T. Brumfield, her biologist mentor at Longwood, are enthusiastic when they speak of a new electrophoretic scanner apparatus by means of which they can see the changes more clearly. This machine makes a graph of the parts as they go through the different stages.

Curiously Results?

Who knows to what a little Cupeper girl's lack of fear of mice and her love of animals may lead. Her curiosity may have put her on the track of something to eventually aid in finding the cause or causes of cancer, the cause of pre-natal malformations (remember, she is doing research on embryos), or some other ailment about which little is now known.

Sandra's reaction to mice not only gives the lie to the old picture of a screaming woman, standing on a chair, with her skirts pulled up to her knees, but is a picture of the 1963 dedicated young woman, mature, and determined to take her part in this fast-moving, scientific world.

Sandra Waugh gets some more data and looks over the records on her research with white mice in the science lab at Longwood College.

Moss Delivers Talk In Johns Auditorium

Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss, Dean of Longwood College, delivered the second Jr. Hampden-Sydney series of talks on civil rights, Thursday, October 31, at 10:30 in Johns Auditorium. The topic of Dr. Moss's talk was "A Virginian Slowly Awakens to the Theme of Color."

Early in his talk, Dr. Moss asserted that he defied the "label of foreigner or outsider" in relation to the racial stand that he has taken since 1959.

He then stated, "... Any attack upon social evils and injustices stands or falls upon the principles upon which that action is taken ... Hence I must mark out the principles upon which I have founded my fight."

Four Principles

Dr. Moss's four principles were those of his faith in public education, democracy, religion, and humaneness. In elaborating upon his faith in public education, the Dean said, "Private education can and does have its place, but only as a refinement for the relatively few who can afford it economically."

Dr. Moss maintained that the greatest of American achievements has been "the fashioning of democracy as a way of life." He said, "However, this achievement is a fatally incomplete one as long as twenty million Americans have in any way a status of second class citizenship solely on the basis of the color of their skins."

His third principle, that of religion, Dr. Moss placed in Christ's second commandment: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." As to his fourth principle, humaneness, Dr. Moss said, "However a human being may deny it in his life, however he may forget it, it still remains true that his humanity is established by the spark of divinity he was born with. I dare not fail to recognize that divine spark."

Dr. Moss presented several steps which he felt must be taken to solve the racial problems. First, he said, "... We could make a tremendous start simply by purging (Virginia's) constitution and statute books of all legislation which makes discriminatory distinction on the basis of color ... This would be the clearing ground for the ultimate solution of the problem by the development of human relationships."

Proposes Steps

Dr. Moss further advocated a State Bi-racial Commission on an official status, and representation of the two races in state government agencies on a proportionate basis "as long as the two races continue to be self-conscious as to existence and conflicting in interest." He also called for the removal of obstacles to "Negro registration and Negro exercise of the voting franchise."

The Dean said, "... When one attempts to solve problems of human relationships one should begin at home." He proposed in regard to local action, an integrated school system, a Bi-racial Commission, Negro employment opportunity improvement, Negro members on the School Board and Board of Supervisors, Negroes on the police force, and "public places open to the public."

Dr. Moss said in closing, "What we need to do is realize in the solution of our local difficulties that love, not fear; rationality, not hatred; confidence, not suspicion — they are attitudes that must be used as the controlling ones in an active deliberation about our problems. Must be used in an honest effort of constructive action."

AKG Honors Students In Biannual Assembly

Basketball and archery teams her freshman and sophomore years. This year she played volleyball, volleyball, softball, and tennis.

Active In Government

The third junior to be tapped was Milly Woodward, a biology major from Richmond.

During her freshman year, Milly was a member of the Freshman Commission, on the screening board, and on the council of the Wesley Foundation.

In her sophomore year, Milly was elected to the Legislative Board of Student Government. She served as program chairman for the Y. W. C. A. and became a member of the Synchronized Swimming Club.

This year Milly will serve as treasurer of the Legislative Board and as membership chairman of the Y. W. C. A.

Milly has been both rush and recommendations chairman for Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority.

'Who's Who' Honors Nineteen Seniors

Work Begins On Second Play, Ibsen's "Ghosts"

Rehearsals for another play to be presented by the Longwood Players and Handmen - Sydney Jouglaux began this week. "Ghosts" by Henrik Ibsen is being directed by Dr. Patton Lockwood, new assistant professor of speech and drama at Longwood this year. Rehearsals will be December 12, 13 and 14.

Starting in the female roles are: Betty Ann Atkinson, a senior from Arlington, as Mrs. Alving, and Evelyn Richter, a freshman from Virginia Beach, as Regina. From Handmen's ranks are Dave Rulyea as Engstrand, Ed Baker as Oswald Alving, and Jim Orndoff as Pastor Manders. Assisting the director is Gloria McNair with Bonnie Ramsey as Stage Manager and Patti O'Neill as Technical Director.

Wesleyans Hear Missions Speech By Dr. Lawson

Dr. Douglas Lawson, chaplain at Randolph-Macon College, was the speaker for the Wesley Foundation program Sunday, November 10. His topic was "Our Mission Today."

The first session was a lecture on the background of the mission program of the Methodist church. After supper there was another lecture about the modern mission. This was followed by questions and a panel discussion.

Dr. Lawson's main idea was that the mission program must change with the changing world. He stated that everyone is a missionary in the modern sense of the word.

Dr. Lawson was graduated from Randolph-Macon College, received his B. D. from Duke University, and received his doctorate from Drew University. He is an ordained Methodist minister.

Wygall Performs Last Duty As Acting President of College

By Pat Wallace

The assembly of November 12 was presented by the Student Education Association in connection with American Education Week. The group also presented a film on freedom in teaching in the classroom. The featured speaker, Mr. Fred

O. Wygall, discussed the theme of Education Week - Education Strengthens the Nation. Daily topics for the week have been set up. They are Monday - Learning Opportunities for All; Tuesday - Quality Teaching; Wednesday - Balanced Curriculum, Thursday - Community Resources, Friday - Financial Support, Saturday - Goals for the Future. Mr. Wygall urged the students to consider these topics both on our own and in class.

In yesterday's assembly Mr. Fred O. Wygall emphasized importance of quality in teaching as one of themes during American Education Week.

Library, Jarman Display Chinese, Persian Works

Two art exhibits are currently on campus. "Persian Miniatures," in the lobby of Jarman, and "The Tradition of Chinese Painting," in the Exhibition room of Lancaster Library, will remain on display through November 25.

"Persian Miniatures," a UNESCO exhibition, is sponsored by the American Federation of Arts. These works, entirely Iranian in character, are typical of the style that rendered new orientation to the Persian arts. This style reached fruition at the beginning of the fifteenth century and produced a succession of masterpieces for the three centuries covered by the exhibition.

For the most part, the works represented in "Persian Miniatures" were inspired by epic or romantic poems. They were created to afford visual pleasure for the princes and wealthy individuals who commissioned them. The feeling for concentrated unity of design and the treasury of motifs, or semi-pictorial symbols, which developed on the Iranian plateau, influenced the art of other eras and nations.

"The Tradition of Chinese Painting" is on loan from the Asia Society. There is a taped gallery talk available to visitors.

Nineteen Longwood seniors have been named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

Spanish-French Major

Donna is a Spanish - French major from Saratoga Springs, New York. She is a member of Kappa Delta Pi and she is the editor of the 1963 Student Handbook. Donna is a member of Phi Mu social sorority.

Betty Ann is an English major from Arlington. For the past two years, she has been co-chairman and class representative for Circus. This year she was Circus Queen. Betty Ann has participated in many of the plays produced by the Longwood Players of which she is a member. Betty Ann is currently president of Alpha Psi Omega. From Arlington is Hiram Spanish major Dana Brewer. Last year Dana was secretary of the Legislative Board of Student Government. She is a member of the Spanish Club, Wesley Foundation, and Pi Gamma Mu. Dana is also chairman of the activities committee of Student Government. Also, Dana was recently tapped into membership of Alpha Kappa Gamma.

Ringsmaster-'62

Evelyn, from Portsmouth, is majoring in elementary education and English. She was Ringsmaster for Circus in 1962. Last year Evelyn was vice-president of her class and a member of the Colonnade staff. She is currently a member of Pi Gamma Mu, Pi Delta Epsilon, and Alpha Sigma Alpha social sorority. She is also vice-president of the Legislative Board of Student Government and was chairman of Freshman Orientation. Evelyn is president of Alpha Gamma this year.

Betty Howard is a music major from Arlington. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, Sigma Alpha Iota, the Longwood Choir, and the Music Educators National Conference. She is also a member of Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority. Last year Betty was a member of the Legislative Board of Student Government.

Rotunda Editor

English major Donna Humphlett is from Petersburg. Donna has worked on the college newspaper since she began at Longwood and this year she is serving as the editor of the Rotunda. She has been a member of the assembly committee and the Colonnade staff. Donna is a member of Beoré En Thorn and Pi Delta Epsilon.

Brenda is a biology major from Portsmouth. She has served on many committees for Circus and this year was co-chairman for her class. Brenda is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority.

A business major, Jeanne Kifer is from Arlington. She is president of Phi Beta Lambda and as the editor of the Rotunda, this year and treasurer of the senior class. Jeanne is a member of Pi Omega Pi and Phi Mu social sorority. She was recently tapped into Alpha Kappa Gamma membership.

Legislative President

Mary Ann Lipford is an English major from Bassett. She is presently chairman of the legislative board of student government. Mary Ann is a member of S.E.A., the Longwood Choir, Alpha Kappa Gamma, Wesley Foundation, and Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority. Last year she was a member of Panhellenic Council, the 1963 Virginian staff, and was also secretary of the Y.

Also an English major, Charlotte is from Farmville. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, Sigma Alpha Iota, and Kappa Delta Pi. Charlotte is active in the Baptist Student Union.

Lois is a physical education major from Roanoke. She is also active in basketball. Lois is chairman of the Judicial Board of Student Government. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma and Kappa Delta Pi. Lois has been on the tennis team and is a member of the H2O Club.

From Norfolk, Judy Partee is majoring in English. She is president of the Panhellenic Council this year. She has been active in Circus and is a member of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority.

Barbara is an English major from Hamilton. She is currently editor of the Colonnade. Barbara is a member of Pi Delta Epsilon, and S.E.A.

A music major, Betty Ann is from Charlottesville. Betty Ann is president of the Y this year. She is a member of the Granddaughters Club, Alpha Kappa Gamma, Sigma Alpha Iota, and Westminster Fellowship. She is also a member of the Longwood Choir.

Lewin is an elementary English major from Richmond. She has worked on the staffs of both the Virginian and the Rotunda. Lewin is a member of S.E.A., Pi Delta Epsilon, Pi Gamma Mu, Alpha Kappa Gamma, Kappa Delta Pi, and Wesley Foundation.

Another English major is Betty Jean Russell from Portsmouth. She is presently vice-chairman of the Judicial Board of Student Government. Betty Jean was treasurer of the Y last year. She is a member of Alpha

Antidote For Reality

Editor's Note: This editorial appeared in the October 25, 1961 of issue of the Rotunda.

Once there was a kingdom in which all the citizens were given pills. These were unusual pills, for upon taking them, the citizens saw only the beautiful. All was seen as it should have been or could have been, and not as it actually was.

One day one of the citizens forgot to take his pill before going to bed. And the next morning upon rising, he saw something he had never seen before—bedbugs. At breakfast he discovered he did not like the taste or the smell of the food he was given. As the day progressed, he saw still more ugly things—children with swollen stomachs, women with hollow, ugly faces, men with a vacant look in their eyes. He saw ragged clothes and motley animals in shabby houses and guards with weapons in their hands.

He decided that the other people in the kingdom should see these things. But when he went to them with his discoveries, he found that they were incapable of understanding him, for they could not see what he could see. While resting he noticed a boy watching him, and decided to attempt to show this boy what was ugly. He walked over to the boy and told him to come with him.

They went to the man's tiny apartment and sat down. The man told the boy to look out the window at a group of underfed children who were going by, but the boy only smiled. He pointed out a man going to the boy, but no light of recognition came to the boy's vacant eyes.

In desperation, the man picked up a knife and began tearing at his own face. He screamed in pain, and pain distorted his face. The boy stood over the man's body and watched the blood gush over the floor, he listened to the diminishing moans, and studied the distorted face. When the face relaxed and the moans stopped, the boy walked out of the apartment and went back to the place where he had first seen the man. It was getting dark, so he reached in his pocket and got one of his pills and swallowed it.

Freedom Barter?

"Are you free?"

"I live in America . . . of course I'm free . . . our system of government is democratic!"

"Is it? Aren't you trading your freedom for security? Haven't your dependence on 'Big Brother' government made you forget your responsibilities?"

Is America heading toward socialism? This is a question we all need to ask ourselves. If the answer is "yes," only we, as voters, can change its direction. Today the trend is toward "Big Government." The states, like the proverbial poor relation, wait in deference for rich Uncle Sam to dole out his favors in accordance with ductility.

The distribution of power and responsibility that is set forth in the Constitution is designed to protect for the people their right to succeed, to plan for the future, to educate their children as they see fit, and to participate in their government to the fullest extent. But, dependence on the national government for these rights has led to an increasingly expanded central government and has resulted in a new era of "federalism" that could easily and quickly lead to "socialism."

We hear over and over again from the proponents of centralization that America has grown too large for the type of democracy we have known in the past. It is, however, because of this growth and diversity that we need to return to a (pure) form of democracy. We need local government to meet local needs, and national government to deal with problems that concern the states collectively.

We have also heard many times that local governments are ineffective because the people will not accept their responsibility. It is our contention that increased centralization has destroyed local initiative. It has removed the operation of government so far from the majority of the people that they are no longer able or interested in sharing in the working of government.

Many of us will be voting for the first time in next year's election. With the announcement of candidacies for office already begun, we need to start asking ourselves questions, studying the various sides of issues, and taking more interest in the state of our government now, not next September. — Pat Wallace

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

Chavatel Joins Staff As Art Consultant

By Margot Lothheim
"The situation was completely new to me and I didn't know what to expect . . . I was surprised with Longwood girls . . . the more I know them the more I am impressed with them . . . communication is very easy . . . rational in their thinking, they evaluate the good with the bad and maintain an equilibrium . . . the most well-rounded group of girls I've seen."

Such was the reaction of Mr. George Chavatel, the newest member of Longwood's art department. His official title is that of the Departmental Consultant in Education in art. In his capacity he works as a liaison man between the laboratory school and the department, helping the student teacher to prepare himself for her assignment. He also teaches two sections in basic design on the one hundred level, and two sections in art education on the three hundred level.

Attends RPI
A native of Richmond, Mr. Chavatel lived in Henrico County while he was growing up and attended the first ten grades in its public schools. He later returned to Richmond to do his undergraduate work at Richmond Professional Institute and later received his master's from the University of Georgia.

As this is his first year at Longwood, it is also his first year of teaching on the college level. He comes to Longwood from five years at Warwick Junior High School, Newport News and a year after it became Homer L. Ferguson High School. Previous to teaching Mr. Chavatel had started a career in commercial art, which was interrupted for work on stage setting.

When asked why the change from high school to college, Longwood in particular, he replied: "by moving into a higher echelon of learning, I felt that my ideals could be better understood. In a teachers college I can help mold . . . help influence and guide future teachers . . . and therefore reach more students." In answer to why Longwood, he stated that his first impression of the school was one of dignity. And that in talking to members of the faculty, administration and student body, he was met with a unique friendliness and sincerity.

Exhibits Work
As an artist, Mr. Chavatel is primarily interested in the contemporary and has exhibited graphic art throughout the state. Welded sculpture, "putting together parts to make a larger form, as opposed to direct carving where you remove parts to establish a form." is an area in which he has been very much interested for the past year. Investigation of materials, especially synthetics, and graphic art, etching, are two fields that he does work in.

Mr. Chavatel feels that a painter should work intuitively while remaining rational in his use of materials.

Butler Letter Provokes Spirited Reply By Leary

Dear Editor:

In the letter to the editor submitted by J. Butler on November 6, 1963, I have found a few points which I feel deserve consideration.

First, Miss Butler criticized the editor's statements regarding the Prince Edward school situation, because few students are residents of the county. I only wish to point out that Prince Edward's problem is not merely a county problem, but a national problem as well. Perhaps this explains the concern of the editor. After all, Longwood is primarily a school which prepares teachers, and any event in American education would naturally be of concern to Longwood students.

Second, Miss Butler asserts that the townspeople will resent the student body as a whole for the Rotunda editorials. I prefer to place more faith in the people of Farmville. It has been my experience that their goodness and warmth is of a such quality that they would not judge the majority by the writings of the minority.

Ten Students Chosen At Random Vary In Answers To Query

By Maria Grant
Should a college newspaper list its news sources to only those which are pertinent to the campus?

This question was put to 10 students picked at random. It is surprising to note the variety of answers from such a small number of people.

Narrowing the answers to just whether or not the student felt the college paper should stick to those which were pertinent in stating more or less that the paper should encompass other news than that of the particular college and it said it should not. But the answers were given in terms of 'yes' and 'no' and not of any broad statements.

Diving deeper into the why and whereof of the answers reveals the variety of reasons. One student said the paper should stick to college news because we have city papers which bring us the 'outside information.' The contradiction another saw was ought to know about other things besides campus life—things which we can discuss as college students. "A paper doesn't have much impact if its news is limited."

Speaking of editorials alone, one person stated that the editor's personal opinion should be just that; it creates a controversy in some cases, which is stimulating; it serves its purpose. On the other hand someone mentioned the fact that outsiders might feel that what is in the editorial is the whole college's opinion, and not just the feelings of a few.

One student of few words flatly stated that college students are not qualified to talk on politics. And one of many words felt the paper has to go outside the confines of the campus because we have a tendency to be closed off from the rest of the world. The college paper provides an idea of what's going on, but should not be swamped with too many articles dealing with outside the college events.

Two extremes in answers went like this: the girl said the school paper should not go off the campus for news except for events that affect the school directly—we get a daily newspaper at our door every morning. The other view, we don't get much time to really read the daily paper, so it's a good idea that the college paper present some of the outstanding news.

Another woman of few words simply said that except for integration, it can cover anything it. (Continued on Page 4)

'Critic's Choice'

Atkinson Reviews

"Major Barbara"

By Betty Ann Atkinson
Most professional theatrical groups find Bernard Shaw's Major Barbara extremely difficult to produce successfully. Amateur, being faced with the added burden of a complex plot of technique, find it almost impossible to surmount the obstacle of the lengthy discussion which is a major characteristic of the play.

The dining display of eloquence in this biting social satire, unless handled by individuals who by direction or by sheer acting ability are able to convey at least half of the subtleties of Shaw's wit, had a tendency to become a bit tedious.

The Longwood Players in conjunction with the Hampden-Sydney Jorgensen undertook the treacherous task of producing Major Barbara last weekend. The tragic-comedy at best, a creditably sincere effort on the part of everyone concerned, was sadly miscast, the result being that the show had a rather difficult time "getting off the ground," so to speak. In spite of its many faults, however, the play turned out a number of individual performances which were the best to date.

Ed Baker, as the bully "Bill Walker" gave a performance of such magnificence that in some moments it came quite close to brilliance. His character development was superb; and his delivery, though a bit too dramatic in the women-beating scene, after the final touching episode with "Barbara" stopped the show. If Mr. Baker continues to develop as fast as he has in the past three years, he will be one of our very great importance; indeed, one of the very finest.

Maria Konovloff as the frigid "Rummy Mitchev" turned out an enthralling performance which heightened and sustained the very character of the play. David Kelya, who time and again has turned out excellent performances, outdid himself in this one as "Ooddy Prince." David Colson in the dual role of "Morrison," the pained, befuddled old butler and "Peter Shirley" was simply hilarious. This young man seems to possess great possibilities. We are looking forward to seeing more of him.

Mary Lynn Lander's gift is a subtle and gentle, her aesthetic appeal is growing with each role. Here she played a small part ("Jenny Hill")—a young, naive Salvation Army worker; but her refined and poised acting made "Jenny" a distinctive character.

These individuals, good as they are, unfortunately were cast in the smallest roles. Most of them were concentrated in one scene—the Salvation Army shelter in Act II. The result was that this act was the most consistently power-packed and artfully played in the whole play.

The three major roles were acted with considerable inconsistency on the part of each actor. "Major Barbara," played by Freshman Carolyn McAdoo, failed to come alive until her final soliloquy. Once there, however, Miss McAdoo displayed a small but definite gift for playing starchy-eyed young girls who have just experienced something that gives life some semblance of meaning.

Paul Smith, as the soliloquy, "Major Barbara," appeared to be a young man which were well memorized, incidentally, but which held relatively little meaning for her. Under the soliloquy, "Major Barbara," appeared to be a young man which were well memorized, incidentally, but which held relatively little meaning for her.

"Adelphus Cusins" played by David Mugglesworth, was quite charming. Mr. Mugglesworth, an interesting and hard-core actor, turned out a performance which was at one moment alive and full of inspiring possibilities and the next weak and ineffectual. Fortunately, the weak moments were few in number; but they were there, and they were disturbing and distracting from an aesthetic point of view. However, Mr. Mugglesworth did have his moments of excellence and his performance shows possibilities of good things to come.

"Sir Andrew Undershaft," played by John Marshall Jones, around whom the whole play ultimately revolves is a character of considerable difficulty to effectively portray. Mr. Jones, an actor of impressive ability, managed to surmount most of the difficulties of the role. His weak moments were the result, I am sure, of a more lack of technical knowledge, for on several occasions he overplayed his considerable speeches, elements which would have been more effective if they had been underplayed and underplayed elements which would have been more effective had they been overplayed. Nevertheless, Mr. Jones has a definite power about him and a large range of vocal gymnastics coupled with the intelligence to aim at a delivery of high stature to such an arduous role.

Seven Make Tidewater Team LC Wins, Ties In Hockey Games

Fifteen people went to the Tidewater Tournament at William and Mary on Friday and Saturday, November 8 and 9.

Longwood played and defeated Westhampton on Friday with a score of 2-1. In the first half, Westhampton scored the first goal, and then Longwood scored. The second LC goal was made during the second half. The game was largely defensive.

Those who went to William and Mary were: Lurline Robertson, Carolyn Cline, Barbara Ragland, Phyllis Collins, Chris Longstreet, Peg Waldo, Nancy Moorefield, Gay Taylor, Judy Wilson, Earlene Lang, Cherramy Howe, Jayne Eddy, Pat Lydane, Melody Saunders, and Phyllis Lasley.

Orchesis Elects New Officers To Head Club

Officers of Orchesis this year are Joyce Walburger, president; Glendon Merchant, vice-president; Donna Kafka, secretary; and Joanne Woods, treasurer. Joanne is also an honorary member of Orchesis.

Committee heads are Helena Hall, in charge of the bulletin board, and Caryl Hogg, in charge of costumes.

Serving as apprentices this year are Betty Ann Atkinson, Anne Cordle, Carol Doak, Ann Evans, Charlene Garner, Diana Graham, Donna Kafka, Joyce Neal, Phyllis Lasley, Judy Squires, and Shelby Webb.

Jackie Walker will serve as acting president during the second block while the president and vice-president are student teaching.

Longwood played the Colonels on Saturday and tied them 1-1. The Colonels made their first goal in the first half and LC made its score in the second half. This was a hard-fought game that was largely defensive.

Seven Longwood girls made the Tidewater team which will play in Richmond November 16

Howe, goalie.

In the exhibition game, Tidewater I vs. Tidewater II, the score was 3-0 in favor of the first team.

The Southeastern Tournament will be held on November 16 and 17 in Richmond. The teams will be from Washington, Blue Ridge, Baltimore, and Tidewater.

Longstreet Active In Swimming And Other Phases Of Athletics

Christine "Chris" Longstreet, a senior, has been chosen as the spotlight feature this week. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Bruce Longstreet from Colonial Heights, Virginia.

Chris is now student teaching physical education and health at Tuckahoe Junior High School.

In high school she held the state record in the 200 and 400 meter free style. She was also student director of the band.

During her freshman and sophomore years at Longwood, she was treasurer of the band; she participated in the water pageant; she was a member of the A. A. Council as archery manager and then participated as a member of the H2O Club.

As a junior, Chris was elected vice-president of the H2O Club. She was also the co-chairman of both the swim meet and of the Christmas water pageant. Again as archery manager, she held the A. A. councilship.

Senior at last, Chris led the H2O Club as its president. She was chairman of the fall water pageant. The Monogram Club counted Chris among its selected members and the A. A. Council established her among its ex-officio members.

In the fall of her senior year, she received a blue sash as an award for her outstanding sportsmanship and participation in all class sports for her college years.

Her hobbies, as you would guess, are synchronized swimming, music of all types and

Class Of '64 Undeclared In Class Hockey Games

By Sandra Jamison

No losses and only two ties—this is the record that has been set by the class of 1964 in the area of class hockey. Their final game was played last week. This game, played with the class of 1965, ended in a 1-1 tie. Of the two tied games the first was with the sister class of 1962, and the second was with the green and white class of 1965.

This was one of the closest and most well-played games in the history of the present senior class. Both teams were full of the spirit to win, yet both displayed the highest form of sportsmanship.

The green and whites made the first score and went wild with enthusiasm. The Red and Whites were then boosted and went on to tie the game.

The wearing of red sashes has been a four-year tradition with the senior class. They have always gone out to win with a spirit of good sportsmanship.

Four Year Team

Seniors Comment

When asked about some interesting games, Sandy Waugh said, "Any games with the class of '65 have been most interesting."

Norma Eudy, who was student teaching and couldn't fill her usual position on the hockey team stated, "I was sorry that I wasn't on the team and that I couldn't be here."

Beverly Pruitt, another student teacher said, "I'm proud of us."

Tennis Tourney Ends In Victory And 'Red' Points

The semi-final tennis matches were played two weeks ago. The first game, which was to be played between Rena Weld and Betsy Sledge, was forfeited by Betsy. The second game was played between Kay Moore and Connie Gallahan. Kay topped Connie to be one of the few freshmen to ever get into the finals.

In the finals, Rena Weld, who is a senior, beat Kay Moore. The points gained from the tennis match will go to the red and whites.

SHOULD AULD ACQUAINTANCE AND JAZZ LIKE THAT

I am now an elderly gentleman, full of years and aches, but my thoughts keep ever turning to my undergraduate days. This is called "arrested development."

But I cannot stop the healing tide of nostalgia that washes over me as I recall those golden campus days, those ivy-covered buildings (actually, at my college, there was only ivy on bricks), those pulse-tingling lectures on John Dryden and Cotton

Mather, the many friends I made, the many deans I bit. I know some of you are already dreading the day when you graduate and lose touch with all your merry classmates. It is my pleasant task today to assure you that it need not be so; all you have to do is join the Alumni Association and every year you will receive a bright, new, chatty bulletin, chock-full of tidings about your old buddies.

Oh, what a red-letter day it is at my house, the day the Alumni Bulletin arrives! I cancel all my engagements, take the phone off the hook, dismiss my resident osteopath, put the cheetah outside, and settle down for an evening of pure pleasure with the Bulletin (and need I add?) a good supply of Marlboro Cigarettes.

Whenever I am having fun, a Marlboro makes the fun even more fun. That filter, that flavor, that yielding soft pack, that firm Flip Top box, never fails to heighten my pleasure whether I am playing Double Canfield or watching the radio or knitting an afghan or enjoying any other diverting pursuit you might name—except, of course, spear fishing. But then, how much spear fishing does one do in Clovis, New Mexico, where I live?

But I digress. Let us return to my Alumni Bulletin and the fascinating news about my old friends and classmates. I quote from the current issue:

"Well, fellow alumni, it certainly has been a wing-dinger of a year for us old grads! Remember Mildred Cheddar and Harry Camembert, those crazy kids who always held hands in Room 117? Well, they're married now and living in Clovis, New Mexico, where Harry rents spear-fishing equipment, and Mildred has just given birth to a lovely 28-pound daughter, her second in four months. Nice going, Mildred and Harry!"

"Remember Jethro Brie, the man we voted most likely to succeed? Well, Jethro is still gathering laurels! Last week he was voted 'Motormon of the Year' by his fellow workers in the Duluth streetcar system. 'I owe it all to my brakeman,' said Jethro in a characteristically modest acceptance speech. Same old Jethro!"

"Probably the most glamorous time had by any of us old alumni was had by Francis Macomber last year. He went on a big game hunting safari all the way to Africa! We received many interesting post cards from Francis until he was, alas, accidentally shot and killed by his wife and white hunter. Tough luck, Francis!"

"Wilametta 'Deadeye' Macomber, widow of the late beloved Francis Macomber, was married yesterday to Fred 'Sureshot' Sigfusson, white hunter, in a simple double-ring ceremony in Nairobi. Many happy returns, Wilametta and Fred!"

"Well, alumni, that just about wraps it up for this year. Buy loads!"

© 1963 Max Shubin

Old grads, new grads, undergrads, and non-grads all agree: that good Richmond tobacco recipe, that clean Selestrate filter, have turned all fifty states of the Union into Marlboro Country. Won't you join the throng?

Sportin' Chance

By Linda Turner

"Want to play a single wall handball match?" I agreed before I considered my previous experience in the field. Absolutely none. I decided not to let my opponent know that it was my first attempt, but to follow his actions and use my knowledge of other sports; however I wondered if it would be more like football than badminton. Time soon presented the awakening answer.

After being told that comfortable clothes and high top tennis shoes would be a sufficient outfit, the game acquired another admirer because I immediately concluded that it couldn't be too rough without more protective clothing. Even though we soaked our hands in severely hot water before going to the court, I asked no questions, but though it very impractical to soak anything before having a reason due to an injury, I hoped that this incident was not foretelling what was to come.

My opponent hid his disappointment of finding the court conveniently in the midst of construction, but it seemed impossible to play any sort of game with only one wall and a floor marked in a rectangular figure. The coin was flicked; the serve went to his side.

In a flash he dropped the ball, and socked it with his hand. WHAM! Up against the wall. Over my left shoulder and outside of the white line around the floor. "A long," he said.

The next time the ball was dropped and socked it with his hand. WHAM! Up against the wall. So I gave it a good underhand jab, and sent it heading against the wall again. My opponent darted in front of me and struck it the second time. That was all it was to it.

The chief requirements were that the ball be hit with one hand, that it strike the front wall, and land somewhere inside the playing rectangle upon flying back off the wall. After a two game match of twenty-one points each, my strength was exhausted.

Hot water felt wonderful to my sore hands this time. If ever there has been an overly eager handball player, I classify for the title. The game became a challenge to my eyes and feet, and I soon became aware of the art of timing which could be applied to stops, starts, and hitting the ball on different shots such as the pass, kill or lob. Handball is certainly a game played "under fire," and one that will be enjoyed more by the player than the observer.

Anyone want to undertake this professional of one game fame?

Bailey Lectures At Forum Meet About America

By Barbara Steffen

Approximately 100 persons gathered at the Forum Meeting to hear the lecture put forth by Stephen K. Bailey, Jr., on November 6th.

Bailey, a well-known author and speaker, discussed the phases of American life in which the individual is most vulnerable according to the Europeans, is a theme of the lecture.

Americans have a neurotic, childish, and materialistic character. They have fostered themselves in conformity which has produced irresponsibility in politics and morals.

Secondly, Europeans have not bypassed the racial problem in America as a means of attack upon American maturity. They maintain that our failure to make rapid strides in solving this issue is the result of overall immaturity.

The third opinion: Europeans have of Americans is that they are immature in government. Just as adolescents resent parental authority, the Europeans compare Americans have this same sort of resentment for governmental authority.

Europeans also contend that United States domestic and international decisions are too influenced by American industrial corporations.

In the final analysis, Europeans have come to the conclusion that Americans with their adolescent attitudes are not capable of being the leaders of the free world.

Mr. Bailey challenged the Europeans by offering proof of American maturity. In answer to the question of American conformity, he replied that Americans are not immature because they are massed. A mass of persons of world renown one can find American musicians, national heroes, statesmen, and leaders.

In answer to the racial problem, Mr. Bailey admitted that it is a problem, but he pointed out that it is a problem that is being solved. He pointed out that the problem is being solved by the American people.

Mr. Bailey pointed out that the American people are not conforming. He pointed out that the American people are not conforming to the European way of thinking.

As for the Europeans' charge of American immaturity in government, Mr. Bailey pointed out that the American people are not immature. He pointed out that the American people are not immature in government.

Mr. Bailey concluded that the dancer is not an American immaturity in world leadership but that Americans will settle for a lower level of maturity from others than that of their own.

MR. SCHROYER

Schroyer Tells Of Team Effort In Service For Slater System

"The individual is but a member of a team," says Mr. Schroyer, the interim manager for the Slater System at Longwood.

Explains Mr. Schroyer, "I may be here for a few weeks or longer." The promotion Mr. Clark received to North Carolina State University left a manager's position open. Mr. Schroyer will act as interim manager for the time it takes to properly fill the position.

A large organization has the advantage of having people to fill in where they are needed. The Southern region of Slater has one or two traveling chefs, a traveling dietitian, and one or two people to fill in as managers or assistant managers, which is Mr. Schroyer's position.

Mr. Schroyer was born and raised in Illinois in the area of Knox College, which is inhabited mainly by Swedish and Irish farmers. Mr. Schroyer's education included attendance at three colleges, culminating in a degree of Bachelor of Science in Restaurant and Hotel Management from Florida State University in Tallahassee.

In the Navy, Mr. Schroyer was stationed in South America and the Mediterranean. Since then, he has lived in Tennessee, Louisiana, Florida, Illinois, and Georgia. He has been on his present job of traveling for six months.

The past three months he was at the University of Houston assisting the manager there in adjusting to changing conditions. Mr. Schroyer's family are in Atlanta.

In speaking of Longwood, Mr. Schroyer was impressed with "how nice the girls are here and how wonderful to work with. The waitresses are neat, clean and really hustle; they are exceptional." He speaks with awe at Mrs. Tucker's task of directing 75 waitresses in a smooth operation.

Mr. Schroyer credits the excellence of the kitchen plant to the long range planning of the administration. Their capacity of being able to project needs has rendered excellent facilities.

Speaking of the bakery department, he says it is one of the finest he has seen anywhere. "They really use these scales to check quality all the time."

Mr. Schroyer is careful to emphasize that his place in the team is to smooth over the transition from the previous management to the new one.

Mr. Schroyer's family are in Atlanta. He is currently in Longwood, Florida, where he is working for the Slater System.

not, feeling that most of these attacks are unprepared for unconditional independence, they are a part of political maneuvering.

Two examples of the two paths a revolutionary country may take are evidenced by Algeria and Morocco.

The latter is now more stable in view of its realization of the necessity for the above-mentioned tutelage. The proponents parry by pointing to the revolutionary aspects of early America. The opposition quickly asserts the obvious differences in the traditions of the two cultures — the United States and Africa, the former being by tradition more imbued with stable governmental know-how.

A third focal point is Southeast Asia where since World War II a cold war has been raging between the communists and the free world. The opposition sees this area as the most obvious evidence of the failure of United States foreign policy. Communism seemingly is gaining more momentum every day. Viewing with horror the tendency to create in each southeastern Asian state a miniature of divided-Germany patterned after the more recent North-South Korean division, the opponents are insisting upon an overhauling of United States foreign policy. Pragmatically speaking, they advocate "scraping" the present policy since it has emboldened only failure for this country's interest in "gray" view the southern Asian policy (the Latin American and African ones as well) as one which has successfully kept the country out of a full-scale "War managers" is the label they attach to the opposition. Complacent status-quoers are the label thrown back at them by the opposition in cartoons caricaturing the "Great Appeaser" Neville Chamberlain.

Two other phases of the foreign policy program present themselves for discussion, the U. N. and foreign aid. The opposition believes the U. N. is a "useless organization" to further Russian propaganda tactics.

Longwood got into the swing of things last Sunday with a "Hootenanny" in Wheeler "Rec." The main attraction was a group called "The Classmates" composed of Jamie Hubbard, Anne Moore, and Becky Ragdale, all from Hampton, who have been singing together for three years.

Lead singer Jamie, who also plays the harmonica, attended summer school here at Longwood and is now employed at Maids Development Company. She attends Old Dominion College two nights a week, but hopes to return to Longwood.

Anne Moore, guitar player in the group, has written several songs of her own. She is employed as a cadet in the Confederate Army Command at Fort Monroe.

Soprano Becky Ragdale is a dental assistant. She also plays guitar for "The Classmates."

Becky, Anne, and Jamie are managed by Marian Keane, a fellow graduate, who provides their transportation to and from appearances. The group usually gets together several times a week for a few hours. Their repertoire consists of over a hundred songs.

As for the immediate past, "The Classmates" have appeared at a club banquet, the Officers Club at Langley Air Force Base and the "Intero Restaurant. Future dates include the Noland company party, the N.A.S.A. Christmas party, and several other engagements after January 1, including perhaps another date at Longwood.

phen" provided spirited and consistently entertaining characters. Patricia Hones, "Lady Brit" has a definite gift for characterization. Her delivery, although perhaps a bit fast, was quite compelling. Jo Whitard as "Sheila" was the perfect girl and simply delightful.

The character of "Charles Lomax" was revealed a little more fully by comedy in William MacGuire. Uncontrolled and bordering on the "ham" though his technique was, Mr. MacGuire looked and acted, tongue-in-cheek, exactly as one would imagine a turn-of-the-century man-about town to be. He was delightful and appealing throughout the play.

Mildred Gwaltney was very convincing as the Salvation Army General, "Mrs. Baines." Patricia Newell prettily posed her way through the parts of Sarah and Blackford Noland was quite amusing in his small role of "Bilton."

As a whole, the play was obviously a very earnest effort. The trouble was there were individual good performances, but not enough rapport between the actors to create any sense of real action. Perhaps some extra stage business would have helped to combat the natural stiffness that accompanies a minimum of acting technique. The actors, however, are to be congratulated for conquering the monumental task of learning lines for a Shaw play.

The technical end of the show made a triple-fold for what was lacking in the creative end. The sets, designed and built by Mr. David Wiley, were clever and beautiful; and the lights, designed by Paton Lockwood, were amazingly strong and exquisite.

Inspection Of Dorms Determines Move

The final inspection of Mary White Cox Dormitory was yesterday, November 19. The results of this inspection determine whether or not potential Cox residents move in next week.

At this point in the construction of the building, the architect, engineer, contractor, stage budget officials, and college officials made a very important investigation to be sure that all contracted stipulations had been carried out and that the building is ready for occupancy.

There is little chance of there being a major discrepancy this late in the construction of the building. Periodic checks have been made to avoid these major difficulties.

Providing that all went well with the inspection, the plan is that Cox residents will move their personal belongings Monday through Wednesday of next week. Upon returning to school after the Thanksgiving break, they will go directly to Cox where the beds will have been set up by that time.

Lankford Returns From Pakistan Speaks Of Projects, Problems Observed

DR. FRANCIS G. LANKFORD

President Francis G. Lankford returned to the Longwood College campus this week after a fifteen month stay in Pakistan. Tomorrow at 1 p.m. President Lankford will address the annual Convocation. He will speak on his experiences in Pakistan.

Dr. Lankford's stay in Pakistan was a part of the University of Chicago Pakistan Education Project which has been supported by grants from the Ford Foundation. The division of Pakistan into East and West provinces has caused an exodus of teachers, thus creating for Pakistan an educational crisis.

Dr. Lankford went over as a provincial chairman of the University of Chicago advisor, and while there, he became general chairman for both East and West Pakistan. The project actually consisted of three large phases.

The first goal was to help establish a student affairs program in two universities, Dacca University in East Pakistan and University of Punjab in West Pakistan. They planned to build student unions similar to our own student buildings in order to bring students and faculty closer together in non-academic activities. This meant the establishment of an institution that has never existed in that part of the world.

The second phase of the project was the establishment of pilot secondary schools, 21 in East Pakistan and 22 in West Pakistan. In these schools they hoped to introduce new practices in order to diversify the curriculum. Previously the education of Pakistanians placed sole emphasis on the humanities.

However, new fields of study have been introduced including architecture, home economics, industrial arts, biology, chemistry, physics, and commercial education. These schools were equipped with laboratories through grants from the Ford Foundation. Also another purpose of establishing these schools was to train new teachers.

Opens Extension Centers
 The third and final phase of this project was the establishment and opening of extension centers, designed to provide inservice training for superintendents, headmistresses, and headmasters. This would, of course, upgrade the preparation of the teachers.

When asked about some of the problems he faced while teaching in Pakistan, Dr. Lankford replied that language constituted a serious barrier. Although the people knew English, it was textbook English, and they had a difficult time understanding his lectures.

Wilson Speaks At DKG Meets

Dean Ruth B. Wilson is scheduled to speak to various chapters of Delta Kappa Gamma, an honorary society for women in the sciences, at a meeting in the state president of this organization, Delta Kappa Gamma, an international organization, has a total membership of 85,000 women in its chapters.

Last April, Wilson spoke to the Danville and Lynchburg chapters on the topic of "Women and Discrimination." She used the report submitted from President Kennedy's Commission

Leads Workshop
 Last Saturday she led a workshop-type meeting for six chapters in the Arlington area. This was based on ways the members can best serve their state and country. Dean Wilson will speak to five chapters in the Williamsburg area this Saturday on "Changing Patterns of Education."

She will speak to three chapters in the Portsmouth area on "Advances and Improvements in Teacher Training." Dean Wilson will end this series of lectures on December 7. She will speak in Roanoke on the topic of "Christmas: Then and Now."

Precious Hours . . .

Why is the library not open more on weekends? Why does it close one full hour before upperclassmen must be in their dorms on weeknights?

For students doing research these two facts are a thorn in the side. For the most part it is possible to check out books and use them in the rooms, but what are the students who must use bound magazines, microfilms, or reference books to do?

Saturday night—when the dormitories are noisier—would present the harried student who is desperately trying to keep up in her daily work plus doing research for term papers with a night to catch up in her library work.

Sunday is another time the library should stay open at night. Research is something that takes time to get into, but once one has begun it is difficult to stop. Three hours is hardly enough time to do effective work in research. The hour between the time the library closes and the dormitory is locked is hardly enough time to find a classroom, settle into study, and get real work done.

What can be done? The solution is not difficult. One person at the main desk seems quite sufficient at this time to lock the doors as they leave and check books out. As for weeknights why could the night watchman not lock the library at 11:00 instead of 10:00. The students who find it necessary to use the facilities that cannot be used outside of the library should be trusted to use them properly under the Honor Code.

By leaving the library open an hour later each night, and on Saturday and Sunday nights, students will be able to make more profitable use of these times that may otherwise be wasted.

Why Not?

What is something that everyone dislikes, but almost everyone has? The answer—Saturday classes. Who wants them? Surely not the faculty. Often it is the faculty who complain the loudest about having to come to class on Saturday, a time that could be spent with the family, on research, out of town, or cleaning out the attic.

Could it be the students who want Saturday classes? Ha! It would be superfluous to explain why students aren't overfond of Saturday classes. But the fact that the seventh day of the week is not the most popular day for classes is really not sufficient reason to discontinue them, we will be told. There are other problems involved though.

How many professors would schedule a course that is strictly an elective on Saturday, especially at 8 o'clock? The result? Upperclassmen often are faced with schedules of five classes on certain days because the courses they want are taught alternate years and only at one time.

What to do? First we would like to throw out for all to know that Longwood would not be the first school to abolish classes on Saturday. Classes could be scheduled on Tuesday and Thursday to run for one hour and fifteen minutes; thus, making up the time lost by not meeting on Saturday. If this solution is not to the liking of some students or professors, it is always possible to meet for two hours on one day. The longer periods twice a week has been done quite successfully in a physical education class, and meeting for two hours on one day has worked well in a government class here at Longwood.

We ask the administration to seriously consider changing its present policy. Of the faculty we ask that you discuss the matter and make a resolution to that effect. If the students and the faculty advocate this change, we can then ask WHY NOT?

KEEP GOING

Return Of Student Teachers Results In Gab Sessions Galore

By Pat Wallace

The loud laughter coming from South Cunningham recently is probably the result of gab sessions among the returning student teachers. They have found during the last nine weeks, that besides the practical lessons learned and the experiences gained, they have gathered a storehouse of unusual and funny experiences to share with the other students.

Significance of '78
Carla McNair, who was student teaching at Patrick Henry High School in Roanoke, ran into some frustrating ordeals with one of her students who was also on the football team. In class period she asked him the significance of the year 1778. He replied, "Well—it was—right after the year 1775." Her only retort, "So, you made an 'A' in math class too." In summing up his impression of Carla, this same student said, "Yeah, she's real neat—she wears weejuns."

On a test in history class, Carla asked the students who Earl Warren was. The answer was as follows, "He was the only President to be impeached by the Supreme Court."

Betty Howard seems to have been one of the lucky ones, she received a proposal from one of her students. A note from a member of her seventh grade music class was left on her stand. It stated simply, "Will you marry me?"

Dictionary Handy
When Mr. Magnusson came unexpectedly to Woodrow Wilson Junior High School, Rowena Yates ran into some difficulty in her seventh grade history class. They had been discussing some of the diseases that were prevalent at Jamestown, the first permanent English settlement in North America. Rowena had explained that the settlers were bothered by three main diseases—malaria, typhoid, and dysentery. Of course, two of the students had to ask, "What is dysentery, Miss Yates?" Rowena answered, "Well—it's that sort of sh-s disorder of the—er—actually it has to do with the digestive system and it—uh—look it up in the dictionary."

Age sometimes causes difficulties, as Row found out. One day she was stopped in the hall by an eighth grade monitor and told she was not supposed to be out of the room at that time. A word of wisdom from Row—know your department supervisor!

In a senior high school such as the one where Pam Croy taught, you often run into problems over the choice of words. In her history class, Pam told them that the United States had to borrow one million dollars from abroad—you can imagine the reaction this statement got.

Jeannie Kaffer found that her typing students enjoyed typing to the music of the "Bripper."

You can hear many more stories just by listening to the conversations around the dorm. And from what we hear, the rest of us certainly have a great deal to look forward to!

Nathaniel Macon Group Presents UN Report

By Sharon Williams

Have you lost interest in national affairs? If so, you're like many Longwood students who have become lachrymistic in keeping up with world affairs. Because of this attitude, three conscientious students, Bobbi Rice, Maria Costan, and Amy Haley, decided to start an organization which would stimulate interest about the government, peoples, and cultures of other countries.

Now a full fledged and successful organization for two years, the Nathaniel Macon Society is still accomplishing its purpose of promoting an understanding of the United States Constitution as it was first written, showing how the United States is affected by today's events through learning its background, and keeping its members, as well as the student body, well informed of the actions of the different "hot spots" in the world.

Committees Report
Having been in existence for only two years, the "society" has a very effective and efficient method of conveying its purposes. Each of its fifteen members belongs to one or more of the many committees such as Cuban affairs, economics, African relations. At every meeting each committee gives a five minute report on their findings.

Denies Political Ties
The "society," often labeled conservative, actually has no political ties. As president, Bobbi Rice stated, "We're not like the Young Democrats or the Young Republicans. We just want to find out the relationships of different countries have with the United Nations and to discuss all points of the issue."

The Nathaniel Macon society meets on the first and third Wednesday of every month. Tonight they are having a panel discussion about the United Nations. This is open to anyone who wishes to come, the society urges everyone interested to attend.

One of our more provocative professors once said that an education is not required at Longwood; students must get one of their own volition.

We wish to refute—even conclude—the illustrious professor's statement. Of course, an education is required at Longwood. Every woman at Longwood must learn at least the rudiments of handling the many types of professors at Longwood. Upon learning this each and every student can succeed academically.

First, there is the professor who studies the students as they sit in his classes. To succeed under such professors, it is necessary to take copious notes, to frown or laugh on given signals (though he laughs, frown when he frowns), and act like an absorbent sponge.

Another type of professor found on the L. C. campus is the one who loves for his students to answer questions—incorrectly. This provides an excellent opportunity to make a peroration not necessarily relevant to his question. In order to succeed under this type, almost never give him correct answers. But once in a great while surprise him with the right answer, for it will restore his faith in female intelligence.

To enable further efficiency in this job a new Shop Building has just been constructed adjacent to the new laundry. This ultra-modern building houses the office of the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, the carpenter shop, paint shop, electrical shop, plumbing shop, and all grounds equipment. There are also 2,200 square feet of central storage space and a receiving room, through which all deliveries to the college are processed.

The new shop has 5,815 square feet and the total cost was $119,213.76. It was begun May 5, 1963 and final inspection was held on November 13. With the completion of the shop the old laundry building stands to be demolished and replaced by tennis courts.

The new Shop Building and laundry are steps in a long-range program to be tentatively culminated in 1970. The next step will be the construction of a new Student Activities Building to be begun within the next ten months. It will be located across from the new gym, beside South Cunningham. Upon its completion, old Student will be renovated, providing more dormitory space. Four dormitories are also in the planning stage. The first of which, to be located beside Jarman, will be begun within the next two years.

Aside from its other duties, the office of the Superintendent is responsible for the college motor pool. It processes the requests of faculty and administration for use of the four cars and one van owned by the college. There are also three cars rented by the college, from the state motor pool in Richmond.

All In Fun . . .

Still another type of professor is the one who loves to be put on a pedestal. Worship him. Act as if he is a deity. In Sanskrit—some obscure poet—And compliment him profusely on his wide range of knowledge.

Then, there are the professors who advocate audio-visual aids. One should bring buttered popcorn instead of polished apples to this professor.

And then there is the inveterate gossip. Supply him with all the campus news. Make a puree of it juicy—and completely fragment of your imagination.

How can we ever forget the professor who enjoys expounding on say and all subjects—except the subject he is supposedly teaching. To succeed, come to class stocked with some uniquely irrelevant questions. Be sure and ask them before he takes roll.

And the most unforgettable professor is the one who takes everything in the Rotunda as a personal affair. For all staff members, the best way to handle such professors is not to handle them at all.

The staff solicits contributions from professors who wish to categorize students.

SHALL WE DAHNSE?

Orchestra members, modern dance classes prepare for dance demonstration. Designed for freshmen, this program will give observers the opportunity to see dance as movement and as art form.

Dance Students To Perform For Freshmen Demonstration

Students from the two modern dance classes and Orchestras will participate in the dance demonstration to be given for Freshmen Tuesday, November 26, at 6:45 - 7:30 p.m. in the old gymnasium. With the sports season ending, the freshmen will have the opportunity to observe dance as movement and as an art form.

Two approaches for understanding will be demonstrated. Movement will be clarified as a basic concept for understanding one's own movement patterns and as relating to techniques or skills for developing the dance.

Clarifies Basic Dance

A basic dance and movement concept will be clarified in the first part of the demonstration. Students in the morning section of modern dance will demonstrate the principle of relaxation which aids the learner to recognize release or loss of energy compared to tension in muscles for understanding movement.

A total body concept of doing, feeling, and thinking is engendered as one learns to understand collapse or relax to recovery.

Following this, qualities of movement will demonstrate the use of at least two or three qualities of movement that are used in most any human pattern of movement. These will be explored through work and sport techniques, thereby relating movement beyond the body alone.

After examples of experiencing the total body concept through total or partial (differential) relaxation, locomotion as an unbalancing process will be demonstrated. Through shifting one's total body weights or center of gravity, one's recovery of balance will be demonstrated through the walk, the run and the leap - all as natural movements of man, but which relate to the mechanics of the body as a machine.

When the wholeness is sensed in the body, the student learns to understand the curvilinear principle which governs many human movements. The rotational aspects of human ways of moving are explored through changing levels or the three-dimensional aspects of movement of man, which likens one to living sculptural form. Through this process, one understands his own structure and organization of forces in his own body.

In the second phase of the program basic or beginning techniques clarify modern dance as an independent art form. Standing and floor techniques will be demonstrated from and through basic positions for conditioning his body in dance.

One of the problems basic to all college dance students relates to a turn out, which is approached both from floor techniques and wide base positions in the standing positions rather than the use of basic ballet positions in the beginning.

Another problem is clarified early in the beginning of the course in modern dance. Movement in ballet and modern dance are alike and different. In ballet, techniques are precise, specific and codified. All efforts are made in ballet to focus on the static position, the attitude, the pose, picture or ideal image of the dancer. All movement leads to positionings.

Reaches Understanding

In modern dance, one's movement patterns or sequential forms relate to one another into an encompassing whole. The dancer senses continuity or extension of movement with other movements. For this dancer, the base is a moving one or may be described as a theme, which relates to movement or specific techniques and must be explored and clarified in relation to the total situation. The dancer learns to understand both movement and technique as complementary to one another.

In the third section of the demonstration, explorations of the compositional aspects of dance are clarified through three distinct studies. Members of both classes and Orchestras will perform in this section of the program.

From a series of techniques students of the morning class will show use of basic positions and techniques as these may define their understanding of a theme - Daybreak as a group work from Throckmorton's music. This is also defined as a space and level study.

Participate

Students participating in this work are Lois Altier, Mary Bernard, Katherine Barker, Jo Bartlett, Carolyn Burnett, Kaye Cairton, Joan Dohmann, Dianne Davis, Shearer Ebert, Constance Gallahan, Dona Gerhardt, Judith Hicks, Katherine Kova, Also Ruth Limbrick, Sandra Long, Patricia Lyddane, Virginia Morton, Martha Muir, Jeanne Reams, Mary Palmore, Linda Reams, Frances Shenal, Jennie Rodero, and Barrie Stone-man.

From a sequential space pattern developed from the folk dance grapevine step, the afternoon class group will demonstrate exploration of the technique used for a basic turnout from a broad base as a basic pattern for further exploration and development of the Pavane, a pre-classic dance form. Herein, one senses the feeling of a processional that has focus upward or a feeling of dignity.

Depicts Wedding

From this premise, the group develops the contemporary counterparts of a wedding procession as a climax of the feeling of the bride, which in reality, after marriage shows the real character of the maiden. A contrasting study of a theme that relates to a dream world is harsh when it is exposed in every day life and living, which becomes hum-drum and patterned.

Typifies Blind Date

The third composition, which will be sponsored by Orchestras will typify a Blind Date at Longwood College. The following members will participate: Rebecca Evans, Helena Hall, Elizabeth Hodnett, Carol Hogg, Joan Lord and Jackie Walker.

The following apprentices will also assist: Ann Cordle, Carol Doak, Ann Evans, Charlene Garner, Diane Graham, Donna Kafka, Phyllis Lasley, Joyce Neal, and Shelby Webb.

Mrs. Emily K. Landrum, Associate Professor of Physical Education, will conduct the dance demonstration.

Isbel Serves Longwood Campus, Active In Sports, Class Activities

By Sandra Jamison
"I've got to go and count my fruit flies in the science building." This is a typical remark made by biology-major, sports-enthusiast Brenda Isbel.

Brenda, now a senior, has a long history of sports and other extracurricular activities ranging from basketball to May Day to Who's Who.

In the field of sports, Brenda was sports manager of the A. A. Council, and secretary of the Monogram Club. She was a recipient of the Blue Blazer Award, which is reserved for seniors who are active in sports. In intramural sports Brenda has played hockey, volleyball, and basketball. She was captain of the class hockey team and of class basketball team. She has played varsity hockey and varsity basketball.

Enjoys Sports

For recreation Brenda enjoys volleyball, but she likes to watch and play hockey. Handicrafts and cooking top her hobby list. She also has a special skill in research techniques which goes along with her interest in biology.

Active on Campus

Brenda began her vigorous career as a member of the Freshman Commission. From here she has gone on to be class Circus chairman, scenery chairman of the Water Pageant, scenery chairman of May Day, and scenery chairman of class production.

She has also been on the cir-culcation staff of the Rotunda and is a member of the Student Education Association. Just recently Brenda received the great honor of being elected to Who's Who.

A native of Portsmouth, Brenda is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Isbel. She is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta, International fraternity. At present she plans to teach biology and may go into research at a later date.

'Red And White' Win Over 'Green' In Class Hockey

The two hockey games played this week ended this class sport for the season. The first game, played Monday, November 11, ended in a 1-0 victory for the sophomores over the freshmen. On Wednesday, November 13, the sophomores defeated the freshmen by a score of 2-0.

Results for Year

The following are the results of all the class hockey games for the year: seniors vs. juniors, 1-1; a senior victory over the freshmen, 2-0; a senior victory over the sophomores, 3-0; freshmen vs. juniors, 0-0; a sophomore victory over the freshmen, 2-0; and a sophomore victory over the juniors, 1-0.

The class hockey managers were Jackie Walker and Maria Hynes. Judy Wilson, Carrie Lee Wilson, Melody Saunders, and Lurline Robertson officiated. There was much spirit displayed this year with a greater number of supporters. Sportsmanship was at its best.

Kilpatrick Defends Prince Edward

During Address To Hampden-Sydney

By Nancy Mowrey

James J. Kilpatrick addressed the Hampden-Sydney student body last Thursday as the last speaker in a series of three talks on civil rights. The first speaker was Mr. William J. vanden Heuvel of the Justice Department, the second was Longwood's Dean C. G. Gordon Moss. Refutes Other Speakers

Kilpatrick began by refuting certain points made by the previous two speakers. In answer to Mr. vanden Heuvel's tenant that the situation in Prince Edward was caused by the changes in our society, the consequence of growth, of industrialization, of increasing wealth, and of international power," he placed the blame on the 1954 Supreme Court decision of Brown v. Board of Education.

"The court said to Prince Edward, Thou shalt not. Thou shalt not what? Thou shalt not deny any qualified child admission to any public school by reason of his race. As the venerable Judge John J. Parker pointed out in a later clarifying opinion, that was all the court could say," Kilpatrick stated.

Defends Prince Edward
The editor of the Richmond

News Leader, Kilpatrick defended the action of the citizens of Prince Edward by saying, "Exercising their prerogatives, and operating at every point through the processes of republican government, the people closed all their public schools. They thereby achieved a status of complete obedience to the Supreme Court's decision. The court no longer was denying admission to any child to any public school; for there were no public schools."

Said Kilpatrick, the people of Prince Edward then exercised their power under the Tenth Amendment. "They (the white parents) worked; they sacrificed; they exhausted themselves; and to the monumental chagrin of their critics, they succeeded brilliantly" in providing for the educational needs of their children.

In speaking of the lack of educational facilities for the Negro children, Kilpatrick was careful to bring out, "Not one iota of advantage ever was given by the state to white persons that was not simultaneously and equally available to Negro persons."

Blames Negro Leaders

Bluntly Kilpatrick wants historians to remember that many blame for the plight of these Negro children rests not with the white community of Prince Edward which exercised its undoubted rights and talents as free men. This primary responsibility rests with the Negro community—and especially with certain cynical and opportunistic Negro leaders from outside the county—who willfully chose to treat the Negro children as pawns on a legal chessboard."

In answering Dr. Moss' plea for consideration of "the principle of humaneness," Kilpatrick says this is the field of ethics and morality. "No thoughtful man would deny that the status of the American Negro is deeply affected by considerations of ethics and morality. But I rather think these explorations should be undertaken by men first of all in the privacy of their own minds and hearts."

Upholds Property Rights

Kilpatrick denies that human and property rights are different. He declares, "The right to own and to manage property is the oldest human right of all. It is the one right that underlies all rights, and on which all other rights depend." He brings the Ten Commandments to his defense in quoting property rights upheld in that document, "Thou shalt not steal... Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife..."

Mr. Kilpatrick's principal concern is that in yielding powers to the central government, the federal system is breaking down. He warns, "What we do not yield in naïveté is being taken from us by design." Through executive orders, financial aid to states—grants-in-aid, the campaign to demean and degrade Congress, and the usurpations by the Supreme Court, "...through all these forces, we are being led to a form of benevolent dictatorship predicted by Tocqueville more than a century ago."

Concerned for Freedom

"My own abiding concern is simply for freedom—for a society in which men are free to associate, or not to associate; free to choose public schools or private schools; free to buy and equally free not to sell; free to carve out their own destinies and reap their own rewards, subject only to the rights of other men."

Board Discusses Campaign Proposal

The much requested second "Faculty Firesides" will be held Thursday, November 21, at 9:30. Lead by Mr. Chavot, this informal discussion on "Understanding Contemporary Art" will take place in the Games Room.

As a result of requests and petitions for a change in the Christmas holiday schedule, the Board has formulated a list of reasons for the change and is circulating petitions to be signed by members of the student body in favor of the change. The requested change entails a departure for the holidays on December 18 instead of December 17 and a resumption of classes on January 3 instead of January 2. The list and petitions are to be presented to Dr. Lankford for consideration. The petitions are posted in all dormitories and outside the dining hall and will remain posted until Friday, November 22.

A study of the Publications Board and its value will be conducted throughout the year by Lewan Rippey, the recently appointed publications chairman.

As a result of the Rotunda editor's suggestion, the Board is discussing the possibility of having an assembly for the introduction and questioning by the student body of all major-minor election candidates. The Board is considering both the advantages and disadvantages.

While the assembly would enable the student to become familiar with candidates, it is feared that those qualified but not outstanding in spontaneous speaking might be overshadowed by those who are. It is also feared that such an assembly would discourage some qualified candidates from running. What is your opinion of this?

Dean Moss Plans July Retirement

Baltimore Symphony Orchestra Appears In Jarman Tomorrow

By Joan Lord

Tomorrow night at 8 o'clock the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra will present a program in Jarman Auditorium. The orchestra will be conducted by Peter Herman Adler.

The Symphony has ninety-one members at present and plays over one hundred and eighty concerts during a season. Under the leadership of Peter Herman Adler who is its Music Director and Conductor, the Baltimore Symphony has achieved international recognition. During this season the orchestra will present sixteen pairs of mid-week concerts and ten Saturday night Pope Concerts at the Lyric Theatre, more than seventy Youth Concerts, plus seventy-five concerts outside of Baltimore. The world's most distinguished guest soloists and conductors appear regularly with the Symphony.

Peter Herman Adler, distinguished Czech-born Music Director and Conductor of the Baltimore Symphony, made his American debut in 1940 conducting the New York Philharmonic. He became permanent conductor of the Baltimore Symphony in 1959.

The program includes "Overture to Oberon" by Carl Maria von Weber, Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

DR. C. G. GORDON MOSS

Exchanges Desk For Blackboard, Teaching Duties

President Francis G. Lankford has announced the retirement of Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss as dean of Longwood College. Dr. Moss will leave the office of dean in July and return to his duties as full professor in the history department.

Dr. Moss will reach the age limitation of 65 that requires automatic retirement on July 1. He will continue to teach until he reaches the mandatory retirement age of 70 for professors.

After serving as chairman of the department of social science and acting as associate dean, Dr. Moss took over as dean of the college in February of 1961.

A native of Lynchburg, Dr. Moss received his B.A. degree from Washington and Lee University and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Yale University.

Dr. Moss joined the Longwood faculty in 1944 after having arrived as a master at the Episcopal High School at Alexandria, an instructor at Wake Forest College in North Carolina, and a history professor at Mary Washington.

While serving as professor of history, Dr. Moss sponsored many campus activities. He was the first faculty advisor to the Student Government Association when this organization was started in 1945. During his years at Longwood, he has also been advisor to Pi Gamma Mu, (the national honor fraternity for social science), the Lynchburg Club and the Young Women's Christian Association.

On thinking of his resignation, Dr. Moss said, "Although I am resigning as dean because of age limitations, I do not want to resign as a friend of every member of the student body. I hope to be able to continue to help some of you with some of your problems."

Dr. Moss, who says he rises two hours before he has 8 o'clock breakfast, has secured Johnny Houston and the Charmers to provide music for the occasion. The dance will be held in the downstairs dining hall, and the tickets will be $2.00 per couple.

Tickets will go on sale after the beginning of second semester.

BALTIMORE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Chairmen Discuss Teachers For College

At the December meeting of the Association of Chairmen of English Departments in Colleges and Universities, held during the Modern Language Association Convention in Chicago, the subject of teachers for colleges and universities was widely discussed.

One of the points that Dr. Simonini made in a talk presented at the meeting, was the difficulty that a department chairman has in finding highly qualified (Ph. D.) women teachers. Women receive only about eighteen per cent of the doctorate degrees awarded annually and in most academic departments hold only ten per cent of the positions. According to Dr. Simonini, this is the result of long time discrimination against women in academic professions, and one may still note the quotas placed on women in awards or graduate schools.

Too much has been made of the dependability of women as graduate students, said Dr. Simonini, and they represent an important but neglected source of new college teachers for us today. The association agreed that we must recruit more bright and personable young women for graduate schools, and conversely graduate schools must without prejudice give women their fair share of aid and other opportunities.

The association of chairmen discussed the problem of distribution in recruiting teachers. The traditional "small college town" in America has lost its appeal. This has caused a rural-urban imbalance because both population and teacher trends are toward the city. Poor geographical distribution is another drawback in obtaining highly qualified teachers. "A small college in rural Mississippi or Texas," said Dr. Simonini, "has almost no chance of recruiting a highly qualified faculty." The twin problem of distribution and recruitment require a change of outlook in the academic profession if we are to do a better job in the future of utilizing our human resources.

Berkis Writes Essay On Latvia For Publication

Dr. Alexander V. Berkis, associate professor of history and social science, has written an essay which appears in a current issue of a collection of essays published by the Latvian Humanities and Social Science Association.

The publication of such essays is a continuing activity of the faculty in exile of the University of Latvia. The faculty went into exile when the Communists took over in Latvia.

Dr. Berkis' essay is entitled, "The Foreign Policy of Duke James of Courland" (1642-1822). Duke James was trying to establish Courland as a buffer state between Sweden and Poland. In this essay, Dr. Berkis discusses the chief aims of Duke James' foreign policy, and the ways he increased Courland's international prestige. According to Dr. Berkis, Duke James' "fatal blunder" was neglecting the military affairs of his duchy, partly due to his almost pathological belief in written international treaties and international decency.

Dr. Berkis was born in Vladivostok, Russia, and came to the United States in 1950. He received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in history from the University of Wisconsin and was appointed to the Longwood faculty in May, 1961.

Kappa Delta Pi Initiates Members Recognizes Scholarship, Character

The Beta Epsilon Chapter of Kappa Delta Pi has recently initiated thirty-one new members. Kappa Delta Pi is the national honor society of education on campus. Its objectives include the recognition of scholarship, character, and service, as well as making contributions to the intellectual and social life of the college.

Membership is limited to those with at least junior standing who hold a position in the upper quartile of the student body. The officers are Charlotte McClung, president, Betty Howard, vice-president, Dana Brewer, secretary, Jeanie Kaiser, treasurer, and Donna Arnold, historian. Mrs. Helen Savage is sponsor for the present membership of forty-five.

The initiates include two each from Concord and Lacrosse, one each from Lorton and Republic Grove, and two from out of the state. There are eleven elementary education majors, three mathematics majors, three business education majors, and nine English majors among the assortment of individual fields.

Variety of Majors
The new Kappa Delta Pi members are Cynthia Alcock, an elementary education major from Hampton; Betty Jane Alvis, an elementary-Spanish major from Concord; Jo Leslie Andrews, an elementary-English major from Farmville; Katherine Barker, an English-Spanish major from Portsmouth; and Martha Bergeron, an English major from Richmond.

Two more elementary education majors are Mary Bodine from Richmond and Beverly Jane Butler from Scottsville. Also on the list are Margaret Cooke, an English major from Columbia; Anne Cordle, a history and social science major from Victoria; Rebecca Evans, a math major from Lacrosse; Dorothy Guthrie in elementary education and social science from Republican Grove and Doris Hartwell, a music major from Petersburg. Edna Mae Hudson from Lynchburg has combined elementary education and social science and Sandra Jamison is an elementary education major from Petersburg.

From Lorton comes Jean Leary who is in history and social science; from Hampton is Elaine Mancill, an elementary education and English major, from Arlington is Nancy Mowrey, a history and social science major. Marie Murphy from Halifax is an English-history major; Patricia Ogden is an elementary education, and Nelda She'd's, English. Elizabeth Perkins from Lacrosse is in math and Pauline Perrow, English, is from Concord.

Out of State Members
The two out-of-state members are Bonnie Ramey from Timmonium, Maryland, who has combined math and biology and Delores Watkins from Raleigh, North Carolina, who is in English and French. Betty Ann Rex is from Charlottesville and is a music education major. From Chatham and Danville come Lurien Robertson and Melody Saunders who are physical education majors. Anne Shead is from Concord and is a home economics major. The total number of new members is completed with Betty Ruth Simpson and Willie Wells from the Business Education Department.

Three Juniors Plan Rotunda Trial Issues

Three juniors, Sandra Jamison, Pat Wallace, and Nancy Mowrey have been selected to edit this year's trial issues of the Rotunda. On the basis of the performances of each of these girls as trial editors-in-chief, the editor of the '64-'65 session will be chosen by the Publications Board.

The trial issues will run for the next three weeks. Nancy will edit the first issue, followed by Sandra and Pat respectively.

All three girls are experienced staff members. Nancy has held the position of desk editor, and has written numerous articles and several editorials. Sandra is sports editor; and has worked on the paper since her freshman year. Pat has held the position of feature editor and has written editorials, features, and news stories.

Each of the trial issues will be judged on the basis of make-up, news content, and the editorial written by the trial editor. Furthermore, the trial editor will be judged on how well she organizes her staff and how she conducts the editorial staff meetings.

TRIAL EDITORS

editions of Rotunda. Editor-in-chief for '64-'65 is chosen on basis of performance.

Juniors Prepare Annual Occasion For Longwood

Plans and preparations are under way for the Junior Dance, which is to be held from 8:00 until 12:00 on February 29. The juniors have secured Johnny Houston and the Charmers to provide music for the occasion. The dance will be held in the downstairs dining hall, and the tickets will be $2.00 per couple.

Presidential Outlook

With his silver hair, his handsome face, and his black horn-rimmed glasses, Barr Goldwater projects an alluring image as he dashes from pillar to post seeking his party's presidential nomination. So alluring is his image that the loyalty he has among conservative groups is comparable to that shown Elvis Presley a few years ago.

But the loyalty of his devoted, conservative following is not enough for Goldwater to obtain the Republican presidential nomination; he must first prove to his party that he is capable of attracting the major voting blocs in this country. And unfortunately—for Goldwater—he has alienated those groups: labor, the aged, and the great mass of middle-of-the-roads.

In order for him to attract the groups with the big voting blocs, Goldwater must modify his views on foreign policy, Social Security, labor unions, and the income tax. Yet, in making any efforts to attract the groups whose support he needs to prove himself a winner, Goldwater will disillusion the members of his following who have taken him and his book, The Conscience of a Conservative, to heart.

But perhaps the clever Mr. Goldwater has another book in mind—The Subconscience of a Conservative.

Letters To Editor

Woman's Group Solicits Stamps

Dear Editor:

The Farmville Junior Woman's Club would like to appeal to the student and faculty of Longwood College to aid in their campaign "Stamps for the Wounded."

Canceled stamps as well as filled or partially filled albums are needed for physical therapy treatment at veteran's hospitals. All commemorative U. S. stamps, U. S. stamps above seven cents, and foreign stamps of any quality or origin are acceptable. Do NOT steam or remove stamp from envelope but tear off section of envelope around the stamp large enough not to damage the stamp.

Stamp boxes have been placed in each post office for your convenience in saving these stamps. There are very few stamps which are not needed so do not hesitate to save any you receive as they will be sorted later. Be sure to include stamps from packages and those Valentine cards.

Butler Requests Return Of Books

Editor's Note: It is unfortunate that the following letter should have to appear in this newspaper. It is up to us, the student body, to see that future letters of this type are not necessary.

Dear Editor:

It is now time for the Library to return to the publishers the 1963 edition of the World Book Encyclopedia, which is on deposit here for the use of students. Unfortunately, volumes 6 and 15 are missing from the shelves, and I am addressing this plea to you in hope that its appearance in The Rotunda will result in the return of the stolen volumes. It will be embarrassing for me, as well as for Longwood and its student body, if I have to return the incomplete set with an accompanying note: "Sorry, the girls here can't be trusted. Perhaps you'd better not risk sending us the 1964 edition."

Sincerely yours,
Charles E. Butler
Librarian

Lankford Writes Note To Students

I am happy to respond to the invitation of the Editor of the Rotunda to use this space for a note to the student body. We have now been back at Longwood a little over three months. This has been a busy time of greeting old friends and meeting many new ones.

When we returned there were two classes of students — more than half the student body — who had entered while we were away and more than a third of the faculty we had not worked with before. And, of course, there were extensive changes in the physical features of the campus that presented a new and much improved appearance. The enrollment had increased from 1170 to 1400 and there were now 88 members of the faculty instead of the 68 the year before we left.

Editor's Note:

The following article, a letter to the student body, was written by President Lankford three months after he returned from a seventeen month stay in Pakistan. President Lankford notes the various physical and academic changes that occurred at Longwood during his absence.

All of these changes had come about in the brief period of seventeen months which only illustrates how rapidly the composition of a college such as Longwood can change.

College's Spirit Unchanged

Soon we realized that the character of Longwood College had not changed and this made our hearts glad. A vase of lovely flowers soon appeared on my desk representing the thoughtfulness of the office staff. At our house appeared gifts of flowers and expressions of welcome from the green and white and the red and white classes, from various student groups, from the alumni and from many individual friends. Representatives of the students and members of the faculty came by to say "we are glad you are back."

As I walked down the halls in the Rotunda students whom I had never seen before spoke cordially and with a smile. We knew we were back home at Longwood and that the same warm feeling of friendliness still prevailed. I hope all of you understand and appreciate how distinctive the spirit at Longwood is among colleges to be found anywhere in the world!

Academic Standards Raised

But there are other reasons I am thankful for Longwood and I believe you are too. Let me mention a few. Here there is sincere respect for high academic standards. I have seen these standards improve each year and as I return I find still further improvement.

Despite the fact that numbers have increased sharply the academic quality of the student body is probably higher this year than at any time in the history of our college. For example, sixty-three per cent of the class of 1967, the largest ever admitted to Longwood, ranked in the top quarter of their high school graduating classes. Thirty-six per cent were in the second quarter. The remaining eleven per cent came from schools that do not rank their graduates.

During these three months we have been back I have felt the presence of intangible evidence that students are giving more serious thought to studies. This has been verified by spontaneous observations of several members of the faculty — even some who once complained loudly about the indifference of their students. Then, too, I met the report that our efforts to provide a beautiful and spacious library were not in vain; for the students are using it more extensively than ever before.

I am also happy for you that you have the privilege of studying under an unusually well qualified faculty. Forty per cent of our faculty have doctor's degrees. All of the remaining sixty per cent have masters degrees and many have done considerable graduate work beyond this degree.

I invite you to compare this record with other Virginia colleges — indeed with other undergraduate colleges like Longwood anywhere in our country. Such a comparison will reveal that we have a much better qualified faculty than is to be found in most colleges like ours.

Improvement Planned

Moreover, there is a constant concern for further improvement in our college. Last session the faculty and administration worked very hard on a thorough study of all aspects of our operation. This was done in preparation for the evaluation for reaccreditation to be made next March by out-of-state committees visiting the campus as representatives of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education. Even before these committees arrive we are already considering ways and means to implement the recommendations that developed from this self-study.

And I am glad that you can attend a college and that I may be a member of the staff where there is a strong and sincere respect for honor.

Student government was reorganized and a new constitution was adopted while I was away. I am sure this improved the machinery of student self-government at Longwood, but what pleases me even more is that I find the same determination here for students to enforce for themselves a code of honor that is another one of the distinctive features of Longwood.

So I say we are fortunate — you and I — to be able to study and work at Longwood College. In the months and years ahead I believe that further improvements will be achieved through the combined efforts of students, faculty, and administration. This prospect offers an exciting challenge to me and I hope it does to you.

Mrs. Lankford and I wish for you a very happy and fruitful year.

Smith Directs Water Pageant For March 25-27

March 25, 26, and 27 are set for the 1964 Water Pageant. This year's Pageant is under the direction and supervision of Miss Barbara Smith, sponsor of the H2O Club; and co-chairmen Chris Longstreet, president of the H2O Club, and Ann Perak.

There will be ten water ballet numbers performed by the members of the H2O Club and the Korkettes. The synchronized swimming group. The different numbers were written by various members of the Club.

As of right now, the theme of the Water Pageant has not been announced.

enshain became "Miss" Obenshain during her first weeks, as she was selected to be a Top Rat of 1964. As the year passed, Lois embarked on her athletic career by playing class hockey, volleyball, basketball, tennis and softball.

Lois was found on the varsity hockey, basketball, and tennis teams during her sophomore year. As a junior and senior, she returned to her class teams. She commented that she has no particular favorite sport, though she has recently become interested in golf.

Her participation in all of these sports activities was rewarded this fall when she was presented a White Blazer.

Receives Honors

Although Lois is majoring in Health and Physical Education, she manages to budget her time so as to include many other phases of activity at Longwood. Her scholarship has earned for her membership in Kappa Delta Pi. She is in the H2O Club.

Alpha Kappa Gamma tapped her into membership last year, and she is currently serving as chairman of the Judicial board of Student Government. Her most recent achievement was being named to Who's Who in College and Universities.

Lois did her student teaching in her hometown of Roanoke, at Woodrow Wilson Junior High School. She taught three classes of 7th grade gym, two classes of 8th grade gym and health, and on Fridays, as co-teacher.

Once a week, Lois was found at Wasena Elementary School, where she volunteered to instruct boys one week and girls the next in stunts and tumbling.

Lois has discovered that a teacher's work is not confined to the classroom. She was kept busy after school with cheerleading practice, volleyball intramurals, basketball clinics, and attending Division of Girls' and Women's Sports Meetings.

Enjoys Teaching

But with all this to do, Lois still loves teaching and says, "I'm glad I chose the profession." Her love was evident as she went through the halls of Woodrow Wilson Jr. High. One English teacher who saw Lois only once in awhile commented, "Her name should be Bubbles. She effervesces all the time."

Lois is planning to return to the Roanoke City School system after graduation to teach physical education and possibly her minor, biology.

Unesco Publishes Aids For Study Outside U. S.

Nearly 19,000 American students attended foreign universities during 1963, while 78,000 foreign students were enrolled in American schools. The rapidly growing trend toward international studies is world-wide, a phase of the "education explosion." More than a quarter of a million students are at schools outside their own countries. They are aided by thousands of free fellowships and scholarships.

The 1964 edition of "Study Abroad," just published by the Unesco Publications Center in New York, lists the opportunities for support in advanced studies outside the United States. More than 130,000 scholarships and fellowships worth hundreds of millions of dollars are available to assist the world's traveling generation of students.

The grants cover every branch of learning and come from universities, governments and foundations in 116 countries. Some are for periods of a few weeks, others extend for as much as seven years.

The book lists 105 different fields of study, ranging from "administration" to "Zoology." Many of the opportunities for foreign study are offered under broad headings such as literature, languages or science. Others are more specific.

Offer 16,000 Scholarships International and intergovernmental organizations, including the United Nations, provide more than 10,000 scholarships. More than 250 American universities and colleges offer assistance to students from abroad. Most of them also grant fellowships abroad to American students.

Changes Effect Education A comparison with previous editions of the "Study Abroad" reveals how political and economic changes affect education. Castro's island now offers only three types of scholarships. Last year, Cuba gave nine. Russia now provides for foreign undergraduates with a living allowance of 80 rubles a month, reduced from 90 last year.

On the other hand, Russian grants to scholars for advanced training have been increased to 150 rubles monthly from the former maximum of 100 rubles.

All relevant data is given for each grant listed in "Study Abroad," including standards of eligibility and where and when to apply. Handy classification codes show the field of study for which financial aid is offered.

The Unesco Publications Center at 317 East 34th Street, New York is the publisher of "Study Abroad" and distributes all publications of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and of the United Nations.

Model Forms Youth Groups For Goldwater

The formation of National Youth for Goldwater, a 50-state organization mobilizing college and high school students for Goldwater, has been announced by Denison Kitchel, general director of Senator Goldwater's Presidential campaign. The announcement combined several other organizations under the National Youth for Goldwater banner, including Young Americans for Goldwater, formed in California after Senator Goldwater announced his candidacy on January 3.

Chairman Named Named national chairman of the organization was Barry Goldwater, Jr., 35, the Senator's oldest son. Kitchel also announced the appointment of Thomas Harff, former national chairman of the Citizens Youth Republican Club, as national director.

Appointed executive secretary of the National Youth for Goldwater was Mrs. Carol Bauman, a graduate of Dunbarton College, Washington, D. C. Mrs. Bauman held a similar position with College Youth for Nixon-Lodge in 1960. Harff and Mrs. Bauman headed the youth group for Senator Goldwater which was formed last September.

Active in NY Barry Goldwater, Jr., a 1962 graduate of Arizona State University, is affiliated with a Los Angeles stock brokerage firm. He was active in the Arizona Young Republicans and is a registered voter there.

Harff, 22, is a graduate of Wisconsin University and lives in Sheboygan, Wisconsin. He has been active in Young Republican politics for six years.

Sampler Prints Except Of Book By Sprague

Learning Materials, Inc., used at excerpt from Fife and Fandango by Longwood's Associate Professor of English, Dr. Rosemary Sprague. Learning Materials, Inc., is a Chicago company, organized by educators. It publishes The Literature Sampler in which the excerpt will appear.

The Literature Sampler consists of "Book Previews" of 14 books for grades 5-11, and reading aids and discussion for each book. These "Previews" are made up of approximately 2,000 word excerpts from the books. They are not abridgments and each has an introduction.

The purposes of The Literature Sampler are: to provide an individualized reading program for students and supplement present programs, to help students build reading habits and form a favorable attitude toward reading, and to introduce them to a wide range of good books. The selection seems good and varied, as do the goals of the program.

J, American Student Information Service, 22 Ave. de la Liberté, Luxembourg (City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg).

AA Undertakes Cycling Program Offers Bowling

Approximately thirteen hundred games have been played under the free bowling program sponsored by the Athletic Association. The program allows each Longwood student three games of duck pin bowling twice each week at the Farmville Sports Center, located between Southside Sundry and Sears, Roebuck and Company.

The Sports Center has seven alleys with automatic pin setters and is open daily. Shoes are supplied free. Farmville leagues bowl nightly, but Longwood students may bowl between six thirty and eight o'clock.

Free bicycling has recently been undertaken by the Athletic Association, but positive plans for such a program have not been announced.

A Reminder

Cars On Campus

RULE 2: Students may not keep cars on campus, in Farmville, or within a ten mile radius, during the college session if they are boarding students. Any exception must be discussed with the Dean of Women.

RULES GOVERNING EXCEPTIONS:

- Exceptions are made only when the Dean of Women, after discussing the situation with the student, feels that the request is valid.
- Permission to have a car must be obtained before the student brings the car to the campus.
- The student's parents or guardian must write a letter to the Dean of Women stating the reason for the request and the length of time the permission is to be in effect.
- After bringing the car on campus, the student must leave the car keys with her Head Resident.
- Within twenty-four hours after bringing a car on campus the student must register the car on a form in the Dean of Women's office (this includes license number).
- The student may not use her car except for the purpose stated in the letter from her parents.
- The Dean of Women's office gives a list of all car permissions to the Head Residents, the Chairman of the Judicial Board and the night watchmen.
- Any violation of the rules governing the permission to have a car on campus automatically results in the student's being asked to take her car home on the weekend following the violation. The parents are notified that no further permission will be granted.

RULE 3: Seniors graduating in June may have cars on campus after April 1. February graduates may have cars on campus the block in which they are not student teaching. Summer school graduates may have cars on campus during the summer session.

Seniors must register their cars in the Dean of Women's office.

Sowder Articles Appear In Literary Periodicals

By Barbara Melton

Dr. William J. Sowder has published articles in three recent literary periodicals. The Mississippi Quarterly, Wisconsin Studies in Contemporary Literature, and College English.

In "Melville's 'I and My Chimney,'" a Southern Exposure article which appeared in the Mississippi Quarterly, Dr. Sowder uses symbolism to show that in the short story Melville revealed the social, economic, political, and religious structure of the Old South. He points up the havoc caused by the inflation of Northern abolitionists elements in Southern society. The great symbol of "I and My Chimney" is, of course, the chimney which is symbolic of the institution of slavery just as all the rooms of the house are connected to the economic chimney. The southern states are similarly caused by slavery, the unifying element of the Old South.

Discusses Economy

Dr. Sowder also discusses the economic problem of the South as revealed by Melville's "I and My Chimney." He points out that poor methods of cultivation caused much waste of land and consequently a loss of quality of the agricultural products. However, he states that the South was changed from a free-market to a one-crop economy. The following quotation shows how Melville uses this historical information in his story:

"The original gable roof" (the economic structure of the South) was discovered to be faulty, and repairmen (Ell Whitney and his partners) came to fix it. Rather than mending the damage by better methods of cultivation, they sawed the old chimney down. It was replaced with a modern roof, the chimney more fit for a railway woodhouse (an industrial society) than an old country gentleman's abode. This repair brought the once-bridled chimney into sudden exposure and frustration by what he himself saw, the early proprietor removed fifteen feet the close-up of the slave trade in 1800."

The articles in the Wisconsin Studies and College English are related to a series of articles which Dr. Sowder is writing on Faulkner and existentialism. The first of this series appeared about a year ago in American Literature. In this article, "Colonel Thomas Sutpen as Existential Hero," Dr. Sowder used the existential factor of Choice in order to show how Colonel Sutpen, the hero of Absalom, Absalom!, attempted to be something that he was not. As a result of his choice, Sutpen chose to become a plantation magnate, and in doing so he denied all his other possibilities.

Existential Factor Used

In College English, Dr. Sowder uses the existential factor of the South to show how the mulatto, Lucas Beauchamp, the hero of Invisible Man, is able to be "beast" southern aristocrats and southern white trash. The main conflict in the novel lies between Lucas and the southern aristocratic boy, Chick Mallison. By refusing to bow down to Chick, Lucas is able to exist his freedom even though his racial status should preclude such existence.

In "Faulkner and Existentialism," Dr. Sowder shows Faulkner's attempt to render the Generalissimo as existential god—the god that insists that man, with no help from him, must accept the consequences of his actions. This insistence gives man his true identity and brings from the Generalissimo this paradoxical "I respect and admire... (man). And pride: I am too little creature of that earthly immortality which he does possess than ever he of that heavenly one of his deification."

The fourth of this series of articles on Faulkner and existentialism, "On Christmas as Existential Hero" will appear some time soon in The University Review. In addition to these articles, Dr. Sowder has made a study of Emerson, which will appear in a forthcoming issue of The New England Quarterly. The article is the second in a series (the first appeared in PMU) of studies on Emerson and British periodicals.

From The Board Longwood Host To SGA Convention

According to the new by-laws recently adopted by the legislative board, new election proceedings will go into effect this spring. Replacing the old screening board is a new Election Committee. The responsibilities of this committee will be to post the time and place of the elections and to supervise them seeing that the procedures and restrictions stated in the by-laws are maintained. The committee will consist of the chairman and vice-chairman elected by the legislative board and a representative from each class. On or before February 15, each class will hold a meeting to elect their respective representatives for the committee. Each student is urged to read the by-laws and become acquainted with the new election procedures and restrictions.

During the weekend of April 16-19, Longwood College will serve as host to the annual SIASG (Southern Intercollegiate Association of Student Governments) Convention. Representatives from student governments of women's colleges throughout the South will meet here. The convention last year was held at Stetson University in Florida and was attended by Mary Ann Lipford and Lois Oberst. A banquet and trip to Williamsburg are planned along with the many other convention activities. Joyce Powell and Karen Diederich are co-chairmen working on the preparations for the meeting. The board asks the student body for complete cooperation in making this a successful event.

Another "Faculty Fireside" is planned for February 27 at 9 p. m. Dr. Pastor will lead an informal discussion on modern poetry.

The election of the May Day chairman and business manager were held on Tuesday, February 4. Since there are no restrictions as to year, the nominees were chosen on the basis of merit, education and not class. The nominees and the pictures were posted before the election.

"Current" Publishes Simkins Statement

The January issue of "Current," a magazine of significant new material from all sources on the frontier problems of today, has devoted the whole issue to "The Meaning of the Life and Death of John F. Kennedy." Material was solicited from leading historians, journalists, and scholars of the country who sent in their assessments within two weeks of the assassination "when the wound was still raw."

Dr. Francis B. Simkins, professor of history at Longwood College, made the following statement in "Current" which students will find quite interesting. Simkins in that it is not the expected eulogy:

"The transfer by tragic violence of chief authority in the United States from a Harvard

White Publishes Fishing Article In Periodical

Ellington White, assistant professor of English at Longwood College, has sold his second story to the widely-circulated magazine, Sports Illustrated.

The December 16, 1963 issue of the magazine carries his illustrated feature, "Singing Waters and a Sea of Mud" about the coffee-colored waters of the Santee-Cooper of South Carolina and anglers out for bass, catfish, and crappie.

The story headpiece describes how "from the inhospitable, eye-stained waters of the Santee-Cooper a dedicated angler shares his wonder at the promises and betrayals of this vast Carolina lake." Mr. White's fishing expedition was made with a Charlestonian guide and novelist Curtis Harnack of New York, who lectured at Longwood two years ago with his wife Hortense Calisher, also a writer.

Mr. White has a third article scheduled for publication in Sports Illustrated about tarpon fishing in Florida.

Junior Music Major Offers Piano Recital

Doris Harwell, a junior music major, will offer a piano recital Sunday afternoon, February 9 at four o'clock in the Student Lounge. Doris is working under the direction of Dr. Sterling Adams. Her program will include:

lessons since she was in the third grade. In her freshman year at Longwood, Doris was one of three people who participated in the organ recital under the direction of Dr. Joanne Currant. This spring she will play the flute in the instrumental ensemble accompanying the Concert Choir.

Doris is from Petersburg, Virginia where she attended Petersburg High School and played in the band for four years. She played the flute, the piccolo, and the bell lyre. In her junior and senior years she played a piano solo with the band accompanying her.

Here at Longwood, Doris is President of Sigma Alpha Iota and is pledging Kappa Delta Pi, an honorary educational organization. She is a member of the Westminster Fellowship of the Presbyterian Church and of the student chapter of the Music Educators National Conference. Doris is serving in her third year in the Concert Choir in which she is treasurer and is serving in her second year with the Madrigal Singers.

Piano comes alive under accomplished touch of junior music major Doris Harwell, as she practices for upcoming piano recital on February 9.

Under direction of Dr. Sterling Adams here at Longwood, Doris has studied music since an early age.

Vassar Joins Faculty; Reveals Colorful Career

By Kay Young

Mr. Edwin H. Vassar, new teacher in the Education Department, is supervising student teachers from Longwood in Henrico County.

Mr. Vassar received his Bachelor of Science degree at V.P.I. where he participated in the military practices. He did graduate work here at Longwood where he received his Master of Science.

Mr. Vassar was an officer in the Second Infantry Combat Division during World War II. He landed on Normandy Beach on D plus one (the day after D-Day) and was one of the two original officers that went through the entire campaign of the Second Battalion of the Ninth Infantry. During the war he served through five major campaigns. He received the Purple Heart and the Bronze Star awards. After the war he retired as captain.

Upon returning home Mr. Vassar accepted a position at Cumberland High School where he taught for fifteen years. Following that he was principal at the same school for two years. From 1950 until now he was supervising student teachers from V.P.I.

When asked about his hobbies, Mr. Vassar immediately answered, "Baseball," but then added that he liked most all sports. He does quite a lot of hunting and fishing. In 1942 Mr. Vassar made the All-State Baseball team as pitcher on the V.P.I. State Championship team. Now he does some part time scouting for a major league team.

Mr. Vassar married the former Susie Bradner of Charlotte Court House. The Vassars now have two sons, ages sixteen and twelve, and one daughter, age nineteen.

Mr. Vassar is active in his community as well as in various educational organizations. He is an active member in the Virginia Education Association and a past president of the Cumberland Ruritan Club. He is also on the Cumberland Rescue Squad. Mr. Vassar has been chairman of the March of Dimes for seven years. He is now a member of the Baptist church in Cumberland.

Bloodmobile To Visit Campus For Second Year

By Maria Grant

Under the chairmanship of George Brubaker and sponsored by Alpha Sigma Tau sorority the Red Cross bloodmobile will visit the Longwood campus tomorrow. The success of the visit depends on the interest and cooperation of the student body.

Have you signed up to donate blood? If not, are you planning to help the bloodmobile unit in some way?

Remember that every pint of blood means helping to save another life. You've seen the posters all around the campus. You've heard the announcements in the dining hall. But has the message really sunk in?

Special thanks go to Mr. Penney for his fine efforts in contributing most of the food and coffee to the bloodmobile unit, and to Betty Wright and Zeta Tau Alpha sorority for their cooperation.

Frosh Production Uses

"Foiled Again" As Theme

The Freshman Class is presenting a melodrama, Foiled Again, with the characteristic villain, hero, and heroine. As is traditional the villain takes the heroine for the mortgage, and hero rescues her. Lee Larkin and Sena Bowden, Production Co. - Chairmen, Ann Quafin, Judy Bateman and dPat Perego wrote the script and are

LC Professors Attend Study Of Certification

Longwood professors attended a meeting in Charlottesville on February 11. The meeting was for the purpose of studying teacher preparation in English and related fields.

Representing Longwood were Dr. Simonini, chairman of the committee on English Language; Dr. Sprague, a member of the committee on Literature; Dr. Schlegel is a member of the committee on composition. On the committee of speech, drama, and Journalism are Mr. Wiley and Dr. Lockwood. Mr. Gresham is a member of the committee on teaching English.

The first meeting of these committees was held last November. Each of the committee studies the competencies which are needed by English majors in specific areas. They then drew up statements concerning courses and semester hours needed to assure competent development in these fields.

On February 11 the committees met for the second time. They went over reports from the previous meetings and attempted to come to some agreement concerning desirable preparation of English teachers and teachers in related fields. It is hoped by the committees that this will influence development of new English certification requirements in the next few years.

LC Exceeds Bloodmobile Quota

Forty-seven pints over the quota was the result of the bloodmobile in Tabb Rec on Thursday, February 6.

This was general reaction of most Longwood students who donated blood last Thursday in Tabb rec. Sara set by the Red Cross was transcended. Of 132 pints donated, 110 were by Longwood students, 15 by Hampden-Sydney students, 5 by Longwood faculty members, and 2 by Farnville residents. Work on the bloodmobile started with the distribution of permission slips to all students under age twenty-one. With the return of the permission slips began the job of calculating the number of donors and setting up committees. Students Direct Each donor was shown where to go by a student hostess. Student typists filled out cards. The donor was then turned over to one of several Red Cross nurses. Following the donation a hostess showed the donor to the canteen, where sandwiches, cakes, coffee, and cookies were served. A wait of 30 minutes was compulsory before leaving. As the student in charge, Connie delegated responsibilities and saw that they were met. Of great help to her in this task were Betty Wright and the members of Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority. Equally indispensable was Bill Brewer of Hampden-Sydney. All work connected with the bloodmobile, except that which must be done by registered nurses, was handled by students.

Sponsored by Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority and under the direction of Junior, Connie Birch, the eighty-five pint quota

Cast, Crews Chosen For Goldsmith Comedy

The Longwood Players announce the cast and crew chiefs for the first play of the semester, Oliver Goldsmith's "She Sings to Conquer" to be presented March 12, 13 and 14 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Longwood's role in the tentative cast are Kate Catron, a sophomore, as Kate Hardcastle; Marilyn Kilgore, a senior, as Constance; Courtney Fox, a freshman, as Mrs. Hardcastle; Mildred Grayson, a freshman, as Bet Bouncer; Helena Mast, a freshman, as Jenny Tawdry; and Champe Arendall, another freshman, as the Female Servant.

In the male roles are the Hampden-Sydney Jouleux, as David Reiver as Marlow, Joe Whitte as Hastings, David Colson as Mr. Hardcastle, Mike Couchman as Sir Charles and the Landlord, Ed Baker as Tony Lumpkin, Bill McGuire as Digory and Dick Muggins, Curt Steele as Jack Slang and Roger, Berkeley Pemberton as Amind-chased-circuit television system for financial aid for the '64-'65 session are now available.

Crew chiefs for this first play are Bobbi Rice, Lights; Karen Engdahl, Sound; Marcia Catoe, Properties; Allene Tuglie, Scenery; Donna Weatherly, Make-Up; Nancy Woltz, Publicity; Betsy MacCorkle, House; and Shirley Gunn, Costumes.

Technical director is Paul O'Neill, and assistant director is Marcia Siegfried. Dr. Patton Lockwood is directing the play, with Mr. David Wiley coordinating the technical aspects.

The second spring play, Enid Bagnold's "The Chalk Garden," was cast at the same time, although performance is not until April 15, 16, and 18. Starring in the roles are Mary Lynn Lander is Madrigal, Mike Couchman as Matiland, Heather Maugruder as

Surface Directs New TV System For Education

This semester brings to the Longwood campus Mr. Paul Surface, who will direct the new closed-circuit television system here at the college. Mr. Surface comes from Norfolk, Virginia where he was teaching in areas of math, science, and electronics.

Installation of the equipment for the television circuit began on Monday, February 10. Tentative plans call for instructional use involving closed circuit television to include the departments of psychology and speech. It is also planned that the circuit will be used extensively for observation relating to the student teaching program and education courses.

Mr. Surface will direct the programming and operations in the control room. The television circuit is expected to be in operation in about four weeks.

All those who wish to apply for State Teacher's Scholarships should apply at once in admitted office. Applications for financial aid for the '64-'65 session are now available.

White Manages Business End Of May Day

Anna White has been chosen business manager of May Day. Anna White is a senior majoring in business and certifying in English. Anna is from Merry Hill, North Carolina but graduated from Windsor High School, in Windsor, North Carolina.

Voices Activities

At Longwood Ann has been Baptist Student Union enrollment chairman her sophomore year. Her junior year she was treasurer for Phi Beta Lambda, a business organization on campus and was vice-president of Pi Omega Psi, the honorary business fraternity. This year she is state reporter of Phi Beta Lambda and president of Pi Omega Psi. Anna also is business manager for the Colonnade this year and senior representative for the Virginians. Anna is a member of Pi Delta Epsilon, the Student Education Association, the Honors Council, and Alpha Gamma Delta. Her junior year she was recording secretary for Alpha Gamma Delta and is corresponding secretary this year. In addition Anna has participated in May Day and Circus for the past four years.

REW Concludes With Production Of 'Last Supper'

Religious Emphasis Week will conclude tomorrow night with the presentation of the Rev. Mr. Ernest K. Emurian's dramatization of The Last Supper in Jarman Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Tonight an informal group will meet at 9:45 in the Y Lounge to discuss creativity in all fields. Featured in one of the programs was Miss Nancy Leitch who discussed art with Rev. Emurian. Rev. Emurian of the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Church is the speaker for this year's REW.

Relationships of religion and dance dominated the opening evening of Religious Emphasis Week. Monday night, the members of Orpheus, under the direction of Mrs. Emily K. Landrum, and students in the current dance classes performed with the assistance of the Chorus, under the direction of Miss Pat Reilly.

Explanatory annotations cited before each composition clarified the universality of understanding movement, gesture, focus, and symbolic form within art forms.

A processional opened the Monday night program. The second work related the affinities of song and dance.

The final work followed the vocal rendition of the Lord's Prayer by Mr. Edward Hull. Dance scenes reflected aspects of college life as those may directly relate to prayer.

Tonight at last night the Rev. Emurian will lecture with his piano on "Heroes and Heroines of the Hymnal."

Tomorrow night's presentation will be the highlight of the week. "A Living Dramatization of the Last Supper," written by the Rev. Emurian was first produced in the Sanctuary of the Elm Methodist Church in Portsmouth.

R-MWC Hears Brumfield Speak At Biology Meet

Dr. Robert T. Brumfield, Longwood professor of biology, was the speaker at the Biology Seminar at Randolph-Macon Women's College on Tuesday. His topic was "The Control of Growth in Plants," a summary of the results of his recent experimentation.

Dr. Brumfield has been engaged in research on this subject for the last eight years. This research has been supported by the Atomic Energy Commission and grants from the National Science Foundation to the amount of $85,000.

The research in which Dr. Brumfield has engaged is part of the national program of experimentation to learn more about cancer. In cancer, cells composing body tissues go berserk, divide over and over and crowding out normal cells; thus, stifling vital functions. Since some plants have cells similar to human cells, Dr. Brumfield has used the timely root to learn more about the control of cell growth and division. Specifically, the research is a hunt for the biochemical mechanism that controls cell division.

The AEC has been particularly interested in Dr. Brumfield's growing root cell with ultra violet rays. He discovered that 2,6-dichloro-o-hydroxyacetic acid protected the root and it continued its normal course of growth.

To Go Or Not To Go

Compulsory assemblies must go! Today in a Longwood College of 1400 students, required attendance at assemblies is an anachronism.

The first and most obvious reason for not requiring students to attend assemblies is that the seating capacity of Jarman Hall will not accommodate the entire student body. Is there a sound reason for requiring one student to attend assemblies while making it optional for another to go? We think not.

Secondly we must try to determine the purpose of assemblies. A most important potential opportunity they present is to broaden our cultural, intellectual, and entertainment horizons. But the program should be an opportunity not a requirement.

By making the assemblies an opportunity, students who are mature enough to realize their worth will attend them enthusiastically. The loss of not attending a good program is personal to the student.

Optional assemblies will eliminate for the most part the lethargic students who find the programs soporific. It is derogatory to Longwood's reputation to present a distinguished scholar with an audience of nodding, yawning, apathetic heads. We learned from a student who introduced a recent speaker that there were several people in the audience who were sprawled out most obviously asleep. To insult distinguished visitors is not a purpose of assemblies, but by requiring uninterested students to attend, this may occur.

By allowing assembly attendance to be optional, poor programs will not attract good assemblies of students. Thus the level of programs will be raised. More thought will have to be put into making them appealing enough to draw large audiences. Then, instead of "warm bodies," as a freshman expressed it, those in the audience will be interested and attentive.

How do you, the student who is required to attend assemblies, feel? The Rotunda invites you to express your opinion on this matter, so that those in a policy making position can see the wishes of the student body.

On Selection Of Editors

The Publications Board is presently discussing the adequacy of the present system for selection of editors and business managers. The board would like the students to consider the advantages and disadvantages of the present system and make any suggestions which they feel will improve the quality of Longwood publications.

Under the present system a publications board is set up by the Legislative Board or Student Government. The Publications Board is composed of the editors-in-chief and business managers of the three college publications and a chairman elected by and representing the student body. Each editor and business manager submits the name of the one person whom she feels is best qualified for the position. The board then votes on this recommendation. This person then becomes the new editor or business manager.

The consideration of all student criticism or comments concerning publications is one of the most important functions of the board. The publications are STUDENT publications and therefore the board should represent the students' views on publications. More interest and responsibility for the publications should be shown by the student body.

Lewman Rippey

Chairman of Publications Board

Lankford Answers Editor's Questions

President Francis G. Lankford, Jr., recently answered several questions about education and academic freedom posed by the Rotunda.

In response to the question, "Why is the state involved in education?" Dr. Lankford quotes Thomas Jefferson's saying, "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, it expects what never has been and never will be." Further he says that private education has never been able to adequately educate the citizenry for full national development.

Today because of technology in our modern society the need for professionally and technically trained manpower knows no bounds. Dr. Lankford relates that trained personnel in underdeveloped countries are necessary for improvement of the economy.

Answering questions as to how liberal state institutions should be in presenting opportunities to learn about sundry points of view regarding religion and politics, Dr. Lankford cited examples from Longwood's policy.

First he addressed himself to religion. He pointed to courses in Bible literature and comparative religion as elective academic opportunities. "They offer our students an opportunity to study religion as a social force without promoting any particular doctrine or without challenging the religious beliefs of any student." He also recalled speakers discussing the Jewish faith and the comments on beliefs of Moslems by our recent Pakistani visitor. But he says, "At no time . . . must we permit these to become missionary efforts."

Next Dr. Lankford considered freedom to learn and discuss political systems and points of view. He says that students are encouraged to debate about candidates and issues in the national elections.

Pointing out the recent introduction of the elective comparative government course, Dr. Lankford says, "Here students may learn in the academic atmosphere of the classroom and library about the various systems."

Honors Program Lures Four Longwood Seniors

By Barbara Melton

The honors program was begun at Longwood in 1930 for the benefit of those students who wish to continue intensive study in a particular field under individual instruction. The student must be enrolled with the Honors Committee for two semesters, and upon completion of the paper, she will receive six semester hours credit. If the candidate passes an oral examination she will graduate with honors in her field.

Currently enrolled under this plan are four girls: Jo-Ann Cartwright, Betty Ann Rex, Jeanne Whitaker Claybough, and Betty Ann Atkinson.

Jo-Ann Cartwright is making a study of Andrew Johnson. The title of her paper is "Andrew Johnson; Political Incompetent." She maintains that "Andrew Johnson was totally misled with the highest principles and goals. He concentrated on cultivating the disaffected elements of the South and ended by alienating himself from those who could help him most. He was the politician's dream refuted."

Jo-Ann has gone through extensive research which has included five reels of microfilm on loan from the Library of Congress which included some 2,000 of Johnson's letters and other documents. Reading was made difficult because these were films of Johnson's original correspondence.

Last summer she spent two weeks in Washington, D. C., where she worked every day in the Library of Congress. She has already submitted a rough copy of her paper to the Honors Board, and will later make two revisions.

Betty Ann Rex is pursuing a study of the topic, Jefferson and music. Her work will concern "a historical and musicological study of Thomas Jefferson's associations with music and musicians during the early period of his life up to his journey in Europe; including his personal training, performance, and musical experience; and an identification of his music as to publication, date, and time of ownership."

She had one major problem in that a slave accidentally burned about two thirds of Jefferson's private music collection, thus seriously limiting her original source of information. Nevertheless she plans to submit her first draft sometime before spring vacation.

A third study is being made by Jeanne Whitaker Claybough in the field of biology. Her study will be a "comparative analysis of amino acids in Tetrahymena Pyralis (proteus) under starvation and feeding conditions. Cells in the starved state are known to conjugate with cells of opposite mating types. A qualitative difference in amino acid composition under the above conditions could be significant in supporting theoretical evidence that conjugation in this animal is initiated by a proteinaceous mating type substance."

Her main problem involved washing the cells to remove the media. The mortality rate was

Adventures Of Teacher - Watcher Inspire Conversion, Salvation Story

By Thomas C. Brock
(University of Virginia)

On October 18, 1963, I approached Central High School for the first time. I was on my first assignment for the secret organization known in code as Ed. Psych. 387. I noted the building with care. It was red brick, compliments of the federal government, vintage 1939. Standing on the steps leading up to the edifice were what I presumed to be students. These students were of various shapes, sizes, sexes, and, much to my dismay, colors. I surmised, "This is the learning situation in its basic form, a large building filled with people." I started up the steps and then I stopped. I removed my "Riskover for God" button from my lapel, stuffed it into my pocket, and proceeded on my way.

Editor's Note

U. Va. is known for many things. From reading this article we know that at least two people there have seen senses of humor: the student who had the audacity to submit this as his classroom observation paper for an educational psychology course, and his instructor who appreciated it and gave him a good grade.

Further, Miss A did not stick rigidly with the curriculum of the course, but instead she attempted to relate facts to students' own experiences rather than from the facts into the students' minds. "But what of the facts?" I remember wondering to myself. Then one day Miss A played a recording of a play, "Can't they read?" I wondered, Under the guise of being scientific in using audio aids Miss A was obviously attempting to destroy individual initiative. I expected that any minute she might even show a movie of all things.

Miss A did other things which were not in accord with our late-grade drill-masters: she had the students read aloud poetry of their own choosing, not recite but read.

I noticed that in this fifth period class the students had really been taken in by all this; they even volunteered answers to the questions. They seemed almost as if they had something of importance to say. The really unfortunate thing was that Miss A thought that what they had to say was important.

The sixth period class was not quite the same as the fifth period class. Miss A tried to use the same methods with this class, but without much success. In the sixth period there were few volunteers. The class was ripe for a good, old-fashioned autocratic teacher; but Miss A would have none of that.

Miss A was no slacker as a cultivator of democratic attitudes. In this class, instead of

Letter Praises Girls Involved In Bloodmobile

Dear Editor:

For the two years in a row the bloodmobile's visit to the College has exceeded its quota. In achieving this success the students have demonstrated as they have on other occasions, that they can carry through a difficult project in a responsible and competent manner. The bloodmobile could not have been a success without the cooperation of many individuals but a special commendation must be given to Connie Birch and her committee who attended to every detail and made the program the success that it was.

Sincerely,

Adler Performance Prompts Criticism Of Symphony

By Betty Ann Rex

The Baltimore Symphony brought to the Longwood campus an unusually fine program of orchestral music last Thursday evening. Under the direction of Peter Herman Adler the orchestra offered a finished performance of unquestionably high caliber.

After the usual cacophony of warming up, the musicians began with an animated performance of the "Overture to Oberon," an opera by Weber. The group immediately displayed its qualities of well-defined lyric melody and ensemble precision. The detailed program notes contributed much to the audience's enjoyment of this performance and those which followed.

For the familiar Beethoven "Pastoral," Mr. Adler laid down his baton in favor of the more fluid movement of the hands. Again, the clarity of texture and delicate perfection of the solo was perceived. Students who have listened to this work on records certainly profited from this live performance, watching as the conductor cued each section, and noting the special contribution that each section made to the total sound. The process which the composer went through in his act of creation is much more evident in a live performance, and the Artist Series has given us a rare opportunity to hear a professional rendition of the best of musical art.

Mr. Adler set a leisurely tempo for the Beethoven which added to the finesse and beauty of the work. This live performance also showed a feature which is not present on records: the between-movement break and tune-up! This brought needed relief, however, to audience and performers alike.

The full power of the orchestra, complete with added percussion and harp, was bent upon the finale, Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." The artists with their instruments seemed to paint the pictures before the audience and bring them alive. The newly-hatched chicks came out of the frame and ran and danced distractedly, and old Baba-Yaga was most fearful. The glory of the Great Gates at Kiev thrilled every heart; the Baltimore Symphony spared no pains in filling our auditorium with Moussorgsky's full sonorous majesty.

Prolonged applause induced Mr. Adler to offer two encores, Strauss' "Perpetuo Mobile" and Dvorak's "Slavonic Dance No. 7." The evening was a successful one for the Baltimore Symphony, and indeed a memorable one for Longwood and Farmville.

ARE YOU KIDDING ME?!

Would we kid you? No! Beatenants has struck out the final, Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." The artists with their instruments seemed to paint the pictures before the audience and bring them alive. The newly-hatched chicks came out of the frame and ran and danced distractedly, and old Baba-Yaga was most fearful. pressions reveal Longwood's obvious reactions to a nation's newest craze. Love those Beatles!

Classroom Observations Cue Sound Conclusions

It was not until my second or third visit that I noticed the significance of the desks at which the students sat. These desks were not uncomfortable, but they were not comfortable either. They were scientifically designed to cause the proper tension - level for maximum learning efficiency. "One cannot learn as much as he should if he is too comfortable," I remember Dr. Z saying to a Psychology 100 class. "But on the other hand," he continued, "too much tension can be even more detrimental than not enough tension."

As I thought of this, I also thought, "But psychologists aren't really scientists, especially educational psychologists; they are pseudo-scientists engaged in deceiving each other."

I was convinced that the students were wasting their time. Not one of them would learn anything of importance from Miss A, of that there was no doubt. They might learn to talk to each other and to get along with each other, but they would learn no facts. A generation of semi-literate seemed inevitable.

Where my downfall began, I cannot say with certainty; but I shall try to retrace the happenings leading up to it.

It may have started the day I ventured out to Miss A's class and into Miss B's class. Miss B lectured and put notes on the blackboard for the class to memorize. "A good teacher," thought, "Maybe there's still hope." But then Miss B asked questions about notes she had given previously. There was a little response to most of her questions even when she called on students by name. If a student should be brave enough to answer in class, he had best be right, or else he would surely be severely reprimanded for not doing the assignment, or for being "just plain stupid."

It wasn't difficult to understand why the students took no interest in the class. "Perhaps," I thought to myself, "there is something to this business of relating facts to what the students already know." Then I bit my tongue.

As time went on, I began to notice that what the students had to say was not all that chattering. Some of the students were quick and witty. What they had to say made sense. One student particularly stood out. She was extremely outgoing. She usually won her point, often to the chagrin of Miss A. "Perhaps Miss A isn't trying to destroy individualism, but rather she is trying to encourage it," I said to myself and again bit my tongue.

The final phase of my downfall I recognize. Miss A gave tests and assigned papers which called for the ability not only to relate facts to one another and to daily life, but also to know the facts themselves. After reading a paper or two, I was amazed to find that the students actually got the facts right. Miraculously, they came to reasonable conclusions based on the facts. I no longer felt the urge to bit my tongue because of what I was thinking.

On January 16, 1964, I walked out of Central High School for what I expect to be the last time. I am convinced that Miss A is the teacher one would have in mind whenever he speaks of a "good teacher."

And somewhere flowing with the other trash in the sewers of Charlottesville is a "Rickover for God" button.

Landford Gives Reply to Queries About Freedom

In answer to the question should students be permitted to invite speakers who advocate unorthodox views (such as communism) should not be excluded as invited speakers. "For we must remain free to learn about the threat which communism offers," said Dr. Landford.

Because communism seeks to overthrow our government violently, and the communist party is outlawed in the United States . . . we will not tolerate speakers on our campus who are apostles of communism . . . seeking converts to their doctrine. Such persons are quite likely to be well trained in persuasive techniques and superficially convincing.

"Together, students, faculty, and administration will continue to cherish our freedom to learn. We will not be tolerant of any individual or group among us who seeks to endanger this freedom through intemperance and superficially considered actions."

Poll Tax Restrictions Cause Virginia Alarm

by Jo-Ann Cartwright

Seventeen months ago, a twenty-fourth amendment was submitted to the states in order to secure the requisite ratification of three-fourths of the states. Recently, the ratification of this anti-poll tax amendment became law following its approval by the legislature of South Dakota. In essence, the amendment states that "The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other Federal election . . . shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax." Only five states are affected by this amendment — Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Texas, and Virginia.

To contend with the new situation, Virginia adopted a substitute measure for Federal elections to go into effect February 19 which does not demand a poll tax as a voting prerequisite. Instead, the voter must file a certificate, properly witnessed, of residence designating his specific address which must, like the poll tax, be paid, be received by the city or county treasurer not less than sixty days preceding general election day. Those having paid the poll tax as a local voting privilege are not required to file such a certificate.

Doubt, Controversy
Doubt and controversy have been the dominant responses to this substitute. Opponents denounce it as violating the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment. To substantiate this, they claim that payment of a poll tax does not represent, in view of possible migration, evidence of residence as strictly as does the new certificate system therefore resulting in a denial of equal protection.

Supporters of the substitute view it as, in the words of Governor Harrison, "an orderly means by which the citizens of Virginia who so desire might register and vote in federal elections without payment of poll taxes." Additionally, he said that the measure would "maintain the purity and sanctity of Virginia elections and the relative simplicity of registering and voting in this state."

Undemocratic?
Historically, the poll tax has been surrounded by controversy. Frequently, it has been denounced as unfair (i.e., undemocratic). Its very presence has suggested a lack of faith in the ability of the masses to govern themselves. Instead, it has required the manifestation of interest as a voting prerequisite thereby limiting the electorate to a better informed and more concerned group of voters. To the average American, the tax itself, $1.50, was of little consequence; only in a few, extreme, isolated cases could such a pittance sum have proved a serious deterrent to voting.

The United States, as is evidenced by its idealistic congressmen, feeds upon the promulgation of its myths. The greatest of these myths is democracy itself. It must be the majority of whom are without concern for the perpetuation of the democratic system. They care only for a governmental indulgence of their capricious whims.

Reality from Myth?
Consequently, the question goes far deeper than that of the poll tax. In reality, it is one of whether or not we can risk destruction resulting from the excesses of the masses or one effected by a denial of the myth which has been perpetrated as eventual reality. It must be remembered that our government has survived and prospered upon a foundation of checks and balances not only in framework but in relation between itself and its electorate. The question is not are we democratic enough, but are we politically mature enough to turn a myth into reality?

She states that she has learned much about art and philosophy while making this study. She completed her paper and submitted the first draft to the Honor Board about a week ago.

Needless to say, these girls are approaching their oral examinations with nothing short of terror. They will be open to questions from all angles of their subject.

From The Board

New election proceedings will be put into effect with the coming major-minor elections. For the elections to be successful, it is important that each student know what the new proceedings are and then participate in them.

According to the by-laws all nominations will be made through petitions drawn up by the Election Committee and submitted by the student body. Petition blanks will be given out to all those interested in nominating or supporting someone for an office. The petitions are to be filled in giving the required information and then turned in to the Election Committee, which will check them and see that the person is qualified to run according to the requirements set up by the Activities Committee.

The petitions will then be posted so that students may sign the petitions of those they would like to see run for the office. A student may not sign more than three petitions for any one office. After a given length of time the petitions will be removed and the names counted and checked by the Election Committee. All persons whose petitions contained names of ten (10) per cent of the student body will be placed on a primary ballot. The students will vote in the primary election narrowing the ballot to two candidates. A general election will be held to determine who is to fill the office.

Both the major and minor elections will be handled in the same manner, but at different times — the major elections being first. In the case of the major elections, the petitions for each office (presidents of the five major organizations) will be put up on separate days with informal meetings arranged the petitions are posted. Students will be given the chance at these meetings to meet and talk with those whose names appear on the petitions.

Following is a list of the different events of the election and when they will take place:

- February 10—Petitions for major and minor offices given out to students
- February 20—All petitions for major officers must be in to Election Committee.
- February 24—Posting of petitions for major offices to begin
- February 24—Monday: President of Legislative Board
- February 25—Tuesday: Chairman of Judicial Board
- February 26—Wednesday, President of Y. W. C. A.
- February 27—President of House Council
- February 28—Friday: President of Athletic Association

These petitions will come down one week following the day they were posted.

- March 7—All petitions for major elections will be down
- March 9—All petitions for minor elections must be in
- March 10—Primary election for major officers.
- March 12—Election of major officers.
- March 13—Petitions for minor offices posted.
- March 20—Petitions are removed and checked.
- March 24—Primary elections for minor offices.
- March 26—Election of minor officers.

Hull To Present Popular Concert In LC Assembly

On Tuesday, February 25, Mr. Edward G. Hull will present a concert of popular music for the 1:00 assembly. Mr. Hull is the instructor of voice here at Longwood.

Mr. Hull's program will avoid the classics and include such popular numbers as "The Roving Gambler," "Some Enchanted Evening," "Without A Song," "Oh, What A Beautiful Morning," "That Lucky Old Sun," "Sweet Song," and "Deep In My Heart, Dear."

Accompanying Mr. Hull on the piano will be Dr. Sterling Adams. During the intermission, Dr. Adams will play George Gershwin's "Prelude."

Mr. Hull who came to the Longwood campus in September is here under a one year appointment. Next year he will work on his doctorate at Florida State University.

Students Enter Annual Exhibit Of College Art

Longwood College for the first time has entered the third annual College Art Exhibit in Williamsburg. The exhibit will be held from February 24-March 13. Prizes will be given for the best in the exhibit: first place will be $25; second place-$15; third place-$10.

Longwood has seven entries in the exhibit. "Ionic" by Judy Woodyard and "Figure" by Melanie Wilkes are both oils. Anne Waldo entitled her opaque water color "Punking Clockwise." Two woodcuts, "Les Deux Amis" by Judy Woodyard and "Robin" by Melanie Wilkes, and "Superficial" by Howard Williams, and "Nude with Pink and Mauve" which are serigraphs, have also been entered.

Longwood, H-S Students Begin Groundwork For Newly-Proposed Summer Stock Theater

By BILL MACGUIRE

From Hampden-Sydney Times

Southside Virginia may have a summer stock theater this summer. Plans are now being made for the opening of a summer playhouse in Drakes Branch, Virginia, located about 30 miles from Farmville. The company would consist of six men and women, all students of either Longwood or Hampden-Sydney.

The group, which includes Betty Anne Atkinson, Mike Couchman, Ed Baker, Pat Newton, Dave Relyea and Bill MacGuire, hopes to present a different play every week for the duration of the summer.

Betty Anne Atkinson has performed in seven plays during her years at Longwood. She is particularly remembered for her portrayal of Mrs. Smith in The Bad Soprano, for which she won the Best Actress Award for the 1961-1962 season. In Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew, Betty Anne took a relatively small servant's role and turned it into a hilarious show-stopper.

The apex of Miss Atkinson's career at Longwood, however, came in December of 1963 when she did a truly brilliant job as Mrs. Alving in Ibsen's Ghosts. Her performance has been referred to as one of the greatest

Frosh Production

The freshmen class will present "Pulled Again," a melodrama with the characteristic villain, hero, and heroine in Jarman Auditorium this Friday night at eight o'clock. An admission of twenty-five cents will be charged per ticket.

Practice Begins For Spring Play

March 12, 13, 14

Rehearsals are underway for "She Stoops to Conquer," the next play to be given by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jouglers on March 12, 13, and 14. It is an 18th Century comedy by Oliver Goldsmith.

Principal characters involved in the play are Mr. and Mrs. Hardcastle, their daughter, Kate, Tony Lumpkin, son of Mrs. Hardcastle by a former marriage, and two young men, Marlow and Hastings.

The play begins with Sir Charles proposing a match between his son, Marlow, and Kate Hardcastle. Marlow and his friend Hastings set off to visit the Hardcastles, but become lost en route. They are given directions and finally arrive at the home of the Hardcastles thinking it is a neighboring inn. The humor of the play centers around all the misunderstandings caused by this mistake and the ones that follow.

Cast members consist of Mr. Hardcastle, David Colson; Mrs. Hardcastle, Courtney Fox; Marlow, David Relyea; Hastings, Joe Whitely; Kate, Kay Chaiton, and Constance, Marilyn Kilgore. Others appearing in the play are Ed Baker, Mike Couchman, Bob Blueford, Berkeley Pemberton, Curt Steele, Bill McGuire, Champ Arendale, Mildred Gwainney and Jenny Pawdry.

accomplishments at Longwood in years. Betty Anne is currently student - teaching at Randolph-Henry High School and directing Jean Bartine's one-act play The Claw for presentation at Randolph - Henry. When asked about the theater, Betty Anne replied, "I'm terribly excited, and with a lot of hard work, I have faith we can do it."

Mike Couchman is an old veteran of the Longwood stage, having participated in almost every play performed there during his stay at Hampden-Sydney. His characterization of Creon in Jean Anouilh's adaptation of Sophocles' Antigone was superb and brought a note from the director which read, "fine job, I couldn't have done it any better myself." This role was also responsible for Mike's receiving the Best Actor Award for the 1961-1962 season. His powerful part as Akin, the fanatically devout slave in Tolstoy's Power of Darkness, seemed to dominate the stage, and lent an air of professional intensity to a college production. For this and two other roles, Mike won the Best Actor Award for the 1962-1963 season. Mike is currently involved with a small role in Goldsmith's She Stoops to Conquer, but will once again step into the lead this spring by playing Mailand in The Glass Ga-

Thompson Displays Cubistic Art In Exhibition Room Of Library

Now on display in the exhibit room of the Lancaster Library are paintings by Mr. Lewis O. Thompson. Mr. Thompson's paintings will be on display until the end of February. One of Mr. Thompson's paintings will be purchased by Longwood and it will be added to the college's collection of paintings by Virginia artists.

Mrs. Janice Lemen, one of Longwood's art instructors, said of Mr. Thompson's works, "Mr. Thompson's paintings can be classified stylistically as synthetic cubism in the tradition of Picasso, Braque, and Gris. Mr. Thompson confined still life shapes to the center of the picture and surrounded the center by planes and shapes which grew out of both the back and foreground materials." Born in Augusta, Georgia, Mr. Thompson received his Bachelor of Fine Arts and Masters degrees from the University of Georgia. Mr. Thompson plans to take a leave of absence from the faculty of Hollins College next year in order to visit Florence for a year.

Shrew, The Power of Darkness, and Major Barbara in her comparatively short stay at Longwood. Her interpretation of Uncle in Simpson's A Resounding Tinkle was extremely well received and for her other roles in the 1962-1963 season, Pat became one of the few freshmen at Longwood invited to join Alpha Psi Omega, the national honorary dramatic fraternity.

David Relyea, a sophomore at Hampden-Sydney, has also been active in the theater during his college career. By virtue of his excellent roles in The Taming of the Shrew, Power of Darkness, and Ghosts, Dave was initiated into Alpha Psi Omega early in 1964.

Dave spent the summer of 1963 doing summer stock work with the company at Northeast North Carolina. During this time he took several lead roles and gained a great deal of valuable experience working with lights, sets, makeup and the great many technical aspects of the modern theater. Dave is now playing Marlow, the male lead in She Stoops to Conquer, the winter production of the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jouglers.

Bill MacGuire, also a sophomore, has participated in The Taming of the Shrew, Power of

Hackney Heads Plans, Names Committees

Reigning over the May Day festivities will be Queen Bobbi Cadow. May Court is not a new experience for Bobbi after representing the class of '64 both her sophomore and junior years.

Bobbi is an Elementary Education major from Fredericksburg, Consuming most of her time at present is student teaching in the third grade at Drakes Branch Elementary School.

A member of Delta Zeta Social Society, Bobbi has also been very active in class functions. All four years found her working hard on Circus and numerous class projects.

The queen's court consists of Lynn Osteen as Maid of Honor, Marlene Armour, Suzanne Ballard, Margie Barnard, Janice Blowe, Meredith Cize, Kathy Dodge, Evelyn Gray, Amy Haley, Barbara Lewis, Wanda O'Neil, Gail Paige, Connie Parkins, Mary Kay Richerson, and Carole Shirewidge.

Chairman for the May Day activities is Judi Hackney. A resident of Nansemond County, Virginia, Judi is presently student teaching at Drakes Branch Elementary School in Charlotte Court House. She is a graduate of Chuckatuck High School. Most of Judi's work in the past years at Longwood has been the invaluable behind-the-scenes jobs on class activities and Circus. She has also been a member of the Rotunda Business Staff and the Colonnade Circulation Staff. Judi plans to do her future teaching in the Tidewater area.

February Grads Receive Degrees In Varied Fields

Twenty-five Longwood College students completed the requirements for their degrees at the end of this semester.

Among the February graduates were Cynthia Ann Alcock, Hampton, an Elementary Education major; Wanda Leigh Barnett, Charlottesville, a History and Social Science major; Jean Elizabeth Brown, Washington, D. C., a Secondary Education major; Barbara Jane Dorn, Portsmouth, an Elementary Education major; Patsy Elizabeth Hudson, North Garden, an English and History major; Stacy Anne Jackson, Charlottesville, a History and Social Science major; Irene Osbourne, Lauterbach, Richmond, an Elementary Education major.

Judy Melcher Little, Norfolk, a Secondary Education major; Lucy Lee Oliver, Derrick City, Pennsylvania, an Elementary Education major; Joan Carolyn Pritchett, Newport News, an Elementary Education major; Bonnie Underwood, Robertson, Virginia, a Music Education major; Joyce Lake Robinson, Stephens City, Virginia, a Business Education major; Wistar Laird Rochelle, Lynchburg, a French major, also received their degrees.

Other mid-semester graduates are Kathryn Josephine Shelton, Roanoke, an Elementary Education major; Judith Beck Simmons, Staunton, an Elementary Education major; Robert Lee Taylor, Farmville, a Business Education major; Betty Sue Thompson, Staunton, a Business Education major; Barbara Perdue Waddell, an Elementary Education major; Mary McCraw, Covington, an Elementary Education major; Carol Patricia Benton, Norfolk, a Business Education major; Terry Hogue, Charlottesville, a Secondary Education major; Evelyn Clark Woods, Richmond, Elementary Education major; and Patricia Pinkston Wooliam, Williamsburg, an English major.

Committees for May Day have been chosen and are now making preparations for the celebration in May. Those committees and their chairmen are: May Court — Wanda Old and Amy Haley; Escorts — Linda Bassford and Lee Criss; Script — Pat Wallace, Betty Ann Atkinson, and Harriet Anderson; Publicity — Peggy Whitaker and Carol Gibson; Programs — Doris Harrison and Martha Muir; Music — Betty Ann Rex; Dance — Joyce Waldburger, Joyce Neal, and Diane Delt; Costumes — Carole Hage and Joy Smith; Scenery — Sandy Waugh and Tootsie Kay; Sound — Connie Birch.

Judi urges the entire student body to help with May Day whenever and wherever they can. Judi has pledged that she "will do the best she can" and with everyone's support the May DAY WILL BE A SUCCESS.

Soto Addresses Macon Society In Open Session

Dr. Oswaldo Soto will be the guest speaker tonight at the meeting of the Nathaniel Macon Society. Dr. Soto's topic will be "The Effect of Cuban Communism on the World." A question and answer session will follow.

The meeting will be held in Ruffner 318 at 7:00 p.m. The program will be presented by the committee on Latin America. The members of this committee are Joyce Bartley, Connie Parkins, Ginny Petty, and Sandra Jamison.

The Macon Society was formed to create interest among the Longwood students in current world affairs. In order to do this the Society presents speakers, films, and programs on various world events.

This will be an open meeting and the student body is invited to attend.

Adler Performance Prompts Criticism Of Symphony

By Betty Ann Rex

The Baltimore Symphony brought to the Longwood campus an unusually fine program of orchestral music last Thursday evening. Under the direction of Peter Herman Adler the orchestra offered a finished performance of unquestionably high caliber.

After the usual cacophony of warming up, the musicians began with an animated performance of the "Overture to Oberon," an opera by Weber. The group immediately displayed its qualities of well-defined lyric melody and ensemble precision. The detailed program notes contributed much to the audience's enjoyment of this performance and those which followed.

For the familiar Beethoven "Pastoral," Mr. Adler laid down his baton in favor of the more "Lute movement of the hands. Again, the clarity of texture and delicate perfection of the solos was perceived. Students who have listened to this work on records certainly profited from this live performance, watching as the conductor cue each section, and noting the special contribution that each section made to the total sound. The process which the composer went through in his act of creation is much more evident from a live performance, and the Artist Series has given us a rare opportunity to hear the masterful rendition of the best of musical art.

Mr. Adler set a leisurely tempo for the Beethoven which added to the finesse and beauty of the work. This live performance also showed a feature which is not present on records: the between - movement break and (un-)up! This brought needed relief, however, to audience and performers alike.

ARE YOU KIDDING ME?

Would we kid you? No! Realism has struck our Longwood ladies! Quite a change from last week's Baltimore Symphony. Expressions reveal Longwood's previous reactions to a nation's newest craze. Love those Beatles!

Classroom Observations Cue Sound Conclusions

asking questions to the class at large, Miss A cleverly called on individual students by name, so that they were forced to answer before they appear lost to forever.

It was not until my second or third visit that I noticed the significance of the desks at which the students sat. These desks were not uncomfortable, but they were not comfortable either. They were scientifically designed to cause the proper tension - level for maximum learning efficiency. "One cannot learn as much as he should if he is too comfortable," I remember Dr. Z saying to a Psychology 100 class. "But on the other hand," he continued, "too much tension can be even more detrimental than not enough tension."

As I thought of this, I also thought, "But psychologists are not really scientists, especially educational psychologists; they are pseudo-scientists engaged in deceiving each other."

I was convinced that the students were wasting their time. Not one of them would learn anything of importance from Miss A, of that there was no doubt. They might learn to talk to each other and to get along with each other, but they would learn no facts. A generation of semi-literate seemed inevitable.

Where my downfall began, I cannot say with certainty; but I shall try to retrace the happenings leading up to it.

It may have started the day I ventured out of Miss A's class and into Miss B's class. Miss B lectured and put notes on the blackboard for the class to memorize. "A good teacher," I thought. "Maybe there's still hope." But then Miss B asked questions about notes she had given previously. There was a little response to most of her questions even when she called on students by name. If a student seemed to be brave enough to answer in class, he had best be right, or else he would surely be severely reprimanded for not doing the assignment, or for being "just plain stupid."

It wasn't difficult to understand why the students took no interest in the class. "Perhaps," I thought to myself, "there is something to this business of relating facts to what the students already know." Then I hit my tongue.

As time went on, I began to notice that what the students had to say was not all inane chatter. Some of the students were quite and witty. What they had to say made sense. One student particularly stood out. She was extremely outspoken. She usually was her point, often to the chagrin of Miss A. "Perhaps Miss A isn't trying to destroy individualism, but rather she is trying to encourage it," I said to myself and again bit my tongue.

The final phase of my downfall I recognize. Miss A gave tests and assigned papers which called for the ability not only to relate facts to one another and to daily life, but also to know the facts themselves. After reading a paper or two, I was amazed to find that the students actually got the facts right. Miraculously, they came to reasonable conclusions based on the facts. I no longer felt the urge to bit my tongue because of what I was thinking.

On January 18, 1964, I walked out of Central High School for what I expect to be the last time. I am convinced that Miss A is the teacher one would have in mind whenever he speaks of a "good teacher."

And somewhere flowing with the other trash in the sewers of Charlottesville is a "Rickover for God" button.

terms of government."

In answer to the question should students be permitted to invite speakers who advocate unorthodox views (such as communism) should not be excluded as invited speakers. "For we must remain free to learn about the threat which communism offers," said Dr. Lankford.

Because communism seeks to overthrow our government violently, and the communist party is outlawed in the United States, we will not tolerate speakers on our campus who are apostles of communism... seeking converts to their doctrine. ## Hull To Present Popular Concert In LC Assembly

On Tuesday, February 25, Mr. Edward G. Hull will present a concert of popular music for the 1:00 assembly. Mr. Hull is the instructor of voice here at Longwood.

Mr. Hull's program will avoid the classics and include such popular numbers as "The Roving Gambler," "Some Enchanted Evening," "Without A Song," "Oh, What A Beautiful Morning," "That Lucky Old Sun," "Desert Song," and "Deep In My Heart, Dear."

Accompanying Mr. Hull on the piano will be Dr. Sterling Adams. During the intermission, Dr. Adams will play George Gershwin's "Prelude."

Mr. Hull who came to the Longwood campus in September is here under a one year appointment. Next year he will work on his doctorate at Florida State University.

Students Enter Annual Exhibit Of College Art

Longwood College for the first time has entered the third annual College Art Exhibit in Williamsburg. The exhibit will be held from February 24-March 13. Prizes will be given for the best in the exhibit: first place will be $25; second place-$15; third place-$10.

Longwood has seven entries in the exhibit. "Ionic" by Judy Woodard and "Figure" by Melanie Wilkes are both oils. Anna Waldo entitled her opaque water color "Pushing Clockwise." Two woodcuts, "Les Deux Amis" by Judy Woodard and "Robin" by Melanie Wilkes, and "Superficial" by Howard Williams, and "Nude with Pink and Mauve" which are serigraphs, have also been entered.

Longwood, H-S Students Begin Groundwork For Newly-Proposed Summer Stock Theater

By BILL MacGUIRE

From Hampden-Sydney Times

Southside Virginia may have a summer stock theater this summer. Plans are now being made for the opening of a summer playhouse in Drakes Branch, Virginia, located about 30 miles from Farmville. The company would consist of six men and women, all students of either Longwood or Hampden-Sydney.

The group, which includes Betty Anne Atkinson, Mike Couchman, Ed Baker, Pat Newton, Dave Relyea and Bill MacGuire, hopes to present a different play every week for the duration of the summer.

Betty Anne Atkinson has performed in seven plays during her years at Longwood. She is particularly remembered for her portrayal of Mrs. Smith in The Bird Soprano, for which she won the Best Actress Award for the 1961-1962 season. In Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew, Betty Anne took a relatively small servant's role and turned it into a hilarious show-stopper.

The apex of Miss Atkinson's career at Longwood, however, came in December of 1963 when she did a truly brilliant job as Mrs. Alving in Ibsen's Ghosts. Her performance has been referred to as one of the greatest

Frosh Production

The freshmen class will present "Poled Again," a melodrama with the characteristic villain, hero, and heroine in Jarman Auditorium this Friday night at eight o'clock. An admission of twenty-five cents will be charged per ticket.

Practice Begins For Spring Play March 12, 13, 14

Rehearsals are underway for "She Stoops to Conquer," the next play to be given by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs on March 12, 13, and 14. It is an 18th Century comedy by Oliver Goldsmith.

Principal characters involved in the play are Mr. and Mrs. Hardcastle, their daughter, Kate, Tony Lumpkin, son of Mr. Hardcastle by a former marriage, and two young men, Marlow and Hastings.

The play begins with Sir Charles proposing a match between his son, Marlow, and Kate Hardcastle. Marlow and his friend Hastings set off to visit the Hardcastles, but become lost in route. They are given directions and finally arrive at the home of the Hardcastles thinking it is a neighboring inn. The humor of the play centers around all the misunderstandings caused by this mistake and the ones that follow.

Cast members consist of Mr. Hardcastle, David Colon; Mrs. Hardcastle, Conley Fox; Marlow, David Relyea; Hastings, Joe White; Kate, Kay Catron, and Constance, Marilyn Kilgore. Others appearing in the play are Ed Baker, Mike Couchman, Bob Blueford, Berkeley Pemberton, Curt Steele, Bill McGuire, Champre Arendale, Mildred Gwaltney and Jenny Pandy.

accomplishments at Longwood in years. Betty Anne is currently student teaching at Randolph-Henry High School and directing Jean Sartine's one-act play The Claw for presentation at Randolph-Henry. When asked about the theater, Betty Anne replied, "I'm terribly excited and with a lot of hard work, I have faith we can do it."

Mike Couchman is an old veteran of the Longwood stage, having participated in almost every play performed there during his stay at Hampden-Sydney. His characterization of Creon in Jean Anouilh's adaptation of Sophocles' Antigone was superb and brought a note from the director which read, "fine job, I couldn't have done it any better myself." This role also was responsible for Mike's receiving the Best Actor Award for the 1961-1962 season. His powerful part as Akin, the fanatically devout father in Tolstoy's Power of Darkness, seemed to dominate the stage, and lent an air of professional intensity to a college production. For this and two other roles, Mike won the Best Actor Award for the 1962-1963 season. Mike is currently involved with a small role in Goldsmith's She Stoops to Conquer, but will once again step into the lead this spring by playing Mailand in The Chalk Garden.

Thompson Displays Cubistic Art In Exhibition Room Of Library

Now on display in the exhibit room of the Lancaster Library are paintings by Mr. Lewis O. Thompson. Mr. Thompson's paintings will be on display until the end of February. One of Mr. Thompson's paintings will be purchased by Longwood and it will be added to the college's collection of paintings by Virginia artists.

Mrs. Janice Lemen, one of Longwood's art instructors, said of Mr. Thompson's works, "Mr. Thompson's paintings can be classified stylistically as synthetic cubism in the tradition of Picasso, Braque, and Gris. Mr. Thompson confined still life shapes to the center of the picture and surrounded the center by planes and shapes which grew out of both the back and foreground materials."

Born in Augusta, Georgia, Mr. Thompson received his Bachelor of Fine Arts and Masters degrees from the University of Georgia. Mr. Thompson plans to take a leave of absence from the faculty of Hollins College next year in order to visit Florence for a year.

Shrew, The Power of Darkness, and Major Barbara in her comparatively short stay at Longwood. Her interpretation of Uncle in Simpson's A Resounding Tinkle was extremely well received and for her other roles in the 1963-1964 season, Pat became one of the few freshmen at Longwood invited to join Alpha Psi Omega, the national honorary dramatic fraternity.

David Relyea, a sophomore at Hampden-Sydney, has also been active in the theater during his college career. By virtue of his excellent roles in The Taming of the Shrew, Power of Darkness, and Ghosts, Dave was initiated into Alpha Psi Omega early in 1964.

Dave spent the summer of 1963 doing summer stock work with the company at Montreat, North Carolina. During this time he took several lead roles and gained a great deal of valuable experience working with lights, sets, makeup and the great many technical aspects of the modern theater. Dave is now playing Marlow in the male lead in She Stoops to Conquer, the winter production at the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs.

Hackney Heads Plans, Names Committees

Reigning over the May Day festivities will be Queen Bobbi Cadow. May Court is not a new experience for Bobbi after representing the class of '64 both her sophomore and junior years. Bobbi is an Elementary Education major from Fredericksburg. Consuming most of her time at present is student teaching in the third grade at Drakes Branch Elementary School.

A member of Delta Zeta Social Society, Bobbi has also been very active in class functions. All four years found her working hard on Circus and numerous class projects.

Chairman for the May Day activities is Judi Hackney. A resident of Nansemond County, Virginia, Judi is presently student teaching at Drakes Branch Elementary School in Charlotte Court House. She is a graduate of Chukabuck High School. Most of Judi's work in the past years at Longwood has been the invaluable behind-the-scenes jobs on class activities and Circus. She has also been a member of the Rotunda Business Staff and the Columnade Circulation Staff. Judi plans to do her future teaching in the Tidewater area.

JUDI HACKNEY

Committees for May Day have been chosen and are now making preparations for the celebration in May. Those committees and their chairmen are: May Court — Wanda Old and Amy Haley; Escorts — Linda Bassford and Lee Criss; Script — Pat Wallace, Betty Ann Alderson, and Harriet Anderson; Publicity — Peggy Whitaker and Carol Gibson; Programs — Doris Harrison and Martha Muir; Music — Betty Ann Her Dance — Joyce Waldburger, Joyce Neal, and Diane Delk; Costumes — Carole Hage and Joy Smith; Scenery — Sandy Waugh and Tootsie Kay; Sound — Connie Birch.

Judi urges the entire student body to help with May Day whenever and wherever they can. Judi has pledged that she "will do the best she can" and with everyone's support the May DAY WILL BE A SUCCESS.

Soto Addresses Macon Society In Open Session

Dr. Oswaldo Soto will be the guest speaker tonight at the meeting of the Nathaniel Macon Society. Dr. Soto's topic will be "The Effect of Cuban Communism on the World." A question and answer session will follow.

The meeting will be held in Ruffner 318 at 7:00 p.m. The program will be presented by the committee on Latin America. The members of this committee are Joyce Bartley, Connie Perkins, Ginny Petty, and Sandra Jamison.

The Macon Society was formed to create interest among the Longwood students in current world affairs. In order to do this the Society presents speakers, films, and programs on various world events.

This will be an open meeting and the student body is invited to attend.

Nominate Candidates!

It was because of student interest that the Legislative Board drew up a new election procedure for the coming major-minor elections. It may well be because of a lack of student interest that this new system will fail before having a chance to prove itself.

The old method of nomination, the screening board, was protested because of its lack of democracy. With the aid of faculty and student suggestions a petition form of nomination was devised and decided upon. It must be remembered, however, that a democratic system can function effectively only when the voter fully accepts his responsibility.

The importance of interest and participation in these elections can not be over-emphasized. We now face the problem of a limited number of candidates for several offices. Some nominees are uncontested in their candidacies and there are a few positions for which no petitions have been filed. This situation must be remedied and can be only if those who are to be governed are concerned with selecting the most capable leaders.

If you know a well-qualified candidate, it is your duty, and in your own interest, to approach this person and offer to submit her petition of nomination.

If you are strongly in favor of one of the petitioners, discuss the qualifications and potentials of your choice with others. Remember only an informed public can make an intelligent decision. Only an informed public can office persons of integrity who can be entrusted with the responsibility of our school leadership.

Chaos Or Cure All?

The nation is experiencing the lull before the storm—at least on Capitol Hill. After passing the House, the civil-rights legislation has been held up to allow the tax-cut bill to precede it. It is certain, however, that the storm will break when the proposed civil-rights bill hits the floor of the Senate.

The pressing need for action erasing Negro discrimination is granted, it is only the degree of federal control and the manner of the bill's passage through the House that jolts even the most ardent civil-rightsers.

The bill proposes much needed revisions in the areas of voting rights, fair employment, and public accommodation. But in each instance federal control rears its ugly head time and time again. This legislative action would pass tremendous power into the hands of the Attorney General and dampen individual initiative for obtaining court action in civil-rights cases. The hotly contested "public accommodations" and "fair employment" sections of the bill would severely hamper free enterprise and destroy the right to control one's own property.

The most appalling aspect of the bill is the manner of its passage. Johnson's grossly sentimental appeal for adoption of the bill in memoriam to the late President was the first in a long series of gimmicks to get the bill rushed through the House of Representatives.

In another form of pressure from the administration, Johnson asked for name-by-name information on votes affecting the amendments to the bill. Members who voted unfavorably could certainly expect to hear from the White House.

It is feared by many that a third trick used to maneuver the bill through the House will also be used in the Senate. Legislation of such sweeping proportions needs time for clear thinking and long consideration and can not be passed without discussion as was done in the House judicial committee. We can only hope that the Senate will have ample time for debate and not be pushed blindly forward by a time limit such as was imposed on the House.

Lanford Discusses 'Freedom To Learn'

By F. G. Lanford, Jr.

This is a response to an invitation from the Trial Editor of the Rotunda for the February 12th issue that I attempt to answer some questions which the believes are of interest to our students. The first of these questions is "Why is the state in-

EDITOR'S NOTE: Because of space limitation last week, the editorial staff of this newspaper condensed Dr. Lanford's interview. However, it has been brought to our attention that our condensation and an unfortunate typographical error altered the meaning that Dr. Lanford wished to convey. D. M. H.

involved in education?" I am sure that different people would give different answers to this question. The answer I like best was given many years ago by Thomas Jefferson, who said "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, it expects what never has been and never will be."

I know of no nation that has been able to depend wholly on private education to develop an educated citizenry capable of managing a government and promoting national well-being. For our time, we must point out at least one other reason for the state to be involved in education. In this age of science and technology, trained manpower is essential to economic development and to national defense. This is most apparent in undeveloped countries attempting to improve their economy. Professional and technical education in such fields as agriculture, nutrition, health, commerce, economics, and engineering, as well as in all branches of pure science, has to be given top priority. The need for professionally and technically trained manpower seems to have no limit even in a developed nation such as the United States. Witness, for example the shortages of doctors, nurses, teachers, engineers, scientists, mathematicians, and economists that have plagued us since the end of World War II.

The remaining questions presented to me have to do with how liberal an institution, such as Longwood, should be in providing opportunities for its students to learn about various aspects of view regarding religion and politics. Let's consider religion first. Here, of course, we must remember that our country was established on the principle of separation of church and state and there have been several Supreme Court rulings limiting religious instruction in public educational institutions. On the other hand, here at Longwood we have offered a course in Bible literature and we began, a few years ago, to offer a course in comparative religion. At the University of Virginia, there has been, for many years, a department of religion with a fairly wide offering of courses. This it must be remembered is the University founded by Thomas Jefferson who was also the author of the Virginia Statutes for Religious Freedom. These are all elective courses and to date, the ratio to offer them as academic studies has not been questioned. I hope it will not be, for they offer our students an opportunity to study religion as a social force without promoting any particular doctrine or without challenging the religious belief of any student. In this same spirit of academic inquiry, we have brought to the campus speakers who have described the beliefs and observances of various religions. For several years, the Jewish Chautauque Society supplied us with speakers who talked on the Jewish faith. At just last week, we heard from our Pakistani visitor some comments on the beliefs of Muslims. I hope we can continue this practice as long as students are interested. At no time, however, must we permit these to become missionary efforts to promote a particular doctrine or belief. This is the work of the churches and of church-related colleges and universities.

Now let's consider freedom to learn about various political systems and points of view. And let's start with an example. This is an election year. Already, Republicans and Democrats are "squared away" at each other in their bids for votes in the November election of the President and Vice President. In the past, we have encouraged debate among students on the issues and the candidates in the national elections. And we have invited speakers to the campus to do the same. This we should continue to do.

Next, I would point out that we introduced, last session, an elective course in comparative government. Here, students may learn in the academic atmosphere of the classroom and library about the various systems of government that are operating in the world. Moreover, our library is adequate in references to support this course.

There is space left only to deal with your question about whether or not students should be permitted to invite to the campus speakers who advocate such a political system as communism. Here, I would point out that many of the speakers who come to our campus are selected by students with the help of faculty advisers and most of our speakers are sponsored by some student organization. This should continue to be the case. Moreover, there should be no reluctance to include among our invited speakers persons who are authorities on communism, for we must remain free to learn about the threat which communism offers. Dr. Conant, former president of Harvard University, once pointed out that we must study communism for the same reason we study cancer—to find some means to combat it. And herein lies the guide for us in choosing speakers on communism. We will invite speakers on communism who have a depth of scholarship that will help us understand; for to understand communism is to strengthen our capacity to resist it. We know that communism seeks to overthrow our government and would not hesitate to employ violent means to accomplish this. We know that the communist party is outlawed in the United States. These are the reasons we will not tolerate speakers on our campus who are advocates of communism and who would seek to convert converts to their doctrine. We will not provide an audience for such a purpose. Such persons are quite likely to be well trained in the persuasive and superlatively convincing.

Together—students, faculty, and administration will, I believe, continue to cherish our freedom to learn and we will not be tolerant of any individual or group among us who seeks to endanger this freedom through intemperance and superficially considered actions.

Pennock, Haslinger New Food Managers

By Joan Lord
The new dining hall managers for this semester are Morris J. Pennock and Herbert V. Haslinger. Mr. Pennock is the new Food Service Manager of the Slater System. He has been with Slater for six and a half years, and for the year 1961 he received the "Manager of the Year Award" for the southern region of Slater. He has worked for Slater in Tampa, Fla., St. Petersburg, Fla., and Chattanooga, Tenn., before coming to Longwood. While in the Air Force, Mr. Pennock managed the NCO and Officers Clubs while he was stationed overseas. Before becoming an employee of the Slater System, he worked for the Howard Johnson Restaurants. Mr. Pennock and his wife, Betty, have a daughter, Nancy Lynn, who is one year old. He said that he sees it here at Longwood and that he and his family enjoy being in Farmville. Plans for the dining hall include offering as varied a menu as possible. In the near future he plans to conduct a Food Preference Survey in order to determine the students' likes and dislikes. This will aid in planning menus that the students prefer. The results of this survey will be published for the students in a future newspaper. The hall presidents will be asked to pass out the questionnaires to the students on their respective halls. This will probably take place next week, although the actual day is indefinite. Every school which has its dining facilities under the Slater System will participate in a similar program. Mr. Pennock urges every student to take advantage of the questionnaire to let him what they prefer and to use the extra space to include comments on the food.

'Cabbages and Kings'

Delegation Attends Model U.N.

By Jo-Ann Cartwright

This past week, three Longwood girls, Nancy Morrey, Gina Williams, and I acquired a great deal of information about the United Nations, world events, and parliamentary procedure at the U. N. Model General Assembly at Duke University. The Longwood delegation was chosen to represent Pakistan. Upon arrival at Duke we were informed that our resolution calling for a ceasefire in Kashmir had been placed on the agenda to be brought before the Political and Security Committee. As a result, Nancy and I decided to jointly attend this committee's meeting in a concentrated effort to effect the acceptance of our resolution. Our strategy was simple, involving outright campaigning primarily in the ranks of the powerful Afro-Asian bloc which we had decided from the outset to cultivate.

On the second day, we went to our respective committees. Gina to the Social and Humanitarian; Nancy and I to Political and Security. All appeared alive. We were awestruck at the impossible complexity of principles of parliamentary procedure. Shortly, however, we gained confidence. In the afternoon, Nancy introduced our resolution delivering an emotional appeal for self-determination in Kashmir.

India strongly contested even the consideration of the measure. With our difficulty in using parliamentary procedure, all appeared lost. Indeed it would have been aid if not been for the invaluable aid of our neighboring Norwegian champion. Through parliamentary tactics we saved the day. Although India managed to postpone the resolution until the next morning, the Pakistan delegation did in the end triumph. After slightly amending the resolution, the majority of the committee voted to submit it to the plenary. Nancy and I, by this time feeling like Pakistani, were ecstatic!

Refuges, capital punishment, and racial discrimination were topics of debate handled by our Muslim sister Gina in the Social and Humanitarian committee. In the Political and Security, resolutions concerning Southern Rhodesia, and Korea were discussed. Trading rights, capital development, and diversion of the Jordan River were debated in the Economic and Financial Committee. All the issues were current and the ensuing debates illuminating. After the committee sessions, the assembly heard Dr. Tran Van Chuong, the father of Madame Nhu, who spoke on the topic of "Living an emotional appeal for self-determination in Kashmir." On Saturday, we attended the plenary in which the entire body voted on those resolutions accepted by the different committees. The plenary proved even more extraordinary and colorful than the committee sessions. Officially, the language was English; Czechoslovakia, however, insisted upon speaking in its native tongue which was interpreted. Cuba was in costume—beard and typical Castro regalia. The Soviet Union wore medals and unleashed against propaganda-type activities. One such outburst demanded the seating of "peace-loving" Red China; another, the seating of a poster exhibiting the faces of Governor Wallace and others entitled "The Faces of Race in the U. S. A." Following a protest by the U. S. A., the chair asked the U. S. A. to remove the poster. Laker, however, the poster was seen in the balcony accompanied by distracting noises. In response to the chair's admonition, the U. S. A. stated that the poster was carried by demonstrating U. S. citizens. They were overruled, however, as the chair noticed the exact likeness of the poster to the one previously banned about the Russians. Not to be outdone, the U. S. A. challenged the vote of the U. S. S. R. as being void as result of the violation of article (Continued on Page 4)

LC Wallops Hollins; Splits Two With MC

Hollins College played hostess to the Longwood basketball team Thursday, February 13 for two games, and Longwood returned home with two more victories for the season. The first game was won 55-35. Starting line-up for the game were forwards Carolyn Burnett, Lariene Robertson, and Carrie Lee Wilson; and guards Margie Barnard, Melody Saunders, and Frances Stewart.

The second game was won by a score of 61-40. Players in this game were Lynn Baker, Nevis Born, Lisa Cobbs, Connie Gallahan, Barbara Ragland, and Belby Taylor. Longwood's Blue and White team again went into action Saturday, February 15, when they played the Madison College team on the former's court. The same starting line-ups were used for these two games.

First quarter action was dominated by the home team which showed by the meek score of 16-9. In the second stanza Longwood again came back to gain possession of the ball often, and hit frequently.

Leading 36-26 in the third period, LC watched Madison hit for a few baskets in fast-moving play—mostly on LC's court. In a last desperate attempt by Madison to recover, the game ended 48-30 for the Blue and Whites. In the second game Longwood ran into hard luck. The home team hit from all over the court and Madison mostly on lay-ups, but the visitors came out on the better side of the deal in the end.

Good passing and even scoring prevailed in the second quarter, which wound up 22-22. The rough third period proved to be a downhill one for Longwood College. Madison capitalized on their jump shots from the side and also Longwood's rather sloppy playing.

In a quick quarter marked with pass interceptions by Madison, Longwood was outscored 11-3. The game ended 50-33 for the Madison team.

Pi Gamma Mu Opens Archives To LC Students

Did you know that Longwood was almost named Venable College? That an early president of Longwood wrote Civil War songs here? That Longwood once had a vegetable garden tended by the students? That anyone interested in the answers to these questions can find them and other articles on the history of Longwood in the Pi Gamma Mu archives room.

Books, photos, and records from 1864, when Longwood first became a state school, have been collected by the members of Pi Gamma Mu, social science fraternity, and the society has opened the room to the student body. The archives, located in the basement of Lancaster Library, is open every week day between four and five.

Golf, Volleyball Lure Attention Of Sports Fans

In golf Longwood College has been invited to come to Mary Baldwin College for the annual Woman's Virginia Collegiate Golf Tournament which will be held in April. The representatives from Longwood will be the first and second place winners in an intramural Golf Tournament to be held at Longwood Estate sometime in March. Anyone who is interested in golf is invited to participate in the tournament.

On February 17 the students are going to play volleyball against the faculty! The players on the faculty side will be chosen from both the faculty and administration. The student team will consist of members of the class of 1964. The game will be held in the old gym at 7:15 p.m. There will be a small admission fee. BE SURE TO COME.

Sportin' Chance

By Linda Turner

Recently a very awe-struck sports fan observed a basketball game. It did not begin any differently than games of several years past, but before the game had been in play very long, the referee was receiving a heckling from me for negligence. In the middle of play the referee never noticed the forward of the red team and the guard of the blue team cross the center line. In fact, neither of the teams were upset by their mistakes.

After half time I concluded that each team began with two stationary guards and a roving forward in its front court and two stationary guards and a roving guard in its back court. When play began, and the ball was passed from the center circle into the red team's front court, the roving guard of the red team crossed the division line into her front court and became her team's fourth forward. The blue team's roving forward crossed with her to become her team's fourth guard, equalizing the number of players in that court. In the opposite court each team had two stationary players.

This new type of basketball provided the incentive for all-around play on the part of each girl. The original game required the attention of every player to know where the ball was on the playing court, now the cleverness of each position had to be increased. Each player knew her function and performed the motions of shooting, guarding, or dribbling in an almost rehearsed fashion. The players ran, or dribbled, all over the court, whether the ball was in the opposite court or not. Her quick actions kept me shifting my eyes over the playing area.

At the finish of the game the referee was forgiven, and I decided to investigate this new form of basketball. Now after an inquiry I can verify that "the roving players" were justified in their actions and provided a more challenging game for participants and more enjoyable game for observers.

Orchesis Dances In Festival

Orchesis, the honorary dance organization, will perform "The Lonely Ones" a group work for eight dancers at the Annual College Dance Festival. It will be held at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, February 22, in Richmond.

Thirteen colleges have been invited to attend the annual festival. Longwood will be included with Hollins, Madison, Mary Baldwin, Mary Washington, Radford, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Sullivan, Sweet Briar, Richmond Professional Institute, Virginia Intermont, William and Mary and Westhampton.

The Master Class will open the events of the day with approximately 100 college dance students participating. Performances by the college groups will follow and a final critique by Mr. Walker, guest artist for the festival, will be made of the total compositions and evaluation of each individual college presentation.

Approximately 19 students have signed to attend the festival as participants in the Master Class. The following are included: Ruth Ann Baxter, Virginia Beard, Jean Cox, Elizabeth Crawley, Diane Delk, Carol Doak, Rebecca Evans, Dana Gerhardt, Diane Graham, Carol Rogers, Carey Howes, Phyllis Laisley, Glendon Merchant, Joyce Neal, Mary Palmero, Judy Squires, Joyce Ann Swope, Joyce Waldburger, and Jackie Walker.

Summer Stock Needs Interest Money, Patrons

Darkness, and Major Barbara while at Hampden-Sydney. He is now working with a smaller role in The Struggle To Conquer.

Contributions Needed These are the six men and women who hope to initiate the summer theater. They need, however, the support of the community and of the alumni of Hampden-Sydney if they are to succeed. Starting a summer stock theater is an enormously expensive undertaking, and any contributions would be earnestly solicited and deeply appreciated. Paint, surplus lumber, old clothing which might be used for costumes, and more important, insurance which might be donated would be very helpful.

Monetary contributions are, of course, essential. Patrons would receive, in return, nonvoting stock in the playhouse and, naturally, a season's ticket. All patrons would be publicly acknowledged in the advertisements of the company and any contribution of $100 or more would entitle a person or organization to a position on the Board of Directors. Bi-monthly meetings are planned for the Board of Directors, at which time a dinner will be served for their enjoyment. Suggestions for future productions and techniques would also be considered.

All correspondence and requests for information should be addressed to Mr. Edwin Baker, Director of Public Relations, The Collegiate Actors Company, Box 345, Hampden-Sydney, Virginia.

KATHY FLYNN

Flynn Begins Guided Research In Hematology

Kathy Flynn, a senior, is in the process of performing independent research on blood.

Having begun in September under the direction of Dr. Holman, Kathy went right to learning the techniques concerned with working with blood. Hematology, the study of blood, and the techniques involved are not taught at Longwood in a regular class. In order for Kathy to do her research, she first had to master these basic techniques.

Learns Techniques
The purpose of this project is to learn; it is not necessarily the quest for the answer to a given problem. The aim is to learn techniques that will be used in future problems.

Kathy is almost at the point of her actual research. She hopes to do a study of blood marrow. She has already had several volunteer blood donors.

This is an independent class that will give Kathy six credits. She will take an exam but will not have to write a paper.

Plans Graduate School
Kathy plans to go to graduate school, and then do independent research in the medical field in endocrinology.

Simkins Sees Aristocratic South As Feigning Democratic Posture

By Barbara Melton

Dr. Francis B. Simkins, Professor of History, has recently published his latest book concerning the South. The Everlasting South. The book is composed of a series of essays which deal with various aspects of the New South.

In one of these essays, "The South's Democratic Pose," Dr. Simkins draws upon various phases of Southern life and history in order to define the South as an aristocracy. He ends on the upbeat by reassuring that the South as an aristocracy will continue to endure even under the pressure which is currently being exerted on it in an effort to get the South to change its ways.

Defines the South

Dr. Simkins begins his essay by pointing out what was believed would happen to the South after the Civil War. He maintains that the Southerners tried to at least make the South appear democratic on the outside by "championing universal education and the introduction of Northern industry and Northern ideals of a business civilization." In addition "they asserted that the South . . . would, if given time, shelve its sectionalism and evolve into a happy segment of the great republic in which plutocracy and democracy stood united."

In spite of this, Dr. Simkins holds that underneath these visible changes, "the South was learning to supplement a revived American patriotism with a fervent reassertion of regional consciousness."

Points Out Ideals

The aristocratic ideal which shaped the Old South, still lives in the New South. Dr. Simkins uses the two examples of the failure of the second Ku Klux Klan and the slow progress of labor unions as manifestations of this concept. He maintains that the reason why the second Ku Klux Klan failed was due to the fact that "the upper classes disavowed the order of its knightly pretensions and exposed it as a clique of laborers, small farmers, and mechanics. As far as the labor unions are concerned, they have progressed slowly because 'they have never been associated with the upper classes.'"

Discusses Churches

Dr. Simkins further discusses how class distinctions are extended into the churches of the South. Although he writes that the South has a greater part of its population in church than any other region in the United States, "there is one church for the whites and another for the blacks; one for a certain class who are Episcopalians; one for another class who are Baptists; one for a third class who are Holy Rollers. Among the Baptists themselves congregations are organized along social lines."

Uses Psychology

In a final attempt to justify the existence of an aristocratic

South, Dr. Simkins draws from the psychological concept that "individual differences rather than equality is the rule of nature."

Although the Southerner is forever endorsing the Declaration of Independence and the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, he actually wants to keep the existing caste system. He believes this is the only means by which the purity of the white race can be maintained.

However, necessity requires that the South keep up its protective shield of democratic ideals. "It remembers the price of its frankness in 1861." In addition, there is the threat of " . . . a second Reconstruction. Recent Federal court decisions and Federal legislative proposals give substance to this threat."

"These fears should not be so great. Changes which the armies of Grant and Sherman were not able to effect can scarcely be brought about by judicial or legislative means."

Pakistan Delegation Finds Trip Rewarding

nineteen of the U. N. charter which requires that each member pay its assessments or lose its vote. The chair rolled in favor of the U. S. A., the U.S.S.R. walked out but returned the next day.

The entire three days were full, interesting, and informative. Not only did the Longwood delegation learn a great deal about the functioning of the U. N. but it also gained a more tangible knowledge of the current world issues. We encountered scores of international students with whom we discussed, explained, and defended the American way of life. Our knowledge was consequently refurbished with the realities of ways of life alien to our own. As for the U. N. itself, we all realized that our presentation was in many cases inaccurate evidencing no more than veritable caricatures of the various member nations. The majority of us were Americans and discrepancies did result. In many instances, the proceedings did appear nothing short of a mockery as indeed do those in the actual U. N. quite frequently. The experience and knowledge we gained are invaluable. In reference to a return engagement next year, Pakistan would vote "emphatically yes."

HOOTENANNY!

Among those appearing in Longwood's Inter-Collegiate Hootenanny this Saturday night is Kay Jenkins, a student at Lynchburg College.

Groups include those from colleges in Virginia and West Virginia.

Class Of 1965 Presents Inter-College Hootenanny

By Maria Grant

Grab your uke and join the troops at the Intercollegiate Hootenanny. Sing along with students from other campuses. Clap your hands to the music. It's all part of the Junior Class show at 8 p.m. February 22.

Jarman Hall is the place for the Saturday night show. Admission is $1 per person.

The plans for the show started about five months ago when a few people decided to try their hands at a Hootenanny that would involve more than Longwood students. The purposes were to raise money for the Junior class and to bring various colleges together.

Now, Longwood's first Hootenanny is ready with performers from a number of colleges.

Bob Zents from William and Mary and Harv Sargent from M. C. V. are known as the "Minutemen." They have played at the Shadows in Virginia Beach as well as clubs in Richmond, Norfolk, and Portsmouth.

The Smothers Brothers' Hootenanny in Lynchburg has featured Kay Jenkins from Lynchburg College. Her numbers include: "Copper Penny," "Johnny, I Hardly Knew You," and "Moonraker." She has appeared in several night clubs, parties, and coffee houses from Florida to Washington, D. C.

Two boys from the University of Richmond and one from Hampden-Sydney call themselves the "Freelanders." Rupert Winfree of H-S and John McCollister and Robert Clark, of U. R. have performed in 15 previous Hootennies and several concerts.

The "Fanny Hill Singers" have a number of appearances to their credit - Richmond television and radio, concerts with the Big Three and the Ivy League Trio. Hootennies in Richmond, Washington, Lexington, Waynesboro, and Petersburg. David Jones of RPI and Harry Weidman of R.M.M.C. make up the duo. Some of their songs include "Mighty Day," "Hobo Blues," and "Bells of Rymyrm."

From the southernmost section of the state come the "College Quartet" who hail from Emory and Henry College. Bill Woods, Tommy Booker, Lynn Stradley, and Jerry Turner are the members of the group. They have gained experience from appearing at E.T.S.U., Virginia Intermont, Radford, and King College.

From Longwood College come three freshmen, Kathy Brewer, Diane Davis, and Nancy Jo Taylor. All three sing and Kathy and Nancy Jo play guitar while Diane plays baritone uke. They'll be singing both together and in solos on Saturday night.

Concord College in Athens, West Virginia sends a group called the "Greenbriars." The quartet, composed of Connie Kenner, Jeff Amuller, John Roudille, and Bob Branson has appeared on Ted Mack's Amateur Hour, at the Greenbrier Hotel, and at various colleges in the area and in different states.

From Hampden-Sydney is Dave Musgrave. He has burned a lot of midnight oil out at the college, playing the guitar and singing till all hours.

Also appearing will be the "Churchills" from Virginia Beach who have done spots at the Shadows and the Surf Rider.

Gene Elke of radio station WFLO will act as MC for the evening. During the intermission colas will be sold by members of the Junior class and candy from the Junior class and candy from Tau sorority.

From The Board

A request has been made for identification cards for the student body. Some have been ordered and are on their way. These will be issued this spring to those who are in need of them. It is planned next year that the cards will be issued to the entire student body.

The May Day Committee, with Judy Hackney as chairman and Anna White as business manager, has begun making plans for the coming event. Elections for the May Court were held last Friday and preparations are under way. It is hoped that this year, through student enthusiasm and participation, a new and better May Day will take place.

Dean Wilson has approved the request that those attending the Junior Dance February 29 be allowed to go out to Cedarbrook for the hour following the dance (from 12 midnight to 1 a.m.). Cedarbrook has been contacted and has agreed to remain open. It is understood that the social rules which pertain to school functions will be in effect for those attending the restaurant after the dance. If this proves successful possible continuation of this arrangement in future events will be discussed.

The February "Faculty Firesides" will be held February 27 in the Games Room at 9 p.m. Dr. Pastor will lead the discussion which will be centered around modern poetry. All—both students and faculty—are invited to attend his informal meeting.

Last year Jo Leslie Andrews, as "Miss Longwood," attended the festival in Pensacola, Florida. Last week she attended the Legislative Board meeting and gave her opinion of the value of such a contest. She was greatly in favor of continuing the contest because of the opportunity it afforded the girl, and the good publicity it gave the school. Several suggestions have been made concerning improvement in the contest. If continued this year, the contest would be a student activity and student organized and therefore student participation would be necessary to make it a success. The Board would like to hear the student body's opinions and suggestions concerning the contest and its continuation. Only with evidence of adequate support from the student body will plans be made for the contest this spring.

Elections are under way with the election proceedings in effect. Petitions for the nomination of president and vice president of the major organizations are to be in by Thursday 20, and will be posted. Be sure to check these petitions, signing the ones for the person you would like to see run for the office. No person may sign more than three petitions for a given office. Petitions for minor offices must be in by March 9. So, file your petitions now and support the elections.

Texas "Ambassador" Rides Bull From Home State To New York

If you think this story is going to be a lot of bull - you're right! Riding a Brahma from Fort Worth to New York may be an education in itself, but for Jerry Cotten, a 23-year-old junior at North Texas State University, it's also an opportunity to earn money for a doctorate in psychology.

Jerry started on his 2,000 mile trip on September 18 and hopes to reach New York by April 22, in time for the opening of the World's Fair. Bobo, his 1,500 pound "pen-raised" Brahma averages between 12 and 15 miles a day. Riding from daylight to 5 p.m. each day except Sunday, Jerry feels he will just about finish his eight-month trip on time.

The idea for the trip came from his father, Clarence Cotten, an ex-bronco "buster." He remembered a buddy making a similar trip back in 1938 and felt that such an undertaking would be beneficial to the state of Texas as well as to Jerry.

Traveling through eleven states and countless cities, Jerry has been declared "Ambassador of Good Will" for the state of Texas by Governor John Connally. One of his objectives is to stimulate interest in Texas as a place of residence and business opportunity, and as an attraction to tourists.

Jerry and Bobo have been promised appearances on several network TV shows and will appear at Madison Square Garden with the largest country music show ever presented in the world. It seems however, that the trip may have been in vain. After covering almost 1,500 miles of his journey Jerry only recently found that there has been no space provided for him in the Texas pavilion. This news was quite a jolt to him, for without a spot in the World's Fair any hope of raising enough money to continue his studies is gone. It is strange that Texas, the state so fond of doing everything in a big way - and certainly this trip fits the bill - cannot find enough room in its pavilion for one bull. Jerry plans to finish the trip no matter what the outcome, but hopes that with public opinion behind him he can get his spot at the Fair.

Lanky Texan Jerry Cotten and Bobo, his Brahma bull, caused unusual excitement on campus as they passed through Farmville in route to World's Fair. Enjoying view from Bobo's back is junior Dottie Marshall.

Board Names Brooks New Academic Dean

Seminar Debates Mores, Discusses Individualism

At Randolph - Macon Woman's College on March 6-7, Focus will present a symposium on "Individual Ideals and Social Reality." It will explore the relationship of individuals to the American society. Panels, seminars, and discussion groups will offer a critical approach to specific problems in six areas of American life.

Plans for the first night include a keynote speaker who will delve into the problem of the individual's place in society. A panel moderated by the keynote speaker and composed of a district attorney and a big business man, will struggle with the question of the relation of public morals to legislation.

Panel Discussion
Saturday morning, a second panel discussion, led by a news commentator, will include a social scientist, a biological scientist, and a physical scientist. Through this panel, viewers may expect to receive opinions on how a scientist with a value system can work within the amoral disciplines of science. Specific areas of this topic will include nuclear testing and psychoanalysis.

Four Seminars

On Saturday afternoon, the program will be split into four seminars spaced so that visitors may attend two. One of the seminars will center around literature with an author expressing his concept on whether a writer should act as a social critic or whether he should reflect the ethical system of the society for which he writes. A second seminar will undertake a study of business ethics and (Continued on page 3)

Succeeding to position of Longwood College's new dean is Dr. Richard B. Brooks, present Chairman of Education Department. Dr. Brooks follows Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss, who will continue as Professor of history.

The State Board of Education named Dr. Richard B. Brooks as the new dean of Longwood last Friday in its monthly meeting. Chairman of the Education Department, Dr. Brooks will assume his position July 1.

Dr. Brooks has been at Longwood since 1957. Before coming to Longwood he taught for ten years at the College of William and Mary. He received his bachelor's degree from Springfield College in Massachusetts, his master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania and his doctorate from the University of Virginia.

The meeting of the State Board also resulted in the end of male enrollment at Longwood. The resolution of the Board said, "The current demand for admission of young women is far beyond the capacity of the college, and opportunities for higher education exist in other state-supported institutions."

Also, the hoped-for million dollar student activities building emerged as a likely possibility for at least partial construction in the 1964-66 biennium when state legislators uncovered an extra $6.4 million.

Most of the extra funds, gained by a reevaluation of expected state's revenues, will go to higher education. Longwood was allotted $540,000 for the student activities building and $650,000 for operations. The latter money if finally approved will be used primarily to employ more faculty members to keep the student-faculty ratio within desirable standards.

The funds are not yet actually available or appropriated. They were included in the new . . . and higher . . . omnibus state budget for 1964-66 reported out unanimously by the House Appropriations Committee.

Republicans

Anyone interested in helping form a Young Republican's Club on campus meet in Ruffner 316 tonight, February 26 at 7:30. Dick Obenshain, the state chairman of Young Republicans will speak and help with the organizing.

Rex Participates In Apple Blossom As LC Princess

Betty Ann Rex has been chosen by the faculty and administration to represent Longwood at the annual Apple Blossom Festival to be held in Winchester April 29-May 2. As Princess, she will participate in the parade and other functions of the pageant.

BETTY ANN REX

Betty Ann has been an active worker in both her class and the school since her freshman year. She has been a member of the Westminster Fellowship, the Granddaughter's Club, and both the choir and madrigal singers.

For her outstanding leadership and scholastic achievement, Betty Ann has been elected to membership in Alpha Kappa Gamma, Kappa Delta Pi, and Sigma Alpha Iota. She is also a member of Alpha Sigma Alpha social sorority.

This year Betty Ann was chosen by the student body to be the Young Women's Christian Association. She was also elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

Much of her present time is spent working on her paper for the honors program. She is pursuing the topic, "a historical and musicological study of Thomas Jefferson's associations with music and musicians during the early period of his life up to his sojourn in Europe."

Juniors Sponsor Annual Formal For Students

Any Haley and Winnie Walker are co-chairmen for the annual Junior Dance to be held Saturday night, February 29 in the Senior Dining Hall. "Ricky and the Romans" will furnish the music for the evening from 8 p.m. until 12 midnight. The dress, as usual, is semi-formal. Heading the various committees are: Wanda Old, publicity; Sandra Craig, chaperones; Pam Gustafson, invitations; T. J. Sykes, tickets; and Carol Dakin, decorations. Also Gwen Dalton is chairman of the party to be given after the dance for the juniors.

No theme was named for the dance this year. This was left out because of the inability to decorate the dining area. The Main Rec will be decorated but with no definite theme in mind.

Baeger Attends Annual Meeting Of Mathematicians

Dr. Badger, professor of mathematics at Longwood, recently spent several days in Miami, Florida attending the 40th Annual Meeting of the Mathematics Association of America. The convention was held at the University of Miami. Approximately 2000 math teachers and mathematicians attended.

Most of the discussion groups were concerned with graduate level study. Those people who use mathematics in research and industry seemed to favor teaching mathematics in a practical manner, while the teachers favored a more theoretical approach to mathematics.

Presidential Candidates Offer Plans For Legislative, Judicial Boards

The seven nominees for the offices of president of the Legislative Board and the Judicial Board were asked for statements concerning the plans they hope to carry out in office. The following comments were submitted:

Kathy Dodge
"If I am president of the Legislative Board, with the cooperation and participation of the students, I hope to lead this board in evaluating such activities as May Day, the publications' appointments, the assemblies, and the social rules - all of which come under the coordination of the legislative branch of Student Government."

Bonnie Ramey
"There are several major areas that I feel need to be reevaluated before the school year is out. The rules established by the Legislative Board should be examined with the precept in mind that the rule which is broken excessively is probably not a good rule.

The election procedure, perhaps the most radical change brought about by the Legislative Board this year, must be examined to see what changes, if any, would make it more efficient and more acceptable to the student body.

Finally, May Day should not only be evaluated but it should also be given as much constructive criticism as can be obtained from other campuses as well as from our own.

These reevaluations do not exclude the possibility that they may have to be done again next year to meet entirely new circumstances."

Milly Woodward
"Since the Legislative Board was established two years ago, I feel that many improvements have been made which have benefited the student body. However, a few of the newly established committees are not yet functioning to their fullest capacity. Next year I hope that there will be better co-ordination between the Legislative Board and its committees so that they may function more efficiently."

Are We Responsible?

Responsibility is a word that is used rather glibly by most of us today. Think of how many times it is used in casual conversation. Is she a responsible girl? Is she responsible for taking care of the transaction? I'm 21 and I'm responsible for my behavior and actions. I'm a college student and am capable of recognizing and carrying out my responsibilities.

But are we really responsible college students? With a little extra thought one may realize that this question has to be answered negatively.

Longwood College provides for its students visiting lecturers. How is the auditorium filled? It is filled by students who attend because before their sleepy eyes is dangled the most precious of all gifts—a free cut. It must be admitted that there are a handful of students who realize that they have a responsibility to themselves and to the school to attend the lectures. Be there a small or large gain, there is a gain in attending, and this is the important thing. Are we responsible enough to ourselves to take advantage of these educational opportunities which will never come our way again?

We have asked that the Screening Board be discontinued in order that we may play a more important role in the selection of candidates for the important offices of the school. There have been four candidates nominated for chairman of the Judicial Board, three for chairman of the Legislative Board, three for president of the Y. W. C. A., two for the president of the Athletic Association, and four for president of House Council. Have we taken it upon ourselves to fill the petition for the candidate of our choice? It is our responsibility.

We talk about the fact that we are responsible enough to have such privileges as unlimited cuts. This would mean that anytime we felt the need to sleep through a class or two, we could do so without question. Have we shown by our past actions that we are responsible enough for freedom such as this?

Selection Of Editors

Now that it is the time to select the editor of the Rotunda for another year, we feel that the student body should be informed of her duties and responsibilities.

First, it must be stressed that the primary duty of the editor of this publication is to inform her readers and to bring to their attention issues that she feels are of importance. In performing that duty an editor's first responsibility is to make certain that the facts she uses in her editorial are accurate. Her second responsibility is to determine how her editorial will benefit the student body. Thus the editor has a responsibility to the school, but at no time must she feel that she can merely reflect the opinion of the majority.

An editor also has a duty toward her staff; therefore, she cannot allow any other activities—social or extracurricular—to come before the Rotunda. As editor, she must co-ordinate the several phases of putting each issue of the paper together and make sure that each staff member is doing the job assigned her. Finally, she must allow her staff members to present their views when they oppose her own.

In order for the Rotunda editors to fulfill her duties, she must possess certain qualifications. She must have a technical knowledge of journalism. She must be able to work well not only with her staff members, but with her fellow students, members of the faculty and administration, and the men who print this paper. Finally, she must be able to take criticism from her peers and superiors graciously.

The new editor of the Rotunda will be announced next week, and as her final duty to the student body the outgoing editor will make her selection on the basis of the above qualifications.

Smoking Controversy Provokes Reactions

by Marla Siegfried
"To smoke or not to smoke"—that is the question plaguing many of us on this campus. This controversial question gained even more significance a month ago when the Surgeon General issued his far-reaching report on the dangers of smoking in connection with the dread killer, disease cancer, as well as with other organic diseases. With statistics, facts, and figures, the Surgeon General's report has caused quite a variety of personal reactions from nonsmokers as well as from inveterate smokers.

Acquiring the smoking habit seems especially easy for college students. Whether you blame it on conformity, nerves, a sophisticated image, an assertion of independence, or just plain enjoyment, smoking cigarettes has lured many college students into what is called the "nootine habit."

Longwood students are no exception to this college smoking trend. Applying the question of "to smoke or not to smoke" to the recent smoking report, Longwood girls offered many reactions.

One junior had taken up pipe smoking, actually enjoying the pipe more than cigarettes and smoking the pipe less; but some along the line she again succumbed to the cigarette habit. She now smokes as much as ever. Other girls had the same experience with the same results from smoking cigarettes, or small cigars.

Nonsmokers easily condemn smoking. One girl said, "I don't smoke, but if I did, the report would have stopped me." Another said that she is an inveterate smoker. In fact, one girl refused to even try to cut down, "I still smoke my one pack a day." Not everyone is weak-willed, though. One admirable girl who stopped smoking finds that a cigarette now "makes her sick."

Then there are those middle-of-the-roaders, exemplified by the statement of this girl: "Now I smoke less—even gave it up a few days—so now I know I can give it up—and I definitely plan to."

Perhaps the most pathetic smoker is the one who gives up smoking at least twice a week, only to be forced to buy another pack in order to pay back all the cigarettes she has "borrowed" while giving up smoking.

Is there an answer to this question? Smoking is obviously an unhealthy practice, as the practical ones will say. The concerned ones will say, "you're only young once, so why not enjoy life." The selfish ones will defend smoking as "their one luxury." But most of us smokers are inconsistent ones who want to stop smoking, but haven't met with much success.

These are just a few reactions—there are probably as many as there are brands of cigarettes. If you have another interesting point of view write it up and submit it to the Rotunda in the form of a letter to the editor. This controversial question is still far from being satisfactorily solved.

Letters To Editor Butler Comments On Archives

Dear Editor:

I wish to comment on the misleading news item which appeared in the February 19 Rotunda under the inaccurate headline, "Pi Gamma Mu Opens Archives to LC Students."

In the first place, the Library's collection of books, records, papers, photographs and other archival material relating to Longwood's history has always been open to members of the student body and others doing research. The collection was in existence prior to the organization of the local chapter of the society, and has been maintained for many years as an integral part of the Library.

Furthermore, the Library staff will continue to give bibliographical and reference assistance in the use of this material. A number of interesting and significant items have been added to the collection by the members of Pi Gamma Mu, and I hope the number will be increased, but in the interests of historical accuracy I must point out that the Longwood Collection is the result of the interest and labor of librarians, faculty members and alumni over a period of many years.

Sincerely yours,
Charles E. Butler
Librarian

Students Make Appeal For Texan

Dear Editor:

Last week end Longwood had the privilege of meeting two fine young men and a Brahmin bull named Bobo. Through the Rotunda and conversations with these young men, we have learned that their trek to the New York World's Fair was in vain because the Texas Pavilion at the Fair no longer had room for them.

Many of us know what it means to be short of educational funds and sympathize with Jerry's position. It has been suggested that if enough people wrote to: The Texas Pavilion, c/o New York World's Fair, New York, New York, or Gov. John Connally, State Capital, Austin, Texas, they just might find room for Bobo. Now, we are putting that suggestion before the Longwood student body. Let's help Jerry get an education.

Art Films Controversy Cues Pro, Con Debate

By Jo-Ann Cartwright

Recently, controversy has centered around the foreign films being shown in Jarman on various Saturday nights. It has been charged that these films are not in keeping with the purpose for which they were to be presented—namely, entertainment. Instead, they have proved incomprehensible. Not only are they apparently beyond the mental grasp of most but they are being predominantly foreign, have in addition required strenuous exertion in the reading of obnoxious subtitles. To this group, entertainment is synonymous with capricious and involves typical Hollywood comedies. However, contrary to popular belief, the new system evolved out of a student request for art films, not popular American movies.

In all of the subsequent sessions, this art films, was the term employed. An editorial and follow-up article in February issues of the 1963 Rotunda substantiate this. Indeed, it would appear that the controversy should have arisen over the relative desirability of true art films. Certainly it is true that a very few films presented have not been outstanding art films as in Bergman's Wild Strawberries or Cocteau's The Strange One, but they have all been recognized as films of artistic merit by established critics. The fact that the majority of the films are foreign has probably invoked the loudest denunciations and protestations. Actually, they have been foreign because foreign films are generally found to be on a higher level of artistic quality than are American films. In a recent issue, The Moderator, a magazine which polls student opinions in relation to various issues, announced that the majority of American college students prefer foreign films over the American variety. The students feel that "A problem of some kind must be presented clearly and faced frankly in a film, whether it be a sociological, political, aesthetic, or moral one; the problem is basic to the content of the film." Therefore, they conclude that "Foreign films generally fulfill this requirement while American films usually avoid coming to grips with a problem and substitute instead of tried-and-true romantic escapism." Of necessity, then, the majority of the quality films presented have been foreign. Basically, there is no harm in moderate escapism, but it seems that a sufficient number of these type films are available at the local theater or on television.

It follows that another primary source of complaints has centered around the financial aspect of the situation. A large number have argued that their money in the form of campus fees, is being spent without due receipt of entertainment. On the other hand, are there not a large number of students on campus who, likewise, theoretically pay for the periodic bowling sessions but who seldom or never participate in them? But, one might argue, the films, unlike bowling, are not entertainment but a form of educational instruction. Surprisingly enough, there are those who prefer spending their leisure time with such films rather than with bowling pins. Further, they are delighted to participate in an opportunity which provides both enjoyment and intellectual instruction.

In addition, Longwood is an educational institution. It is therefore its function to provide

Poll On Elections Poses Questions On Procedures

By Barbara Burrell

The major-minor elections for the officers of next year's five organizations is well under way. This reporter polled 50 students concerning their opinions of the new system.

Every student polled likes the new election procedures in general, but many expressed the desire for more students to run for office. With one exception, the upperclassmen think the new election system is a definite improvement over the old and outdated Screening Board system. Some feel that as far as the new system has been realized, the new system is better, but these students have doubts that conferences will draw enough of the student body to be of real value. They agree that it is fairer and more democratic than the old system. Some students, however, stated that they thought there might be a way to make the more of it. They declined to comment on any improvement until the elections are completed.

The length of the election period was a matter not so generally accepted. Though a majority felt that time was needed to get candidates to run, to sign petitions, and to hear of the candidates' views, many thought that the election proceedings drag. These students contend that with so much time elapsing they lose interest.

Some students also expressed the opinion that with such a long time lapse student policies might play too big a role in the election. Their opinion, however, was much in the minority. Other students contended that student politics were necessary to make the election a success.

The question which raised most "split" answers was

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

LC Trounces William And Mary In Two-Game Bout

Ripping the nets for the first six minutes of the game, Longwood's Blue and White team played a smooth and fast-moving first quarter against William and Mary bounced back with several shots and finally wound up with eight points — all they could muster in the quarter.

First Quarter Ends
The Blue and White guards showed a good zone defense but the offense had some trouble in the final minutes with rim-bouncing. The quarter ended 14-8 Longwood.

William and Mary's tight guarding did not stop LC's deadly pass play and under-the-basket shots. Both teams made hits from everywhere on the court but nevertheless there was not much scoring.

The basketball went from hand to hand and each squad pulled in a substantial number of rebounds.

Connecting for two baskets, William and Mary was hindered again with the Blue's down-the-court pass play, plus a swish from almost half court. There was mad scrambling for the ball as the quarter picked up speed.

Third Period Ends 30-25
Several minutes went by before any scoring was done and then Longwood finally contacted the basket. But W&M undauntedly came back and the third period ended with a 30-25 margin for the LC line-up.

The fourth stanza was almost all Longwood's as they hit from outstanding positions on the court, under the basket and from the side.

After a while of no scoring, during which the basketball got a real workout, LC finally came up with two side shots. The Williamsburg team kept pace, capitalizing on some good rebounding and nine out of 15 free shots, but nonetheless a 17 point margin separated the squads.

Without slowing down a bit, the contest ended 43-31 for the home team in a quick finish.

Longwood players included Margie Bernard, Carolyn Burnett, Barbara Ragland, Lurline Robertson, Melody Saunders, Frances Stewart, and Carrie Lee Wilson.

Starting out rather slowly, the second game shortly became an exciting contest.

William and Mary got the first and fourth points but Longwood fought hard for possession of the ball. It paid off because the home team connected for three in a row.

The teams played keep-away and Floor-Burn Flora in a low scoring quarter that ended 12-9 for LC.

The Green squad racked up two points, but this period was Longwood's. It even included an accidental shower of pennies from an unknown (?) spectator in the balcony.

The Blue and Whites cleared the bench for the second half, and a fast and interesting quarter wound up 43-31 in favor of the home team.

At the full line William and Mary again fared better, completing four for five compared with Longwood's five for nine. In a last-ditch effort the team from Williamsburg shot four fast points to open the final quarter, but LC bounced back and took over, eventually coming out on the winning end of a 50-40 score.

AA Speaking

The Athletic Association Council meets on the second and fourth Monday nights of every month at 6:45 in the Games Room. The student body is always welcome to sit on these meetings.

Free Bowling Report

The students have bowled over 2,000 free games so far this year and over 20% of the student body has participated in the program. The $800 allotted for bowling has been exhausted and more money will be requested. The Recreation Committee is in charge.

Bicycle Report

The bicycles have been purchased for the sum of $108 and are now in use. They are being handled through the cooperation of the Home Office staff and are kept under Ruffner near the service elevator.

Golf And Tennis Tournament

Mary Baldwin College has invited Longwood to participate in golf and tennis tournaments in the spring. Plans are being made to send the winners to Mary Baldwin to play.

HEO Report

The class swimming meet will be held on April 21 this year. Entrants from the classes will have to attend four special rec swims and four regular rec swims to be eligible. Those who have a swimming class will only need to attend the four special practices.

The water show is progressing nicely with Chris Longstreet and Ann Persak as co-chairmen. Three big shows are planned for March 25, 28, and 27, with a special performance for the alumnae on March 21.

Faculty-Student Volleyball

The game will be held this week on Friday night at 7:05 in the Student Building gym. The seniors will play for the student body and the admission will be 15c.

Class Representative

The Council voted to have one representative from each class as a member of the 1964-65 Council. These members would keep their classmates informed of Council activities.

Since the A. A. Council is responsible for conducting the class, varsity, and individual sports activities on campus it hoped this avenue with questions or ideas will come to a member of the Council (see Handbook).

responsibility. She is responsible for all the actions of her board members. She must see to it that the purpose of the board is fulfilled and in doing so be that her board works and acts as a unit. A good chairman should show little outward emotion, but should possess strong human understanding and kindness. She should work well with other people and have an open and unprejudiced mind. One day she should be someone you can trust.

The qualifications I have given are the "ideal" and the "ideal" is never completely found. However, when you vote, and I hope each of you do vote, vote for the person you would trust the most. If you should have to appear before the Judicial Board, have any capacity. If each of you will do this I am sure all of the candidates will be pleased to "master what the outcome."

Ann Cordle
"If chairman of the Judicial Board, I would strive to head an efficient government upholding the laws of the association and making recommendations to the Legislative Board based upon experience with these laws in actual operation, a government in which every student contributes to its effective functioning by her active support of the honor system."

Laraine McGhee
"In order for the Judicial Board of the Student Government Association to better uphold the honor of the students at Longwood, I feel that many of the rules that govern our activities need a careful examination to determine their effectiveness. I hope that the Judicial Board will be able to work more closely with the Legislative Board to carry out this examination that will provide for better self-government."

Wanda Old
"As a candidate for the chairmanship of the Judicial Board, I feel that in serving the school, the board should maintain the respect of the student body, not through fear, but through competent and fair interpretations of the rules of the college. To do this it seems necessary that there should be close cooperation with the Legislative Board in order to interpret the rules as to their original purpose and the greatest advantage of the student body."

gand to marketing and price fixing. Religion will be the topic of the third session and will concentrate on religion serving in the 20th century, as a dominant moral force or as a social institution. The final seminar will deal with news media in regard to censorship and censored news.

For the Saturday night program, there will be entertainment featuring a comedian and an informal social gathering. The week end will be concluded Sunday morning with a summary of the chief ideas of the week end by the keynote speaker.

Major Aim

"Individual Ideas and Social Reality," is to present students with some ideas on ethics and

McDaniel Finds Much Activity In Phases Of College Life

"We have the best physical education department in the State. I may be a little prejudiced but so what?" This was the statement of Emma Leigh McDaniel — physical education major and all-around senior at Longwood.

"Butch," as she is known by everyone around here, has been tremendously involved in many facets of college life. She has grown from a clown on stilts to captain of the basketball team.

In between she has participated in May Day and all class sports. She was music co-chairman of the Water Pageant, basketball manager, and president of the Monogram Club. Her college sports career was topped off by winning the coveted Blue Blazer Award.

Student teaching had its ups and downs — including sprained necks. "Butch" taught the ninth, eleventh, and twelfth grades at George Washington High School in Danville. Her favorites were the ninth graders.

At present, "Butch" sighs at the prospect of marriage in June or August. She plans to teach but as yet has not decided where.

She is working on her national basketball officiating rating. She must pass a written and prac-

Sportin' Chance

By Linda Turner

Our conventional society needs to be introduced to a new variety of sports. Instead of flopping into a easy chair for a football game on television, or being a spectator mounted high in a stadium to watch someone hit a ball and run around the field, Mr. Suburbis and Mr. Metropolis would find new enjoyment in the sport of face slapping, punning and belt and finger-hooking wrestling.

The "sport" of face slapping gained prominence in Russia over an incident of Wasy! Bezborovny and Michalko Ganiux drank a toast to each other in a vodka spot in Kiev in 1931. Then, playfully, Michalko slapped Wasy's face. Just playfully, but with a little more force, Wasy slapped back. After a bit of reflection, Michalko again slapped Wasy, and again Wasy slapped him. That started it. As the men continued to sup each other alternately, one of the customers took over the job as referee. At the end of ten hours, he grew sleepy, went home, and another referee proceeded to serve. He became worn out watching Wasy! and Michalko slapping faces that had become disgraced, so he went home and a third referee took over. After the contest had gone on for thirty hours, with neither man willing to stop, the referee stepped between them. "It is silly, very silly," he said. "Stop this and go home." Wasy! and Michalko quit slapping and went home. The referee ruled draw.

In Wales they like a sport called punning. The contestants put on heavy shoes with reinforced toes. They stand facing each other, hands on the other's shoulders. On signal, they start kicking each other's shins. The man who releases the hold on the opponent's shoulders first and back away to save his shin bones from being reduced to talcum powder is the loser.

In Switzerland, a favorite form of sport is known as belt wrestling. Each contestant wears a big belt with handles attached. The idea is to grab a handle, twist the opponent, and slam him to the ground, which action constitutes victory.

Another type of wrestling sport is fingerhooking. Men stand on opposite sides of the table, lean forward, and interlace fingers. The man is winner who, using the fingers held, is able to haul his opponent across the table, and dump him on the ground.

This should only be an introduction to a whole new experience with sports. Why don't you challenge a friend to one of the games? Of course with the intention of never going through with it.

Players Present Final Revision Of Crew Chiefs

A final revised list of crew chiefs for the spring play, "The Stoops to Conquer" has been announced by Longwood Players.

Heading lights is Bobbi Rice; scenery, Allison Fung; props, Marcia Calce; costumes, Beth Turner; director of public relations, Nancy Wolff; make-up, Donna Westaway; house, Betty MacCorkle; sound, Karen Engdahl; and Mary Hese Cortopassi, stage manager.

The merits of performance are March 12, 13, and 14 in Jarman Auditorium at 8:00 p.m.

result of arrest planning was evident as the singing groups followed on stage before a full and captivated audience.

Longwood radio station WFLO performed the MC duties with great stage presence as he introduced the groups, some of them making their first appearance before a large crowd. The purpose of the Hootenanny which was to get student groups from around the state together to raise money for the Junior class, was fully achieved while the audience seemed to have great enthusiasm for the performers.

The Collegian Quartet from Emory and Henry College began the program with Dave Musgrave, worth of Hampden-Sydney following. This was Dave's first solo appearance before an audience.

Rupert Whitree from H-SC and John McCallister and Robert Clark of Richmond make up the Freelanders and the dynamic Minutemen: Bob Zentz, Euclid Hanbury and Harry Sargent made a lasting impression with their trio's style. (The Minutemen must be back, girls!)

Our Longwood freshmen, Diane Davis, Kathy Brewer, and Nancy Jo Taylor contributed to the female voices as did Kay Jenkins from Lynchburg College, The Fanny Hill Singers, The Churchkeys, and the Greenbriars from Concord College in Athens, West Virginia, completed the program.

Thanks are in order for all of those who worked on costumes and especially to "Diane" Grant, chairman of the Hootenanny, Marcia Siegfried, technical director, Cathy Hughes, publicity manager, and Pat Wallace, talent coordinator. Also thanks to each person who helped make the show such a great success.

Students Say No To Whole Count For Frosh Vote

"Should freshmen votes count as a whole vote?" About 60 per cent of those participating in the poll voted negatively to this question. They backed their answer by saying that freshmen do not know the actual qualifications of the candidates and that they are too easily swayed by the opinion of the upper classesmen. It was also felt that a large freshman class could too easily sway an election.

The only reason expressed for voting from vote as a whole was that they are as much a part of these organizations as upper classesmen.

Betty Shepherd, chairman of the Election Committee, asked to thank the student body for their cooperation and for making the new election system a success. She hopes that the remaining procedure will be as successful. The Election Committee asks that any suggestions for improving the system be turned in to the committee members.

Baptist Attend Missionary Conference

Several Longwood Baptist students and their director, Joan Spencer, attended the annual Missions Conference last weekend, February 21-23.

The conference was held at Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary at Wake Forest, N. C. The convention featured many noted speakers. Dr. Jesse Fletcher, secretary of the Department of Missions, Executive of the Foreign Missions Board delivered the main address.

Home missionaries and foreign missionaries now on leave led workshops for college students from seven middle and southeastern states.

Workshops were concerned with fields of service and the various types of missionary work.

A special feature of the weekend was a workshop and lectures on the work of the Peace Corps.

Question Of Art Films: Escapism Or Quality?

opportunities which will raise the cultural level of its students. Within these foreign films, both a country's social and artistic cultures are illuminated. Socially one is made aware of many of the country's problems. Artistically, one is rewarded through contact with an art form which illustrates techniques approaching the aesthetic heights of a clear, delicate poetry. A sunrise, as is a true art film, is enjoyed because it is beautiful. Whether or not it may prove educational is inconsequential. It would seem, however, that as a student—once supposedly in quest of knowledge—a subtle combination of enjoyment and instruction would be applauded. With these films—art films or those foreign ones of quality—the students of Longwood have been granted a rare and relatively inexpensive privilege and it therefore seems nothing short of ridiculous to contemplate squandering it.

Possibly the strongest argument against foreign films is found in the necessary use of subtitles. Here, one may draw an analogy between the interpreters used in the U. N. and subtitles. Both processes are slow and require patience, but they are vital to comprehension. American isolationism is a thing of the past; interpreters and subtitles are the makeshift means by which we are able to communicate politically and culturally. For better or for worse, the U. S. has accepted a position of world leadership and as such would be extremely derelict if it failed to know as thoroughly as possible those whom it is supposedly attempting to lead or to save. Any life may serve as an example. Culturally, the United States is not respected abroad. The film student represents this most glaringly. Although popular as occasional escapism, American films seldom stimulate admiration as being a true form of art. Only when Americans themselves stand a higher cultural level will this situation change. As students and future leaders, it is up to us to begin fulfilling our obligations. Art is the universal language. The filmic art is the most accessible and least strenuous of the art media. As such, it should be utilized.

SAI Members Plan Musicales For Students

The Gamma Kappa Chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota will present a musicale on Sunday, March 1, at 3:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

The program will open with Patricia Lee Galloway at the piano; she will perform Schubert's Impromptu, Op. 90, No. 4. The next selection will be Annalyn's Fantasia, Op. 26, No. 2, and Elizabeth Ann Rex will play Brahms' Rhapsody in B minor, Op. 79, No. 1.

Sue Carolyn Pearce will perform the clarinet solo, Allegretto Fantasia by Miskow; her accompanist will be Mildred Johnson.

Next on the program will be Nancy Carol Cumbs and Elizabeth Rex playing Poulenc's Sonata for Four Hands.

The final number on the program will be J. S. Bach's Sonata V performed by Elizabeth McKeown Howard, organist. The public is invited.

Piano Program

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Nagle of Chevy Chase, Maryland, will present a program of music for two pianos at assembly on Tuesday, March 3. The program is sponsored by the Gamma Kappa Chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota.

Demos Speaks To LC Students In Open Lecture

Dr. Raphael Demos who spoke to the student body last Friday began by announcing that he would not use the microphone. This enabled the renowned scholar to walk to and fro in front of his audience as he talked about Greek contributions to modern thought.

The Greeks, said Dr. Demos, represent the spring of Western civilization, because the roots of modern thought are in their culture.

The reason that the very foundation of the West was paved by the Greeks lies in their insatiable curiosity to know. The beauty of this curiosity is that the Greeks pursued thought for its own sake, not for any practical result. It is amazing that the Greeks made so many important contributions to science without having any equipment for experimentation.

In the field of mathematics the geometry formulated by Euclid has lasted for more than 2,000 years. Another Greek mathematician, Pythagoras, discovered irrational numbers and made several momentous contributions to geometry, so important was his discovery that he was persecuted for it. Aristotle's Academy was founded on the basis of his teachings.

Another ancient Greek, Democritus, said that matter was made of indivisible particles which he called "atoms." Thus the atomic theory considered "modern" by so many of us was contributed by a Greek.

Discussions of Aristotle's acute observations of living things, his anticipations of many modern discoveries. As an early "biologist" he classified beings into species. However, Aristotle thought that the species were fixed, and even before Darwin's discoveries, scientists discovered that species evolve.

Aristarchus studied the science of mechanics and discovered several mechanical laws one of which is the law of displacement. With Aristotle began modern astronomy. In fact, the Copernican discovery is actually a rediscovery of this early astronomer's observing that the universe was heliocentric, not geocentric.

The Greek contributions to science were important because they were the beginnings of explaining nature in its own terms; they marked the "beginning of the end" of superstition and mythology.

The Greeks also anticipated the Christian concept of man by looking at him as a rational animal and by trying to control his passions by reason and as an individual. Furthermore, the Greeks, via Aristotle, felt that man was a social, political animal that can not develop outside society.

The ancient Greeks viz. Socrates, the philosopher, felt that self knowledge was important. Furthermore, Socrates felt that man knows the good, he would follow the good.

Western civilization also owes the concept of democracy to the Greeks who, according to Dr. Demos, allowed no powers to limit democracy. However, Plato denounced this government as an irrational form of government. In his Republic, Plato wished to have the experts in government govern; therefore democracy to Plato was a violation of the principle of the expert.

From The Board

The Legislative Board was asked to consider the continuation of the "Miss Longwood" contest. Because interest has been shown by the students the contest will be held again this year. Jo Leslie Andrews, winner of last year's contest, has been asked to help in its organization. The contest will be a student activity and suggestions for its organization and presentation will be considered. It is hoped that through student interest and enthusiasm, the contest will be successful and continue to be a part of Longwood's work for future announcements concerning the coming event.

Dr. J. Arthur Pastore, a member of the English Department, will take the night Thursday night, February 27, at the monthly Faculty Fireside. The meeting will be held at 9:00 p.m. in the Games Room. Dr. Pastore will discuss "Some Aspects of Modern Poetry."

Permission has been granted for those who attend the Junior Dance, February 29, to leave campus after the dance and go to the Cedarbrook Restaurant. The restaurant has agreed to remain open until 12:45 a.m. Everyone—those who visit the Cedarbrook as well as those who remain on campus—must be signed in their dorms by 1:00 a.m. Social regulations which pertain to Longwood functions will remain in effect for those going to the Cedarbrook.

Keep informed and up-to-date on election activities. File petitions for minor elections and support your nominees for both major and minor offices.

Board Names Patterson Education Chairman

Dr. Charles H. Patterson, Jr., has been appointed chairman of the department of education, psychology and philosophy at Longwood by the State Board of Education. Dr. Patterson will succeed Dr. Richard B. Brooks July 1 when Dr. Brooks takes over as dean of the college.

Dr. Patterson received his BA, MA, and doctorate degrees from the University of Virginia. Before joining the faculty at Longwood in 1961, he served one year as principal of Green Springs Elementary School in Louisa. Since 1961 he has served as director of student teaching and has been responsible for the establishment of student teaching programs for Longwood in Richmond, Henrico County, Danville, Roanoke, and Colonial Heights.

A specialist in educational research and development, he is a member of the Virginia Education Association, the National Education Association and the American Association of University Professors.

Newman Club

The Longwood College Newman Club will sponsor a day of recollection on Sunday, March 8. This is open to all students and will feature talks on various subjects.

College Names Building, Honors Hiner Sisters

The State Board of Education has approved the naming of the education building, the Hiner Building, in honor of Miss Mary Clay Hiner and Miss Winnie V. Hiner.

The building now housing the department of education, closed circuit television facilities and other classrooms was formerly the college training school and elementary school for Farmville. Miss Mary Clay Hiner became an instructor in the high school department of the college in 1905. She resigned in 1914 to do further study. In 1922, she returned to the college as a member of the English faculty. She became a well-known authority in the field of children's literature.

Recently, a former colleague of Miss Hiner's has established at Longwood, the Mary Clay Hiner Scholarship in appreciation of the work done by her in this field. She retired as Professor of English in 1947.

Miss Winnie V. Hiner began work as a clerk at the college in 1913 and became treasurer in 1924. She held this position until her retirement in 1955 serving under three presidents. At the college, she is remembered for her friendly manner and for her thorough knowledge of the financial affairs of the college. Since their retirement, the Miss Hiners have maintained a strong interest in the college and are always willing to be of service in any way they can. They are both held in high regard by the alumnae, faculty and staff of the college, and by the people of the town of Farmville.

Publication Names Wallace 'Rotunda' Editor For '64-'65

HEADS PAPER

Chosen recently to edit the Rotunda for next year is Junior Pat Wallace. Pat has previously served as Feature Editor of college paper.

Editor-in-chief of the Rotunda for the coming year is Patricia Wallace. Pat is a rising senior from Virginia Beach and she is majoring in social science and English.

Pat has been active on the Rotunda Staff since her freshman year. She has been a reporter and during this session she has served as feature editor.

This year Pat is vice-president of the junior class and was her class representative to Circus Court during her sophomore year. She has served as corresponding secretary for the Nathaniel Macon Society for two years and is a member of Pi Gamma Mu, Phi Delta Epsilon, and the Longwood Players. Pat has also been active on committees for Circus and May Day.

Pat has selected the staff to work with her on the Rotunda for the coming year. Barbara Melton will serve as managing editor and the news editor will be Kay Young. Serving as feature editor will be Maria Grant. The sports editor's position will be filled by Jayne Eddy and working with her as assistant sports editor will be Sharon Williams. Sandra Jamison will hold the position of desk editor and Marcia Seigfried will be copy editor.

The staff artist will be Frances Lansing. Next year's Rotunda will feature more original art work and cartoons by Longwood students.

Chadourne Gives Talk To Les Francophiles

M. Marc Chadourne, visiting professor of French at Hollins College, will address Les Francophiles on Thursday, March 5 at 4:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge. The subject of his lecture will be "L'Amour et le Romanisme." M. Chadourne will also be accompanied by M. Jean LeBlon, chairman of the French department at Hollins. Following the lecture there will be an informal gathering for those who wish to talk with M. Chadourne.

Since the liberation of France, Marc Chadourne has divided his time between the United States and France. He was born in Corbeil and studied at the Lycée Louis le Grand, Institut des Sciences Politiques, and the Sorbonne. He has his Baccalaureat en lettres and his Licence en lettres. In 1914 M. Chadourne was a volunteer in field artillery and later became an airplane pilot. In 1918 he entered the colonial service. He spent two years in Cameroon where he wrote his first novel, Vaseo in 1927. This success was the beginning of his literary career.

Asian Tour

M. Chadourne received the Prix Femina for his Cettie de la Folie, published in 1930. He was marked by the publication of his book, China, for which he received the Grand prix de Reportage. His next adventure was in Soviet Russia which led to U. R. S. S. sans passion. From 1932 to 1933 he traveled in Mexico and made a study of Central America. His next travels he wrote Anhauac ou l'Indien sans plumes. The same year is marked by Absence.

In 1934 M. Chadourne traveled around the world as a reporter for Paris-Midi. This was during the time of the American New Deal. Japan was preparing for war, China was threatened by aggression, and India was in the throes of upheaval. As a result, M. Chadourne wrote two prophetic works, Extreme-Occident and Extreme-Orient. He then found time to write a novel in 1937, Dieu crea d'abord Lilith, a drama of colonial love.

Secret Mission

At the eve of the second World War M. Chadourne was assigned to a secret mission in the Far East with headquarters in Shanghai. He was the Director for Political Affairs in Indo-China. Later he was blacklisted by the

Groups Evaluate LC, Study All Activities

Committees representing the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education visited Longwood this week as a part of the regular re-evaluation of the college.

For the past year the members of the college faculty and staff have conducted an extensive self-study in preparation for the committees' visitation which takes place once every ten years. The faculty was divided into various committees which have made concentrated studies on every conceivable angle of college life.

After this, a thorough written report was compiled which the members of the evaluation teams read. The job of the faculty committees was two-fold. They re-examined everything concerning the college life as carefully and as deeply as possible. They reached conclusions as to what to keep, stop and change. After this the written report was submitted to the Associations.

The purpose of the two accreditation organizations is to assure the American public of continued excellence in higher education. Members of the committees were: representing the Southern Association was Dr. John B. Walters, Jr., Dean of Alabama College; Dr. W. H. Dickmann, Chairman of the English Department; University of Southwestern Louisiana; Dr. Charles D. Ashmore, Dean, Converse College; Dr. Iva Glyn, Dean of Students, Winthrop College and Mr. Glenn Massengale, Director of Library, Huntington College.

Representing the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education were Dr. Mark M. Evans, Director of Student Teaching and Placement, West Chester State College; Dr. James Butler, Director of Elementary Education, Appalachian State Teachers College; Dr. Joseph R. Baier, Director, Graduate Program, Western Maryland College; Dr. Thomas E. Southard, Professor of Education, University of South Carolina.

Library Gives Study Rooms To Students

The six small rooms on the east side ground floor of Lancaster Library, once used as offices by the Education Department, are now available for use by Longwood students. Study Rooms 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 may be used for group study (not necessarily to study the same thing); the remaining room, equipped with four manual typewriters, is for typing only.

Before using the Typing Room Use Book at the Circulation Desk to obtain the key. One must check out and return the key when finished. If other students are using the room, check out at the Circulation Desk but leave the last occupant to lock the door and return the key.

Study Rooms 1-5 are for the use of Longwood women students only during regular library hours. To use a room, sign the Study Room Use Book at the Circulation Desk. The last occupant of the Room is to lock the door and return the key to the desk. No library material is to be taken into the rooms unless it has been properly charged out, and is not to be left in them. No personal property is to be stored in the rooms. Doors are not to be locked while rooms are in use. Smoking is permitted as long as the furniture is not damaged. It is expected that these rooms will be treated with the same care and respect which students have traditionally treated the other areas of the library.

These six Study Rooms will be available to use beginning Thursday, March 5, 1964. A list of all these regulations will be posted in each dormitory.

Opportunity Not Taken

Last week the student body had an excellent opportunity to meet and question the presidential candidates of the major organizations, but only a minority took advantage of it. The question we wish to ask is: Why did the entire student body not go to these conferences?

First, the timing of the conferences was bad. Many professors scheduled tests last week. We feel, however, that forty-five minutes is not too much time to spend away from one's studies when that time can mean the difference between an informed electorate and an uninformed one.

Second, the Head Table has a policy of not making announcements at dinner. Had the Head Table made an exception each night last week and reminded the students that the conferences were being held, perhaps more of the students would have gone.

Third, the freshman class, the class that would have benefited most by attending these conferences is not fully aware of the importance of knowing the people who seek the campus's highest offices.

Regardless of the excuses that the students have for not attending the conferences, we feel that unless they were already aware of all the candidates' assets and liabilities they would do themselves as individuals and the student body as a whole, a favor by not voting, for voting on the basis of popularity is neither fair to the candidates nor the student body and uninformed voting is guesswork, and guesswork should not play the major role in the selection of campus leaders.

Student Lawds Work Of Legislative Board

Dear Editor:

I attended the last meeting of Legislative Board at their request to make a report on the work of the May Day committee. At that meeting many other matters were discussed as a part of their duties.

I was quite impressed as a member of the student body at the seriousness and integrity shown by all members of the Board. Does the student body realize the great burden placed on their shoulders by us and how well they carry out their duties?

Matters brought before them are not merely rushed through the ranks and forgotten. Research and controversy are a part of every question raised. Each member does her part with much sincerity and dedication to the good of the student body and not as an impersonal and trivial matter.

I now ask that each of us congratulate ourselves for the choices we have made in electing this body to work for us and to thank them by our undying support and interest. I for one am thankful that I have so blindly and unthinkingly trusted the Legislative Board and that this trust has not been in vain.

Major Candidates Express Views

Editor's Note: This week, the Rotunda is devoting this page to the coverage of last week's conferences with the major candidates. Due to the limitation of space, the Rotunda could not print the conferences in full. The staff has edited some of the questions and answers in order to clarify them, but not to alter their meaning. There is, in some cases, a difference in the space allotted to candidates running for the same office:

Legislative

Dodge

Q. How do you think of the presidency of the Legislative Board and the responsibilities it entails?

A. The president of the Legislative Board is a co-ordinator between the students and the administration. It is important, however, for him to keep in mind that the students have elected her and she is to represent their interests.

Q. Do you feel that the Freshman class should have a full vote?

A. It would be to the advantage of the upperclassmen if the freshmen did not have a full vote, since the upperclassmen know the candidates better. However, it is unconstitutional for the freshmen not to have a full vote.

Q. Do you think that there is a need for more open campaigning on campus?

A. This new system could easily be a tradition. I think we ought to wait and see how it works. The Legislative Board has done the best it could without making too drastic a change.

Q. What about the interpretation of rules?

A. Here, there may be some misunderstanding. This is one responsibility of the Legislative Board — to revise and evaluate every rule each year or as the need arises.

Reamey

Q. Have you any ideas which are in the making or any changes that you would like to see take place?

A. I would like to re-evaluate what we already have and improve it. There is a need for a revision of the by-laws, for example. Dr. Landford feels that some organizations have too much power in some instances.

Q. Will the drinking rule stand as always?

A. Rules must be approved by Dean Wilson. Now, the Board has discussed this rule with her. The rule which covers drinking at Hampden-Sydney is in a way of appearance's sake, but the possibility for a change is always considered. Rules are studied and revised each year.

Q. How are suggestions of the Legislative Board considered by the administration?

A. It is very seldom that the Administration reveals that they have made up their minds before being approached by the Board. Once in a while, Dean Wilson through whom we work will definitely say no, but in most cases she listens to all sides and takes our suggestions.

Q. Do you feel freshmen should have a full vote?

A. If a freshman's vote is an informed one; then, that vote should count as a whole vote.

Woodward

Q. About your image: do you feel capable of being diplomatic here? Could you create the best students and faculty members could you create the necessary equilibrium? Could you hold the student body's respect?

A. Respect is built not because of the position. If students feel that the president of the Legislative Board is working for them and their ideas they would be cooperative. I believe that I could do this.

Q. There are two kinds of officers — the ones who follow the pattern of past officers and those who have ideas and wish to effect changes. Which do you consider yourself?

A. In between the two. A president should be able to motivate members of the Board, but this is not entirely the responsibility of the whole Board should come up with ideas. The president shouldn't throw ideas at members.

Q. Would you comment on the drinking rules? Is there a possibility of change in the future?

A. They were changed radically two years ago when the present drinking rules were put into effect for a one year trial. There was an attempt to allow drinking at Hampden-Sydney, but the administration disapproved.

Judicial

Birch

Q. Should students be convicted on Honor Code offenses by a simple majority vote of the Judicial Board?

A. If the vote is not more than a simple majority — for example, two-thirds or three-fourths — I feel that it leaves too much doubt. This is worth looking into. Furthermore, I feel that all evidence should be thoroughly examined before the trial.

Q. I would rather see a guilty person go free than to convict an innocent person.

Q. What do you think of the Hampden-Sydney drinking rule?

A. I do not think that it would cause undue scandal for Longwood to be allowed to drink at Hampden-Sydney. Since the rule is broken so frequently this may mean it is a bad rule.

Q. What is your definition of unladylike conduct?

A. Anything that would damage the name of Longwood College may be interpreted as unladylike conduct. As for turning fellow students in, in such cases that is a personal thing. Some unladylike behavior may indicate that the girl needs some sort of guidance.

Q. How should people be treated when they come before the Judicial Board?

A. They should not be afraid to appear before the Board; for example, they should not be treated as criminals. There must be the elimination of fear.

Cordle

Q. Do you think there is a need for a revision in the drinking rule for Hampden-Sydney?

A. In order to create the image we should convey, I don't think any rule should be broken. I do not think that drinking at Hampden-Sydney should be allowed and do not agree that because a rule is broken it should be revised.

Q. How do you feel about Student Government searches?

A. I feel that it is necessary and right for Student Government to conduct searches in order to gather needed information for trials. I do not feel, however, that they should be conducted without something definite in mind.

Q. How would you handle the problem of outside discussion of cases by board members?

A. I feel that the proceedings inside the judicial room should be kept secret and not be discussed by any member of the Board. I feel that any member guilty of the offense should be reprimanded and hope that she would not continue this action. I think that some decision should be made on this and be proposed to the Legislative Board.

Q. Do you feel that there should be a consistency in punishments for all cases?

A. Yes, I believe there should be.

McGhee

Q. How do you think the Judicial Board could better handle the enforcement of the drinking rule at Hampden-Sydney?

A. The Board is not a detective agency. It does not look for trouble. They try the cases that are brought before them. I am not in favor of having girls "checked" in some way to determine whether they have been drinking or not while at Hampden-Sydney. We are aware that this rule is being broken frequently, as we are aware of other rule violations.

Q. How can the present method for conducting searches be changed for improvement?

A. A change is needed because of the inconvenience to the students. However, clearing the hall is almost the only way to avoid confusion.

Q. What would you do if you found that a member of the board were discussing a case with other students?

A. The Judicial Board would act on this. It would be decided by the council. I do not think it should be an Honor Code offense. Most members of the board take their oath of office very seriously.

Q. Should the student body know why a girl on trial was convicted?

A. The student body has a right to know the true facts of any case. Although, there are times when all the facts cannot be published and are necessarily kept secret.

Old

Q. How do you feel about the Hampden-Sydney drinking rule?

A. Something should be done. I would like to see Longwood girls able to drink over there. A girl may go to Leo's or Hamden-Sydney and be affected the same way.

Q. What part should the chairman take?

A. She should be aware of all conditions, but she is more of a mediator between the defendant and the Board. She should not sway opinion but should make sure that all the facts are brought out.

Q. How do you feel about a government member discussing a case with a friend?

A. She should be taken before the Board for an Honor Code offense herself.

Q. What affect do you think not always shipping for cheating would have on the Honor Code?

A. Perhaps, it would weaken the Code, but the Board, of course, must have a human understanding.

House Council

Cooper

Q. Do dormitory presidents need assistants?

A. Yes, I think that dorm presidents definitely need assistants to help share the responsibilities of that office. An assistant would help to ease the burden of the president and also be of great help in enforcing rules.

Q. Do you have any plans for making House Council more efficient?

A. The vice-presidents of each hall should play a larger role in carrying out the duties of the president. I would also hope to have the whole student body take more interest in House Council. House Council should be open to suggestions regarding the rules and proposed rules.

People should be more aware of their part in House Council and their responsibilities. Also, I hope to have people become more aware of the fact that they are House Council, and that House Council can function effectively only with their cooperation. I would like to see a greater respect developed for House Council and its purposes.

Q. Where would you draw the line between the cases that would come under the jurisdiction of House Council and those under the Judicial Board?

A. This would have to be reached by a mutual agreement between the two boards.

Q. When food is taken from the dining hall do you think the person should be given call down when food is seen in the room later?

A. Yes, this is still violating that particular rule.

Garrett

Q. How often are House Council rules revised?

A. The rules are worked out when the Handbook is put together each year.

Many rules, however, did not originate with House Council such as the rule concerning food being taken from the dining hall as an instance.

Q. What about the possibility of allowing freshmen to go to other dorms between 10 and 11 p.m.?

A. This was once allowed, but then stopped because of the rush in getting back about five minutes to 11.

Q. Should hall presidents and vice-presidents have the same authority?

A. Yes, because often one or the other is away and both should have equal authority in such an instance.

Q. Why are people who have received five call downs not taken before House Council instead of the Judicial Board?

A. House Council does review the cases and decides whether to send them to the Judicial Board, because House Council feels that its rules are those of common courtesy and when a person receives this many call downs she can not get along with others. Also House Council can only give plain campus and they feel this merits strict campus, which only the Judicial Board can give.

Hutchinson

Q. How do you feel about hall presidents who do not give some people call downs and give them to others quite frequently?

A. The girls on each hall elect their presidents and should choose someone who is responsible.

Q. If a hall president was reported as negligent, what would you do?

A. I would first talk to the girl and if necessary, hold a new election.

Q. Do you think that House Council, and the Judicial Board could get together and have House Council handle lateness cases.

A. Yes, I think that House Council could handle those cases since they come under dorm rules.

Q. How would you make House Council more efficient?

A. We could increase the size of House Council and have more assistants for hall presidents.

Sykes

Q. How could the feelings of the student body towards House Council be improved?

A. House Council itself must set a good example for others to follow. Students must also realize that House Council rules are for the students' benefit and protection.

Q. Would you explain why there are some doors you can use after six and which doors these are?

A. The doors most used are kept open but it would be a hazard to keep open those doors which are poorly lighted. The main reason is for the protection of the students.

Q. Could study hour be extended until 10:30?

A. If the student body wishes this, I'm sure it could be extended. There is also a possibility that study hour could begin at 7:00 instead of 7:30.

Q. Do you feel there is a better way to elect hall presidents in upper class dorms? Could they be appointed by House Council?

A. There could be some resentment on the students' part unless they can elect the girl they wish to see as president of their hall. But perhaps, it might be more of an honor and taken more seriously if House Council appointed upper class dorm presidents.

Longwood Crushes Stratford In One-Sided Contests

By Maria Grant
Longwood's Blue and Whites turned back the Stratford College basketball team on the winner's court last Thursday in the most one-sided game of the season.

The LC squad hit 8 out of 17 about half of their field goals for a total of 74 points.

In the first quarter of play, four shots and connected for just which moved rather slowly, there were several pass interceptions by the home team, but they didn't play as smoothly as usual. The period ended with a paucity 16-8 margin for the Blues.

Both teams tightened their zone defense in the second quarter and Stratford's offense shot for the basket when they could get anywhere near it. For a change, Longwood did quite a bit of inside shooting and most of the playing was on LC's end of the court.

The Stratford team did a lot of dribbling, which, in most cases, did them more harm than good. During this quarter, the girls from Danville could squeeze only 2 points from the Blue and White defense, while LC poured in 22, leaving the stanza 38-10. The home team again outplayed the visitors although neither team looked as if they were playing their best. Stratford could not seem to control the ball while Longwood eventually got better on passing and teamwork.

The third period picked up speed, and when the horn sounded it was 57-12 (Stratford again only managed 2 points).

In the fourth quarter the home squad finally sent in substitutions, who kept dumping in baskets. The Danville team put the good fight right until the final buzzer. The scoreboard read 74-

16. Playing for the Blues were: Marjorie Barnard, Carolyn Burnett, Larlene Robertson, Melody Saunders, Frances Stewart, and Carrie Lee Wilson.

A. So, Lynn Baker, Nevis Born, Lisa Cobb, Connie Gallahan, Barbara Ragland, and Betsy Taylor. Officiating the game were "Butch" McDaniel and Lois Obenshain.

The second game Thursday was just about as one-sided as the first, with Longwood defeating Stratford 32-7.

A faster-paced game than the previous one, LC chunked in 8 points before Stratford broke their jinx with a free throw. But the Blues countered with another basket. Not to be outdone, Danville swished a good outside shot, and the period ended 19-3.

The second stanza went fast with both team's players going at a quick pace. But Stratford was held scoreless. At the half it was LC 21-Stratford 3.

In a low scoring third quarter neither team could find the basket. The Blues and Whites managed only five points and Stratford two. Stamping down the court between shots, the basketball was exchanged many times.

A lot of ball stealing revealed in the final minutes of play and the fast pace was kept up. The scoreboard at the final buzzer was 32-7, a victory for Longwood.

Lynn Baker, Nevis Born, Diane Bruce, Lisa Cobb, Connie Gallahan, and Mary Virginia Mason played for the home team.

Also Pat Monger, Susan Myers, Barbara Ragland, Kathy Still, Betsy Taylor, and Sharon Williams.

Melody Saunders and Carrie Lee Wilson acted as referees for the game. Diane Davis and Pat Lyddane took charge of the scoring and timing.

GIVE IT BACK, PLEASE!

Playing host to Stratford Junior College's basketball team last Thursday, Longwood Blue and Whites captured one-sided games by scores of 74-16 and 32-7.

Bowman Interests Include Art, Music, Travel, Teaching At LC

By Annette Wenger
One of the reasons Miss Bulow W. Bowman the new Assistant Professor of Physical Education, chose to come to Longwood was the fact that she would be teaching in an all girls' school—an experience which would be new for her.

Originally from Charlotte, North Carolina, she received the B.S.P.E. degree from the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina and the M.Ed. degree from the University of North Carolina.

Miss Bowman came to Longwood from Atlantic Christian College where she was a faculty member for four years. Previously, she taught at the N. C. State School for the Blind in Raleigh. There she taught swimming to handicapped, blind, deaf, and polio-stricken children.

As would be expected, Miss Bowman particularly enjoys participating in sports and attending basketball and football games. In addition, she has an avid interest in art. She enjoys attending exhibitions and especially likes the work of Michelangelo. She also likes all types of "good music," although she admits her ideas of "good" might not agree with a music critic's opinion.

Another of Miss Bowman's hobbies is traveling. This interest has taken her through the western United States and into Mexico, through the Midwest, and as far north as New York state. She hopes to travel to New England in the near future. This past summer she realized a long-held dream when she was able to travel to Europe with several other professors.

Miss Bowman thinks Longwood is a very good college. "The students," she says, "impress me as being very nicely groomed and well-mannered and in college to learn. I've taught some of the best students I've ever taught here."

She added that she is glad Longwood will remain exclusive to girls' college. In her opinion, the co-educational college often tends to put too much emphasis on social activities rather than on scholastic achievement.

Sportin' Chance

By Linda Turner

When your conversation lacks interest and enthusiasm, turn to your friend and say "Did you know that Gas House Gus graduate of the Everglades, established a world's record for frog leaping with a jump of nineteen feet in 1937 at Sarasota, Florida? Immediately a response to your information will be given and you will be well on the way to display more of your knowledge of sports.

Gas House Gus was one of one hundred participants in the contest and ten thousand spectators watched the "Frog Olympics." His prize was fifty dollars for his sponsor. That night he rode in a parade and his opponents became frogging diners. If the adventures of the frog did not hold you spellbound, it might just be an indication that you should inquire further into the large field of sports. Statistics lack the excitement to cause much interest. However, everyday we read of someone who jumped higher than before, or ran faster than another.

After complaining about tense muscles from over activity, we might sit down and read about Johanna Buslinger's durability age of 1900. Walking ten hours daily, within fifty-five days she traveled eight hundred-one miles, the distance from Vienna to Paris, "walking on hands."

Squeezed in between the articles of significance to everyone are found mentions of the oddities of the sports world. No one is expected to recall the details, such as Gas House Gus's fame, but being aware of what is going on will increase your love for anything labeled sports. Let's give our "unknown" champions a "sportin' chance" to reach their fame.

'Fogies' Stop Seniors In Volleyball Contest

By Maria Grant

The Faculty Fogies remained winners and still champions of another annual student-faculty volleyball meet. They fought hard for their second win in a row—this one over the class of 1964.

Each team sported a cheering section, but the faculty's uniforms (?) definitely outdid the Seniors'. Dr. "Ringo" Moss headed his squad with yells of "Kill 'em" thrown in at crucial moments. Miss Nichols and Miss Bedford supported him very well.

Mr. Allen, Mrs. Bobbitt, Miss Bowman, Mr. Burnside, Mr. Rubley, Miss Smith, and Mr. Umphlett went in for the first game.

The Senior Squad sent in Norma Eddy, Doris Harrison, Cheryl Longstreet, and "Butch" McDaniel to oppose the faculty. Also, Marian Russ, Gay Taylor, Peg Waldo, and Sandy Waugh played all four and forth volley which kept spectators on the edge of their seats took place in the first game. Score at the half was 5-4 Seniors. In the next period the Seniors came back with several good saves, but then Mr. Umphlett got "mad" and smashed one over the smooth while the Seniors were laughing and confident.

Mr. Rubley and Mr. Burnside sent numerous spikes over the net that were hard to stop, and the game ended 8-8. In the overtime the points went back and forth, but the seniors finally grabbed the win 11-9.

Game Two saw the Seniors open in Ann Downey, Donna Humphlett, Fritz Maddox, Patty O'Neill, Lynne Osteen, Jo Ann Perry, Joanne Slack, Peggy Vaughan, and Rena Weid. And the opponents sent in Dr. Brooks, Mr. Chavall, Mr. Elmer, Dr. Helms, Dr. Jackson, and Dean Wilson.

In this contest another set of almost impossible volleys were kept up by the Seniors as the faculty slammed them across.

There was a slight disagreement at one point when members of the Faculty Fogies challenged the ref on a call, but order was restored and the game was again underway. The Fogies got five points in a row and the game ended 16-3 in their favor.

Game Three started out with a bang as the Seniors shot four points before the opposition could get one. The first Senior team was back in with nice easy playing and were ahead at the half 5-2.

Then it was the Fogies' turn as they got possession of the ball and managed to keep the class of '64 from scoring any further points. At the final buzzer it was 12-5 for the Fogies who clinched their second meet in a row.

Gilliam, Lynch Answer Queries From Students

Gilliam

Q. What are the advantages of women participating in intercollegiate sports?

A. An intercollegiate sports program gives those girls who are more athletically inclined a chance to exhibit their skills.

Q. How do intercollegiate sports benefit the school?

A. Intercollegiate sports bring prestige to the school and help the school become well known throughout the state.

Q. Do you have any plans for next year?

A. In color cup competition there seems to be a loss of interest due to lack of participation. Perhaps, the council could set aside a day each week for things like "gunny sack."

Q. Is the color cup competition outdated?

A. No, I think the program is good, but it needs to be worked on. It adds to school spirit and gives a spirit of competition.

Lynch

Q. Do you have any ideas you would like to see carried out?

I think we should stress the point that students do not have to be physical education majors to participate in the A. A. programs. Perhaps we could have a powder-puff football competition and an organized field-day in the spring, with the emphasis on the individual rather than the team sports.

Q. Are A. A. council meetings open to the student body?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there much competition to get on Longwood teams?

A. No, few people get out. We try to let those with ability and desire participate for experience.

Q. What do you think about intercollegiate and intramural programs? Which is more important?

A. Both programs serve different purposes. The intramural program is more important, because more can participate. The intercollegiate program is important, because we learn about A.A.'s in different colleges.

New Voters

Dr. Richard Barron, government professor, will be available in the Rotunda before lunch next Tuesday and Wednesday to advise students who are eligible to vote in the November elections. He will answer questions about registration procedure and any other questions concerning elections students may have.

A ROBE BY ANY OTHER NAME

With the Commencement Day just a couple of short months away, the question on everyone's lips is: "How did the different disciplines come to be marked by academic robes with hoods of different colors?" Everybody is asking it; I mean everybody! I mean I haven't been able to walk ten feet on any campus without somebody grating my eardrums and saying, "How did the different disciplines come to be marked by academic robes with hoods of different colors, hey?"

This, I must say, is not the usual question asked by colleagues who grin my glow. (Hilariously they say, "Hey, Shurt, got a Marlboro?" And this is fitting. After all, are they not colleagues and therefore loaded with brains? And does not intelligence demand the tastiest in tobacco flavor? And does not Marlboro deliver a flavor that is uniquely delicious? And all that short!

I digress. Back to the colored hoods of academic robes. A doctor of philosophy wears blue, a doctor of medicine wears green, a master of arts wears white, a doctor of humanities wears crimson, a master of library science wears lemon yellow. Why? Why, for example, should a master of library science wear lemon yellow?

Well, sir, to answer this vexing question, we must go back to March 14, 1840. On that date the first public library in the United States was established by Ulrich Sigfoos. All of Mr. Sigfoos's neighbors were of course wildly grateful—all, that is, except Wren Toddhunter.

Mr. Toddhunter had hated Mr. Sigfoos since 1822 when both men had wooed the beautiful Melanie Zitt and Melanie had chosen Mr. Sigfoos because she was mad for dancing and Mr. Sigfoos knew all the latest steps like the Missouri Compromise. Since, the Shog's Toddhunter, still bitter, and the James K. Polk Polka-wild Mr. Toddhunter, alas, could not dance at all, owing to a wound he had received at the Battle of New Orleans. (He was struck by a falling giraffe.)

Consumed with jealousy at the success of Mr. Sigfoos's library, Mr. Toddhunter resolved to open a competing library. This he did, but he hired not one single patron away from Mr. Sigfoos. "What has Mr. Sigfoos got that I have not?" Mr. Toddhunter kept asking himself, and finally the answer came to him: books.

So Mr. Toddhunter stocked his library with lots of lovely books, and soon learned of some secret passages that he had not. But Mr. Sigfoos struck back. To regain his clientele, he began serving tea at his library every afternoon. Then, Mr. Toddhunter, not to be outdone, began serving tea with sugar. Thereupon Mr. Sigfoos began serving tea with sugar and cream. Then, Mr. Toddhunter began serving tea with sugar and cream and lemon.

This, of course, clinched the victory for Mr. Toddhunter because he had the only lemon tree in town—in fact, in the entire state of Maine—and since that day lemon yellow has, of course, been the color of the robes of masters of library science.

(Incidentally, the defeated Mr. Sigfoos packed up his library and moved to Chicago—where, alas, he failed to move there. "There were," he bewailed, "plenty of libraries in Chicago, but, alas, there was no one buying books; the one was not introduced to California until 1847 by John Wayne.)

Rice, Callison Pledge Politics, Initiate Young Republicans Club

Republicans on the Longwood campus are organizing into a club. At the meeting Bobbi Rice and Kay Callison were elected temporary chairman and vice-chairman, respectively. These temporary officers were active in Obenshain Virginia state chairman. drawing up the constitution which was presented for consideration. They received help from the Hampton-Sydney club, whose chairman, Bob Wimar, attended the meeting. Weldon Tuck, a prominent YR in Virginia, was also present.

Obenshain gives talk. Dick Obenshain began his pep talk to the fledgling club by stating his indecision as to whether to direct his attention to Bobby Baker and the bureaucracy in Washington or the tired blood in Richmond. He continued further to speak about the Republican Party's emphasis on the principles of individuality and freedom. He admonished that in an age of challenge to freedom the state of Virginia should remain its position of greatness, especially in the field of education.

Constitution Introduced

The purpose of the Longwood College Young Republicans Club as stated in its proposed constitution is as follows:

"To create on the campus a spirit of active interest in our national, state, and local government and to perpetuate the importance of the principles of the Republican party in this government. To these ends:

- To assist the students of this college in taking a responsible part in our government by urging all those who are eligible to register and vote.
- To learn of the Republican Party — its history, policies, methods, and effects by bringing to this campus outstanding Republican leaders.
- To maintain and increase the strength of the Republican Party through active campaigning for the candidates.

Democrats Choose Ricci As Secretary Of Party

Democratic National Chairman John M. Bailey has announced the appointment of Fred Ricci of Chapel Hill, N. C., as Executive secretary of the Young Democratic Clubs of America. Ricci succeeds Richard Rausch of Carroll, Iowa.

Prior to his present appointment, Ricci served as Chairman of the North Carolina Federation of College Democrats, as Vice President of the North Carolina Young Democrats, and as a member of the administrative staff of the North Carolina State Democratic Executive Committee. He was also a campaign manager for J. Albert House, newly-elected President of the YDCA.

"I am pleased," Bailey said, "that Mr. Ricci, Mr. House and Ivan Sincilar of the White House staff have already met with President Johnson to discuss plans for the participation of young people in the 1964 elections."

"The top priority task the President outlined to them was the recruitment of new voters. This will be a big and important job. There are more than eight million young people across the country who will be eligible for the first time this year to vote in the Presidential and Congressional elections.

"The record shows that the Democratic Party is the party of youth. I have no doubt that it will be so again in 1964. But we will prove it only if we work at it. We must go out to these eight million young Americans and get them to register and vote Democratic."

Serves In Army

The new Y. D. Executive Secretary is a graduate of English High School in Boston and has completed his pre-law studies at the University of North Carolina. Ricci also served as a paratrooper in the U. S. Army and was selected to participate in a special joint security program of the Army and Air Force.

Craig, Perrow Discuss "Y" Plans

Craig

Q. The "Y" is supposed to provide a spiritual and moral guidance; why hasn't it taken some sort of stand on the racial question? Couldn't it adopt some method of looking at and examining the situation?

A. The National "Y" has taken a stand on this. Here, we had a committee look into what we could do here, but nothing materialized.

Q. Why hasn't the Christian leadership taken a stand?

A. The college limits our participation. We have a Christian thing in a quiet way, but this was wasn't being found.

Q. Would the "Y" defend students a same choose to take part in racial demonstrations?

A. As far as we are concerned, we won't answer yes, but I can't answer no, the entire "Y" is cut out.

Q. In selecting the R. E. W. speaker, what are your other views?

A. We first ask the ministers and student divisions to submit names; then, a discussion of the names follows. We vote on the first, second, and third choice and ask them in that order.

Perrow

Q. Why hasn't the "Y" taken a stand on integration? Would the "Y" defend students who take part in racial demonstrations?

A. Although no formal stand on integration has yet been taken by the Y Cabinet, it has not remained totally passive since plans were considered last year for offering a tutor service to interested Negro students. However, the free schools were opened before such plans had time to become organized. In general, I feel that the Y stands in sympathy toward all racial problems and is deeply concerned with the welfare of such minority groups. Nevertheless, I feel reluctant to assert the position of the Y Cabinet as to defending students who might choose to participate in race demonstrations. Since action of this nature can become so politically involved both violently and non-violently, I would like to refrain from issuing a blank statement on this issue until a specific situation presents itself.

Q. How do you feel the "Y" could be improved?

A. I feel that the Y Cabinet is very effective on our campus, however additional student participation would be most welcome. Possibly more participation could be achieved by asking the various church groups to have more student attendance at Y meetings or for them to send more than one representative. A larger Cabinet would not only benefit the campus, but would also benefit each individual who chose to participate.

From The Board

Judi Hackney, chairman of May Day attended the Legislative Board meeting Wednesday and reported on the progress of May Day activities. The committee is studying the value of the May Day dance and whether it should be held this year.

The suggestion was made to the Board to look into the possibility of having cuts for the assembly. A committee met with Dean Mass to discuss the matter. Dean Mass advised the Board to send a formal proposal to the faculty committee recently appointed to investigate future assembly attendance. The Board is looking in this proposal the suggestion that the freshmen, and sophomores be allowed two cuts per year if the same system of assembly attendance continues with juniors and seniors alternating blocks.

Because of the election conferences the "Faculty Firesides" was postponed until March 5. Dr. Pastor will discuss "Some Aspects of Modern Poetry" in the Games Room at 7:30 p.m.

The final draft of the bylaws to the Constitution has been completed and will be submitted to Dean Wilson and Dr. Lankford for approval. With their approval the bylaws will be posted for the student body.

Because of a question as to the interpretation of specific qualifications required to run for offices of the major organizations in the current election, the Activities Committee requested that the Legislative Board interpret these regulations. After discussing the matter the Board decided that the matter in question was under the jurisdiction of the Activities Committee. The rules in question were: (1) rule 3, a, page 39 of the current Longwood Student Handbook which states, "In order to be eligible for any of the following heads of organizations one must have a cumulative average of 1.3 (3.0 points system) or 2.3 (4.0 point system); the nominees and vice presidents of both Branches of the Student Government Association, House Council, the Y. W. C. A., and the Athletic Association. (2.) Article II, Section 2, of the Constitution of the Student Government Government Association: "The president and vice president must be members of the senior class..."

Petitions for minor offices must be in to the election committee by March 6. To run for vice president of one of the major organizations the nominee must be a rising senior and to run for secretary or treasurer, the nominee must be a rising junior. The primary elections for presidents of the major organizations will be March 10, narrowing the ballot to two candidates. The general election will be March 12 at which time the student body will elect the presidents. The new proceeding are running smoothly and the Board urges the student body to continue to take part in the election events. File petitions now and support your favorite candidate.

Reed & Barton Holds Contests For Collegiates

During the months of February and March, Reed & Barton, America's oldest major silver-smiths, are conducting a "Silver Opinion Competition" in which valuable scholarships totalling $2050 are being offered to duly enrolled women students at a few selected colleges and universities.

Longwood College has been selected to enter this Competition in which the First Grand Award is a $500 cash scholarship; Second Grand Award is a $300 scholarship; Third Grand Award is a $250 scholarship; Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth awards are $200 scholarships; and Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth are $100 scholarships. In addition, there will be 100 other awards consisting of sterling silver, fine china and crystal with a total value of approximately $50.00.

In the 1964 "Silver Opinion Competition", an entry form illustrates twelve designs of sterling with eight designs of both china and crystal. The entrants simply list the three best combinations of sterling, china, and crystal from the patterns illustrated. Scholarships and awards will be made to those entries which are judged to be the most interesting or coming closest to the unanimous selections of table-setting editors from three of the nation's leading magazines.

Angel Stephenson is the Student Representative who is conducting the "Silver Opinion Competition" for Reed & Barton at Longwood College. Those interested in entering the "Silver Opinion Competition" should contact Angel Stephenson at Longwood College 100 Wheeler for entry blanks and for complete details concerning the Competition rules. She also has samples of 12 of the most popular Reed & Barton designs so that entrants can see how these sterling patterns actually look.

Through the opinions of college women competing for these scholarships, Reed & Barton hopes to compile a valuable library of expressions of young American Taste.

Presidential Candidates Face French Recognition Of China

By Pat Wallace

There has been much speculation over de Gaulle's recognition of Red China and the extent to which it will affect the coming Presidential election. This is a question with which every prospective voter should familiarize himself. Many students of government and politics have formulated an educated guess that Red China will be sitting among the member nations at the next session of the United Nations.

H-S Jongleurs, Players Render Goldsmith Play

Longwood Players and Hampton-Sydney Jongleurs will present their third play of the year on March 12, 13 and 14.

Those starring in "One Step To Conquer" are: David Reagin as Marlow; Joe Whitted as Hays; David Colson as Mr. Hardcastle; and Mike Couchman as Slingo (Sir Charles). Also Ed Baker will play Tony; Courtney Fox, Mrs. Hardcastle; Kaye Catron, Kate; and Marilyn Kirk as Ann.

Portraying Tom Twist (Thomas) will be Bob Blueford; Amminadab (Dick), Berkeley Pemberton; Jack Slag (Roger), Curt Steele; Dick Higgins (Diagory), Bill McGuire.

Also, Champere Arrendal as the Maid Servant; Mildred Gwinnley as Bet Bouncer; and Helena Mad as Jenny Tawdry. This eighteenth century comedy was written by Oliver Goldsmith. The cast consists of 10 Jongleurs and members of the Longwood Players, some of whom will be making their debut on the Jarman stage.

In the United Nations, the United States may be forced to recognize the existence of the Communist controlled government and to accept dual representation for China in the U.N. There is still no immediate danger of Nationalist China's being ignored in the U.N. because of her military strength in comparison to that of Red China. Although the island stronghold of Formosa is smaller and less populated than the mainland, Chiang Kai-shek has been supplied by the United States with the most modern, up-to-date weapons. Russia has not so equipped Chou En-lai and his government.

The question of Red China's imminent admission to the United Nations and the stand to be taken by the United States, may well prove to be one of the crucial questions facing the candidates for the office of President in the 1964 election year.

Chou En-lai, the foreign minister of Red China, has also been eagerly courting many of the new African nations. He has traveled extensively on the continent, offering money and technical aid to various of the new and economically underdeveloped nations of Africa. And as the old saying goes "who is going to bite the hand that feeds you." If Red China does gain a seat

Major Organization Heads Chosen For Coming Year

Founders Day Highlights Dedication Of Cox Dorm

The eighteenth Longwood College Founders Day will take place March 20-21. Alumnae from the classes of four and nine years are expected in the greatest numbers. It will also be the fiftieth anniversary for the class of 1914.

Cox Dorm Dedicated

The highlight of this year's Founders Day will be the dedication of the Mary White Cox dormitory. The ceremonies will be held as part of the program at 10:45 on Saturday in Jarman Auditorium, with Dr. Francis G. Lankford presiding. The dedicatory address will be given by Mrs. Mosby Phlegur, of Norfolk, who was secretary to Miss Cox when she was dean of women here at Longwood.

The dedication of the dormitory will be followed by a speech from Dr. Reveley, president of Hampden-Sydney College. His subject will be "The Discovery of Mission."

Madrigals To Sing

The Madrigal Singers under the direction of Edward Hull will present several selections as part of this program.

The Mary White Cox dormitory will hold "Open-House" from 2:30 to 4 p.m. for the alumnae.

Water Program Presented

After dinner on both Friday and Saturday nights the guests will view a special showing of the water program. The program, presented by the HEO Club and Cortesies will begin at 7:30.

The fiftieth reunion dinner of the class of 1914 will take place in the Longwood College tea room on Friday night. On Saturday, the class of 1959 will hold their first fifty first year reunion luncheon in the tea room.

Lankford Holds Reception

Dr. and Mrs. Lankford will hold a reception for the returning alumnae at their home between 4 and 5 p.m. on Saturday.

The Farmville chapter will be host at a coffee hour which will be held from 9:15 to 10:30 a.m. at the Alumnae House.

Lundie, Sours Receive Honors At FBLA Meet

The Regional Meeting of the Future Business Leaders of America was held in the Student Building, Saturday, March 14, 1964. The purpose was to elect officers for the next year, and to name winners of various contests.

Lundrum Speaks

Dr. Lundrum, head of the business department, spoke on "The Business Society in Which We Live," and then announced a panel of judges for each contest. These judges consisted mainly of the business education staff and business majors.

Results Announced

The election results were announced and the following officers were installed: President, Elizabeth Coffey, E. C. Glass; Vice-President, Miriam Hicks; Midlothian; Secretary, Bonnie Talley, George Wythe; Reporter, Sharon Bartlam, Manchester; Historian, Marlene Wilson, Halifax County; and Parliamentarian, Vicki Hoover, Hopewell.

Longwood's Miss Future Business Executive is Jean Lundie. Barbara Sours was named Miss Future Business Teacher and runner-up were Betty Simpson and Kay Orr.

Bank Awards Prize

The First National Bank of Farmville awarded a prize of $25.00 and a plaque to the winner of the public speaking contest. These went to Winnie S. Saunders of Reman who spoke on "Preparation for Living."

NEW OFFICERS

New Officers Air Plans For Campus Organizations

The election for major organizations which was held on March 13 resulted in the selection of Milly Woodward, Anne Cordle, Martha Garrett, Sandra Craig, and Sara Jane Lynch as the leaders of the five major organizations on campus.

The newly elected heads of the five major organizations on campus have already begun thinking about what is in store for next year. When asked what they would like to see done in their organizations next year and what improvements they would like to see made, the presidents - elect offered many new ideas.

Milly Woodward

Milly Woodward, new president of the Legislative Board, has hopes that there will be a closer relationship between the Legislative and Judicial Boards. A copy of the minutes of all Legislative Board meetings is presently being sent to the Judicial Board. Milly feels that discussions between the officers of the two boards will prove advantageous to both groups. Milly would also like to see more student interest in the Legislative Board, for only through student opinion, can Legislative Board function. Milly feels that the effectiveness of the Legislative Board depends upon the members of the Board and their effectiveness.

Anne Cordle

Newly elected chairman of Judicial Board, Anne Cordle, would also like to see more co-ordination between the two branches of student government. Anne feels that the recommendations made by the Legislative Board, coupled with the experience of the Judicial Board, will bring about interpretations and changes for the best interest of the student body. Anne also hopes that each student will realize her own personal responsibility to the association for only in this way may we bring about an effective self-government.

Martha Garrett

Martha Garrett, as president of House Council, would like to see the Executive Council of House Council become stronger and more efficient. House Council has already begun work on a set of rules to go by for trials, and is considering the possibility of a better system for electing hall presidents. Martha would also like to see House Council take over late sign-ins.

Sandra Craig

Sandra Craig as president of YWCA, would "like to see the big things that the Y does on the campus continue." Sandra wants to continue such things as the Campus Chest Drive, Thanksgiving Baskets, and Toys for Tots. She also wants the Y Cabinet meetings to include book reviews from time to time and has thought about the possibility of having articles in the Rotunda to revive student interest in the Y.

Sara Jane Lynch

Sara Jane Lynch's major aim is to revive class spirit. She hopes, with the help of her council, to promote more class participation. She also hopes the A. C. can sponsor games in which competition will take place between the dorms.

All of the newly elected officers stressed the importance of student participation in all activities. The five major organizations are for the students and need student enthusiasm for their new ideas.

Beauty Contest Offers LC Girls Bright Benefits

The second annual Miss Longwood Contest sponsored by the legislative branch of student government, will give some worthy girls an opportunity to receive a higher education through scholarships, to broaden their world outlook through travel, and to help them build successful careers in the future.

The winner of this year's Miss Longwood Contest will represent Longwood in the Miss Virginia Pageant, and the first runner-up will be sent to Pensacola's "Festival of Five Flags" where she will compete with university students from across the country for the title of Queen of Queens.

Any single female Longwood student is eligible to participate in the Miss Longwood Contest. A girl may be presented as a candidate in the following ways: 1) A girl may submit herself as a candidate to a member of the contestants committee; 2) A petition may be drawn up by ten girls who wish to support a friend; 3) An organization may sponsor a member of its group. Once a girl becomes a contestant, she will be expected to pay an entry fee of $2.00 and to sign a contract.

The contest will be based upon beauty, intelligence, poise, and talent. After each contestant has completed a three-minute talent routine in Jarman, appeared with the group in a bathing suit and answered several questions. Prior to their performance, contestants will be presented at a tea to the judges and personally interviewed.

Depending upon the number of contestants, the contest will run one or two nights in Jarman beginning on Monday, April 27. In order to pay for the Miss Virginia franchise, the judges' expenses, and the winner's transportation, there will be an admission fee of $1.00. Any organization which sells contest tickets will receive a 25 per cent profit from the sale.

An experienced beauty contestant, Jo Leslie Andrews, the current Miss Longwood, will train each Longwood participant in accordance with the rules established by the Miss America Pageant. Working with contest chairman Andrews are the following committee chairmen:

Kitty Felt, tickets; Cheramy Howe, program; Nancy Buchanan, judges; Mary Bodine and Nancy Hughes, contestants; Gay Beverly and Judy Ivy, publicity; Roberta Rice, stage.

As the Miss Longwood Contest still in its developmental stages, helpful suggestions from the student body will be welcomed.

Baptists Build Center, Open For Student Use

The most recently completed addition to the Longwood campus is the Baptist Student Center at 383 Ely Street.

Of exterior brick and steel construction, the building features modified rose-beige columns, to blend with the architectural structure of other campus buildings.

Hours during which the Center will be open for student use are as follows:

Mon.-Thurs.: 8 a.m.-10 p.m.
Fri.: 8 a.m.-10:45 p.m.
Sat.: 2 p.m.-10:45 p.m.
Sun.: 2 p.m.-7:45 p.m.

After 6 p.m., no student may be in the Center alone.

The entrance of the Center provides access to either of the two floors.

A storeroom, rest rooms, a fully-equipped kitchen, and a recreation area are provided on the lower floor.

Students interested in using the kitchen facilities must notify the student director, Miss Joan Spencer, in order to avoid any conflict.

The recreation area includes a fireplace and is equipped with snack tables, a television, and various games. Glass doors open onto a patio.

Tables stored in the recreation area will be used to convert it into a dining area for various occasions.

The main room of the upper floor is the meeting room. Large enough for meetings of all Baptist students on campus, the room has a stereo and a piano for recreational purposes. The furniture, arranged in conversational groupings, accents the yellow, orange, willow green, and white of the draperies.

A council meeting room with a walnut surfboard table and green chairs also serves as the library.

The formal lounge features a greenstone fireplace. Furnished with mahogany French Provincial furniture, the blue room has wall-to-wall carpeting and draperies of a blue Provincial print. A prayer room, workroom, and the office of the student director comprise the remainder of the rooms.

New Baptist Student Union building on Ely Street has made it appearance on expanding college grounds.

Students To Present Portrait To College

The Student Body will present to Longwood College a portrait of Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss at five o'clock Thursday afternoon, March 19 in Jarman Auditorium. Mary Ann Lipford, Student Body President, will preside and Betty Jean Russell, Student Body Vice-President, will offer a tribute to Dr. Moss.

The portrait was painted by Maurice Gompf, father of Mary Ann Gompf, who is a member of the sophomore class. Mr. Gompf was graduated from the American Institute of Banking in Portsmouth and paints as a hobby. As a painter, he specializes in portraits and has also served as a judge in many art shows.

Presentation of the portrait will be made by Claudia Storing, Sophomore Class President, and the portrait will be accepted by Dr. F. G. Lankford, Jr.

Dr. Moss has been at Longwood at intervals beginning in 1928. In 1948 he became chairman of the History and Social Science Department. While serving as professor of history, Dr. Moss sponsored many campus activities. He was the first faculty advisor to the Student Government Association and has been sponsor to Pi Gamma Mu, the Lynelburg Club, and the YWCA. Dr. Moss held the position of department chairman until December of 1960 when he became Academic Dean of the college.

Allen Receives Grant To Study Math At Rutgers

Merry Lewis Allen, assistant professor of mathematics, has received a grant from the National Science Foundation. The purpose of this grant will be to assist Miss Allen in a study which she will pursue at Rutgers University.

While at Rutgers Miss Allen will study analysis and advanced calculus. The institute is for college teachers of math.

The session will be one which will last a total of eight weeks. The classes will begin on August 21.

Dr. Anthony Munoz will present a lecture to the Spanish students next Monday, March 23 at 9:00 in the little auditorium. The topic will be "Spanish" and the language to be used will be Spanish.

Rotunda Forms '64-'65 Policy

The start of each new publication year always brings up the question of "where will the Rotunda stand on various issues?" In an effort to answer this question collectively, the following statement of policy is being submitted to the student body.

By gathering and publishing the news in all phases of college life and by striving to give fair and equal treatment to each area, the Rotunda aims to keep the students, faculty, administration, and alumnae informed of current campus affairs. At the same time we realize that this college is only a small part of a much larger sphere of activity. Through columns, editorials, and letters, the Rotunda will try to keep the student body informed of significant events occurring in the nation and the world.

The Rotunda will make the most sincere effort to reflect the opinions of everyone on the college campus. Two editorials are written each week by members of the staff, guest columns and feature stories are printed as often as space permits, and letters to the editor are encouraged from both student and faculty.

Concerning the editorial policy, which seems to be the issue most often under fire, it will continue much as it has the last year; however, more editorials from members of the staff will be encouraged. All unsigned editorials will be those written by the editor, and she alone will be responsible for her opinions. The right of freedom of expression in both editorials and letters will be guarded jealously by the staff of the Rotunda.

A final aim of the Rotunda will be to act as a medium for the journalistic efforts of all students. Work on a school paper can afford valuable experience in the field of journalism. The Rotunda welcomes the interest of any member of the student body.

We hope in the coming year, to provide Longwood College with an informative and challenging newspaper.

Drinking Rule Questioned

The issue of drinking alcoholic beverages at Hampden-Sydney is one of paramount importance to the girls on this campus. The present rule forbids drinking at Hampden-Sydney and within the town limits of Farmville. For the following reasons the rule should be revised to permit drinking at Hampden-Sydney.

1. Girls may go away for weekends and do whatever they want.
2. Girls may go to Leo's and drink all they wish. Yet they are responsible enough to know when to stop and maintain their sobriety.
3. The present rule concerning drinking at Hampden-Sydney is strong, but enforcement is weak. Few girls who do drink ever get turned in.

I maintain that the girls who come Longwood are mature and responsible enough to know how to handle such a right as drinking at Hampden-Sydney. Every time they return from a weekend at another college or from Leo's, they prove their ability to accept this responsibility.

Goldsmith's Comedy Proclaimed Success

by Betty Ann Atkinson
 Last weekend, Jarman Hall was the scene of a resoundingly successful production of Oliver Goldsmith's delightful comedy, The Shoppe to Conquer. For three nights, capacity audiences, rolled in hilarity as the actors, dressed in magnificent costumes and staged in abstract splendor, romped and cavorted through their absurd, delightful parts.

Noted among the performers were the leading characters played by David Relyea, Kaye Catron, and David Coleson. Relyea, fast becoming a veteran of the Longwood stage, displayed subtlety and assurance with his "Marlow." He cut a dashing figure with his romantic escapades, but his timid and girl-shy scenes, unfortunately, were flavored with his long-time portrayal of the old man. Nevertheless, his versatility was very apparent, and his potential appears to be great. Kaye Catron thoroughly charmed audiences with her beauty and manner. While her portrayal of the servant was quite lively and gay, her aristocratic "Miss Hardcastle" lacked the verve and inspiration of the other, occasionally, even, falling flat. Her good scenes, however, were extremely good; and they promise future performances of notable caliber.

David Coleson as "Mr. Hard-castle" was excellent. He occupied his scenes completely with ease and assurance. He is a young man whose conception of a role is unique and fascinating. The interesting and difficult role of Mrs. Hardcastle, played by newcomer Courtney Fox, was

Hiner Sisters Recall Former Days At LC

By Barbara Melton
 Students have come and graduated — faculty members have come and gone — the College has grown from one building to many. Since the early 1900's, there have been two women who have watched the evolution of Longwood College. These women are Miss Mary Clay Hiner and Miss Winnie V.

Hiner, two of six sisters who attended the College.

Mary Clay Hiner, after graduation from Longwood, went to Peabody College where she earned her master's degree. She remained there for a few years in a teaching capacity; however, she returned to Longwood where she took a position in the English department.

Winnie Hiner graduated from Longwood, but she accepted a position in the treasurer's office. In 1924 she was appointed as Treasurer and served until 1955, when she retired.

Were Active Students
 The Hiner sisters were very active as students. They were both members of Pi Kappa Omega, the first honor society, now called Kappa Delta Pi. Also, they were active in the YWCA. Mary Clay Hiner was a charter member of Beta Theta Theta, the honorary English society. Winnie Hiner was active on the Focus magazine staff, which now corresponds to the Colonade.

They have witnessed many changes around the College in their long association with it. Their minds are filled with memories of people and events which to arouse an awareness of the meaning of Christian living and its relevance in our world; to strengthen our faith to meet tests;

 to know what we believe and value and why;
 to come to understand the importance of faith in life; to follow the likeness of Christ.

Our present means of accomplishing these goals are:
 The big sister-little sister program;

Registration of new students;
 Religious Emphasis Week;
 Christmas and Easter Pageants;

Regular programs in Cabinet meetings and Y-comes involving dialogue and encounter;
 "Prayers" — a daily period set aside for meditation and prayer which is open to all and attended voluntarily;

Cabinet retreats for periodic evaluation of our program and purpose;

Encouraging church attendance and religious study;
 Seeking to relate "religion" to life.

Preservation of college traditions (Christmas tree - banquet - hanging of the green - caroling, student "sings," etc.)

Annual alumnae newsletter;
 Remembering the ill or bereaved with flowers and cards;
 Observance of events in the religious calendar such as World Day of Prayer.

In the second and third areas

we attempt—to expose students to situations beyond the realm of their everyday experience; to provide opportunity for interaction between all peoples;
 to realize and seek to fulfill our duties as Christian citizens;

to recognize aims and goals in other faiths similar to ours and use these as a basis for common endeavor;
 to rely on Christian beliefs as a basis for action;
 to broaden our concept of Christianity and Christian living; to be aware and informed of the issues in the world around us;

 to move from discussion into action in our attempt to provide a better life for underprivileged people; to recognize the importance of young people in the work of the world.

Our present means of accomplishing these goals are:

Regular programs in Cabinet meetings and Y-comes involving dialogue and encounter;
 Periodic relief for the poverty projects (Thanksgiving baskets, Toys for Tots, White Christmas gifts);

Letter To Editor

Student Cites Inconsideration At Assembly

Dear Editor:

Last week the Student Body had the opportunity to hear one of the best religious speakers to appear on campus in recent years. Although the speaker, Rabbi Sheingold, was available for questions and discussion for more than two hours after the assembly, the student body did not take advantage of this opportunity.

Moreover, the behavior of the student body during assembly that day left something to be desired. Around me people were writing letters, talking, laughing (at the wrong times), or falling asleep.

If this behavior is characteristic of Longwood students in assembly and this failure to attend to discussion groups the norm, the administration need not fear inviting a Communist speaker here. The majority would fall asleep during his lecture.

Teacher Wins Graduate Aid For Semester

Florence Sophian, who received her A. B. degree from Longwood College in 1957, is one of eleven students at San Francisco State College to receive a non-resident graduate scholarship for the second semester.

Scholarships were awarded on the basis of a high level of scholastic achievement in graduate study. They were won by students from Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Arizona, Massachusetts, Virginia, Taiwan, and Korea.

Miss Sophian is a candidate for the M. A. degree in Language Arts. After her graduation from Longwood, she taught at Bainbridge Junior High School. She was the only English teacher in Richmond to employ structural linguistics extensively in her teaching.

Club Presents Science Talk By Heinemann

Lynchon, Longwood's honor society for science and mathematics, is an organization whose main purpose is to promote interest in the fields of science and math. Members are selected from among junior and senior students (including biology and chemistry) and mathematics majors who have maintained academic averages.

This year the organization has been revised and the constitution changed to meet the needs and interest of students working in these fields. The group is sponsored by Dr. Letta Holman. Lynchon will present a talk by Dr. Heinemann, of the Longwood biology department, on March 23. Students and faculty members are invited to attend. The topic, time, and location of this talk will be announced later.

YWCA Plans New Projects For This Year

Union vesper services (four a year) for all denominations and faiths;

Making use of materials provided by the National association concerning world issues and problems;

Providing opportunity for participation in local, regional, national, and international conferences, work camps, and similar assemblies.

Assembly programs given during the year for the entire student body.

Recognition of the contributions which other campus groups make to the achievement of our purpose and goals;

Presenting our program of action to the public through available outlets;

Seeking ways to act, through better communications and initiative, in the interests of all for a better society.

Foulk Joins LC Nurses In Infirmary

A new face has been added to those already in Longwood's infirmary. The face belongs to a new nurse, Mrs. Palle Foulk. Mrs. Foulk graduated from the Training School here in Farmville, and took her nurse's training in Petersburg Hospital. She also attended Union Memorial Hospital in Baltimore, Maryland, for post-graduate work.

Before coming to Longwood, Mrs. Foulk worked in an Englewood, New Jersey hospital, and in South Hampton, New York. For the last five years, Mrs. Foulk has worked in Southside Hospital here in Farmville.

Knitting Classes

Knitting classes are being conducted for interested students. Yarn and instructors will be available at the Weyanoke Hotel between 10:00 and 4:00. The next class will be held on March 25.

Women Receive Due Tribute From College

They remember the days when Longwood was not much larger than Hampden - Sydney, when it consisted of only 500 students. Those were the days when large houses lined High Street where the girls lived after the dormitories were filled. Mary Clay Hiner was a head resident of one of these houses for years. They have seen Longwood expand to include the Wheeler, Coker, Cunningham, Jarnes, Stevens, and Lancaster buildings. Before that, everything was contained in the one main building with its West and Tabb wings.

Two events, in 1933 and the other in 1947, stand out in their minds. These were the years of the memorable fire, the first destroying the kitchen and dining hall, and the second destroying the old auditorium in Tabb. After the first fire, the partially completed Student Building was used for temporary dining facilities.

Winnie Hiner struck a humorous note when she made the comment, "There weren't any boys here until after World War II. After that the G.I. Bill turned them loose on the colleges. There were so many we had to take them."

Mary Clay recalls some of the faces she once saw when she looked at her classes while she taught English. Among them were such people we know now as Margaret Sumner, the wife of Dr. Simkins, Mrs. Jackson, Miss Nichols and Mrs. Gee, three professors here, and Miss Brewer, head resident of Main Cunningham. It was in this same period that such people as Mary White Cox and Leola Wheeler were active on the campus.

Retirement has done nothing to keep Misses Mary Clay and Winnie Hiner from the school that has been the center of their lives. Besides having many friends among the faculty and administration, they attend plays, lyceums, lectures, and the Institute of Southern Culture every spring.

Now Longwood will pay tribute to two ladies who have done so much to make Longwood the school it is. This tribute will take the form of dedication of the Education Building to the Hiner sisters.

Honor Society Presents Singer In Folk Program

Mr. H. S. Lee, noted ballad singer and collector, will give a program sponsored by Beare E. Thorn tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

Mr. Lee's program will consist of traditional English and Scottish ballads, Southern Mountain ballads, Civil War songs, and cowboy and lumberjack songs. A number of these are unique and exist in no other collection. The Library of Congress has recorded thirty-eight of Mr. Lee's ballads, mostly of the cowboy, lumberjack and World War II variety. "The World War II songs are too bawdy for usual public performance," says Mr. Lee.

An expert guitarist as well as singer, Mr. Lee has given ballad programs at Pennsylvania State University, Harvard, Dickinson College, Ursinus College, Millersville State College, and other institutions. He has also appeared at the Village Vanguard night club in New York and the Elmer Richard Club in Philadelphia, where he says he "was paid $400 last one evening for singing a new World War II song."

The meeting is open to any interested students or faculty.

Lankford Announces Development Program, Seeks $5,606,000 Aid From LC Alumnae

Addressing members of Longwood College Foundation Alumnae Committee last Saturday, Dr. Francis Lankford announced new development program and called for aid from alumnae.

Student Production Receives Criticism

a trifle over-acted. Such a part as this is difficult not to over act. Miss Fox's regular high pitch soon grew tiresome; and as a result, a good deal of the effect of her character was lost. Let it be said, however, that Miss Fox was headed in the right direction. An indication of such was present; and if routed out and played upon, she would have had a superb performance on her hands.

The crowning performance of the play came from Ed Baker who portrayed "Tony Lumpkin" superbly. Mr. Baker stood out head and shoulders above the others, and his performance smacked of professionalism. He seems to improve by leaps and bounds with each play, particularly with his character-comedy roles. Great things are in store for this young man. I have, however, only one complaint: Mr. Baker has a tendency to throw resistance to the ways when it comes to scene setting.

Another performer with show-stopping potential stepped briskly into the spotlight. Mr.

Bill MacGuire, who played the imbecile servant, "Digory," walked away with his scenery. With only a few lines to work with, he made "Digory" a very remarkable character. The other servants played by Messers. Blusford, Pemberton, and Steele, were particularly hilarious in the drunk scene and when they were wandering around, bumping into each other. It must be said that the staging of these two scenes was superb. The female servants played by Misses Mast and Gwainedy added notably to their scenes also.

Mr. Couchman showed his versatility as a comedian once again with his dual roles. Some of his usual power was lacking; however, he made up for it with his hide-and-seek scene.

All in all, the play as a whole was an obvious success. Dr. Patton Lockwood, the director, is to be commended for achieving such noteworthy results in an amateur situation. Mr. Wiley is also to be commended for his superb technical efforts; and all those who worked and slaved backstage are to feel sure that their efforts were appreciated.

From The Board

Jo Leslie Andrews is in charge of the "Miss Longwood" contest to be held in May. Two girls will be selected: one to represent Longwood in the "Miss Virginia" contest and the other at Pensacola, Florida. Keep posted for further announcements concerning the contest.

Judy Hackney submitted a report on the current progress to May Day. The committee has decided against having the traditional May Day dance, and is considering having a reception following the pageant to honor the court. The reception would be planned so as to accommodate all those who would like to attend. Dean Willson is serving as advisor to the committee.

Alpha Kappa Gamma will sponsor future "Faculty Firesides."

Freshmen have decided by vote to have their vote count one half in major-minor elections.

A committee has been formed to work on having elections in December so that new officers may take office in February. Arrangements will be made for the resigning officers to student teach third block which would enable them to be on campus their entire term of office.

The Elections Committee has been asked to submit to the Board a report of suggestions for improvement of the election proceedings. The Board is interested in hearing the students' criticisms and suggestions concerning the elections.

Because of some question as to academic requirements for returning students, a check was made with the Dean's office. A student must have a 1.5 average to return as a second semester freshman, a 1.6 average to return as a first semester sophomore, and a 2.0 average thereafter.

Don't forget to VOTE in the minor elections.

— Nancy Moorefield

President Francis G. Lankford recently announced a development program for Longwood amounting to $5,606,000 which would extend over the next few years. Dr. Lankford made his announcement before a meeting of the Longwood College Foundation Alumnae Committee Meeting.

Opening his speech with reference to the recent growth of Longwood, Dr. Lankford went on to name the state sponsored expansion planned for the period extending through 1968, and finished by presenting specific ideas for improvements that cannot be obtained with state funds.

In making the announcement Dr. Lankford called attention to the fact that state supported institutions of higher learning have long been needed by the philanthropists, especially women's colleges and those specializing in teacher education. He explained that a great many of the grants and aids extended to colleges and universities were the gifts of industry, and that men's colleges were often given priority. He also pointed out that the state school's needs are as great as the private institutions in the area of special programs.

The Longwood College Development program is designed to provide those kinds of educational experiences which the college cannot expect the state to provide. "What we are trying to do," said Dr. Lankford, "is to add the 'Margin of Excellence' which will enlarge on a national basis the good name Longwood now enjoys in Virginia."

Macon Society Lists Members, Adds New Areas

At the regular meeting of the Nathaniel Macon Society in March, the members of the Society welcomed several new members.

Those joining were Joyce Nance, Dianne Miner, Ruth Kears, Linda Neils, Gina Wilk, Kayley Brewer, Carol Moyer, Barbara Chapin, Barbara Burrell, Donna Weatherly, Jeanette Follen, and Nancy Brown.

Recently, the members chose the committees on which they desired to serve. Joyce Nance will be on the African Affairs Committee; Dianne Miner and Ruth Kears will serve on the Latin American Affairs Committee.

Participating in the Far Eastern Affairs Committee will be Linda Neils, Barbara Burrell, and Donna Weatherly. Jeanette Follen and Nancy Brown will be members of the Parties and Politics Committee.

The Far Eastern Affairs Committee and the Parties and Politics Committees are two new areas that have just been added to the Society.

Organ Recital To Be Given For Dedication

The Music Department will present two recitals on March 22. The first will feature Edward Hull, baritone with Sterling Adams, accompanist. This concert will take place in Jarman Auditorium at 4 o'clock, March 22. Mr. Hull will sing songs by such well-known composers as Handel, Bach, Schumann, Schubert, Brahms, and Hagenman.

The other recital to be given will be the second in a series of organ recitals for the dedication of the Schleicher Organ. This recital will be held in the Rehearsal Room of Jarman Hall at 8 o'clock March 22. The music will be appropriate for the Holy Week and Easter.

Kay Barker will play "Meinen Jesum lass ich nicht" by Walther; Bobbie Hogan will play "Auf meinen lieben Gott" by Handel; and Sylvia Butler will play "Herzstille Jesu ich ruh' su dir" by Walcha.

Helen Weeks will play "Da Jesus und den Kreuzen stand" by Scheidt; and Anne Gray Houchens will play an offertory on "O Sons and Daughters of the Lord" by Guilmant, "Le Banquet Celeste" by Messiaen, and "Christe ist erstanden" by Bach.

LC Corkettes, H2O Club Stage Water Pageant

The H2O Club and Corkettes are presenting the first showing of their annual water pageant on Founder's Day, March 21. Formerly presented at Christmas, this year's program will be staged for the student body at 8:00 p.m. on March 25, 26, and 27.

Appropriately titled "Sounds of the Sea," the program consists of a duet by Chris Longstreet and Ann Persak, eight group numbers, and a grand finale by all of the H2O members and apprentice members — the Corkettes.

Co-chairmen for the pageant are Chris Longstreet and Ann Persak, who have been conducting practices since the beginning of second semester.

Writers of the skits include Lee Cries, Linda Spinner, Shirley Metcalf, Geri Gerhart, Karen Rader, Peggy Waldo, Diane Turner, Ann Persak, Chris Longstreet, Connie Parkins, and Miss Smith.

Heads of committees are Bobbie Allen — Scenery, Betty Wright — Publicity, Sara Jane Lynch — Costumes, Bobbi Rice — Lights, Anita Holms — Programs, Peggy Whitaker — Program Design, and Nancy Robertson — Music.

This is the first chance the Corkettes have had to show the public their ability. Composed primarily of freshmen, the Corkettes are learning the trade of becoming assets to the H2O Club.

Rehearsing for upcoming water show, Chris Longstreet and Ann Persak review stunts for duet Pageant.

"Sounds of the Sea," is scheduled for March 25, 26, and 27.

LC Majors To Attend Physical Education Meet

The Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation will meet in Richmond, Friday, March 20. Several members of the Longwood Physical Education Department will be represented. The conference will be held at the John Marshall Hotel.

Mrs. Emily K. Landrum will preside over the first general session. Featured in this morning session will be an address — "What Is Happening in Health Education" — by Dr. William Baughman of the University of Alabama. Mrs. Landrum was a member of the steering committee for the college conference and the subsequent Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation conference.

She will also preside over the Professional Courses Committee after serving as its co-chairman at last year's meeting. At the Divisional meeting of Girls' and Women's Sports, to be held at the end of the conference, Mrs. Landrum will head the dance section.

This year Mrs. Bobbitt will act as co-chairman for the Health Education Committee and will serve as chairman at next year's meeting. Miss Helms will also attend the conference session dealing especially with the problems of the Heads of Departments.

Twenty-three Longwood physical education majors are to attend the Student Section Meeting of the Virginia Association for Health, Physical Education, and Recreation. The topics included are concerned with different aspects of the physical education program.

A movie will first be shown on the opportunities of "Physical Education in the Peace Corps." Miss Frances Mays, assistant supervisor of Health and Physical Education of the State Board of Education, will also speak on the "Opportunities for Physical Education in the State of Virginia."

Seniors, Juniors Given Last Date For Swim Test

The swimming test will be given for the last time on March 26th from 3:45 p.m.-5:00 p.m. All seniors and juniors who have not completed the swimming requirement, should do so at this time.

Those who are involved must sign up on the H2O Club's bulletin board for a specific time. Those students who will be taking the test are to report to the infirmary prior to the swimming test for the required swimming physical examination.

Your cooperation in this matter will be greatly appreciated by the members of the faculty in charge of the swimming tests.

seniors playing the sophomores. Under team captain, Rena Weld, the seniors emerged victorious. The score was 25-18. The sophomores were captained by Bess Mann.

Then on Thursday, February 12, the freshmen met the Juniors. The Juniors were captained by Winnie Walker, and the freshmen by Ruth Linbrick. The Juniors won the game by a score of 21 to 19.

The freshmen made an error that cost them the winning margin when four freshmen substitutes neglected to report to the scorer before entering the game. Three of the four technical foul shots were made by the Juniors.

The games will continue with the seniors meeting the freshmen on Monday, the sophomores playing the Juniors on Tuesday, the seniors meeting the Juniors on Wednesday, and the sophomores playing the freshmen on Thursday.

All are urged to come and watch the games being played at 4:00 each afternoon in the old gymnasium.

Westhampton Whips LC In Final Contest

By Maria Grant

Longwood's Blue and Whites finished the basketball season with a defeat at the hands of Westhampton Saturday, March 7. This was in contrast to the smashing victories over RPI and Prince Edward Academy for the season's opener early in February.

In those games, LC's first team smothered RPI 86-13, and the second team took an uneven 69-9 win from P.E.A.

It looked as though the Blues were off for a strong season. But then Lynchburg College's strong squad came to the home court and provided a rough opposition which resulted in a 51-41 whipping for Longwood's first team.

In a rough game that kept the spectators guessing from one minute to the next, there was a lot of "floor-cleaning" and fouling in both games. The second team hit Lynchburg 49-25 with good guarding and ball control, so the Hill City folks went home with only one victory.

Next time, LC traveled to Hollins and came back with 2 wins (55-35 and 61-40), which gave them a 2-1 record thus far, and team 2 a clean slate.

The Blue and Whites played host to Madison February 15. The Harrisonburg team fought hard, but to no avail. Longwood grabbed the win 48-30. In the second game, Madison outplayed LC with jump shots and pass interceptions, resulting in a 50-33 gain for the visitors.

In a smooth and fast-moving contest Longwood lounced William and Mary in 2 games. Particularly in these games LC exhibited its crack pass play and under-the-basket shots. Both games proved to be exciting with long periods of tight defense with no scoring.

The last home game was February 27 against Stratford. Longwood's Team 1 posted a 5-2 season and Team II came away with Longwood putting pressure on the opponent's offense. The Danville team put up a good fight to the end, but at the final buzzer the lopsided score was 74-16.

Stratford was dumped in the second game also. The fast-paced game led to a 32-7 victory for the home team.

At finally LC met Westhampton on the latter's court. It was a close game — the Blues got within 2 points of the Richmond squad in the last quarter, but were eventually handed a 35-29 loss. But again, the opponent was left with only one victory, as the second team chalked up a 46-24 win.

Final statistics show Longwood's Team 1 posted a 5-2 season and Team II came away with a 6-1 record.

WELL-KNOWN FAMOUS PEOPLE: No. 1

This is the first in a series of 48 million columns examining the careers of men who have significantly altered the world we live in. We begin today with Max Planck.

Max Planck (The Great of the Pacific, as he is often called) gave to modern physics the law known as Planck's Constant. Many people when they first hear of this law, throw up their hands and exclaim, "Golly whikers, this is too deep for little-old me!"

(Incidentally, speaking of whikers, I cannot help but mention Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades. Personna is the blade for people who can't shave after every meal. It shaves you closely, cleanly, and more frequently than any other stainless steel blade on the market. The makers of Personna have publicly declared—and do here repeat—that if Personna Blades don't give you more luxury shaves than any other stainless steel blade they will buy you whatever blade you like. Letter. Could anything be more fair? I, for one, think not.)

But I digress. We were speaking of Planck's Constant, which is not, as many think, difficult to understand. It simply states that matter sometimes behaves like waves, and waves sometimes behave like matter. To give you a homely illustration, pick up your pencil and wave it. Your pencil, you will surely agree, is matter—yet look at the little rascal wave! Or take flags. Or Amy-Margaret.

Planck's Constant, uncomplicated as it is, nevertheless provided science with the key that unlocked the atom, made space travel possible, and conquered denture slippage. Honors were heaped upon Mr. Planck (or The City of Brotherly Love, as he is familiarly known to). He was awarded the Nobel Prize, the Little Brown Jug, and Disneyland. But the honor that pleased Mr. Planck most was that plankton were named after him.

Plankton, as we know, are the floating colonies of one-celled animals on which fishes feed. Plankton, in their turn, feed upon one-celled animals called krill (named, incidentally, after Dr. Morris Krill who invented the home eat). Krill, in their turn, feed upon peanut butter sandwiches mostly—or, when they are in season, cheeseburgers.

But I digress. Back to Max Planck who, it must be said, showed no indication of his scientific genius as a youngster. In fact, for the first six years of his life he did not speak at all except to pound his spoon on his bowl and shout "More gruel!"

Imagine, then, the surprise of his parents when on his seventh birthday little Max suddenly cried, "Papa! Mama! Something is wrong with the Second Law of Thermodynamics!" So astonished were the elder Plancks that they rushed out and dug the Kiel Canal.

Meanwhile Max, constructing a crude Petrie dish out of two small pieces of petrie and his grand uncle, began to experiment with thermodynamics. By dinner time he had discovered Planck's Constant. Hungry but happy, he rushed to Heidelberg University to announce his findings. He arrived, unfortunately, during the Erich von Stroheim Sesequientennial, and everyone was busy lining and dishing that young Planck could find nobody to listen to him. The festival, however, ended after two years and Planck was finally able to report his discovery. In full view of history, Einstein gaily cried, "E equals mc squared!" Edison invented Marconi. Eli Whitney invented Georgia Tech, and Michelangelo invented the ceiling. This later became known as the Humboldt Current.

AA News

The Activity Fee's Committee has given $200 to our bowling fund. This raises the total expenditure to $1,000. When this money has been expended a small tournament will be sponsored by the AA. The girls will be able to bowl free in the tournament and a trophy will be given. The winner will be the girl with the best average for three games. The tournament will be run compliments of the Sports Center manager.

Bicycle Rules Added

Two new bicycle rules have been added:

1. If a bicycle has been signed up for ahead of time and the person does not appear within 20 minutes of that time, the bicycle is considered unreserved.

2. Bicycles may only be signed up for one day in advance. This will give more students a chance to enjoy the bikes.

Anyone interested in attending Hockey Camp this year must see Miss Her before April 1.

Golf Tournament Planned

Last year Longwood and Madison shared the team championship of Virginia Women's Collegiate Golf Tournament. A tournament will be held here after Spring Vacation and the two girls with the lowest scores for 18 holes will represent LC at the state tourney at Mary Baldwin April 25.

Southern Life Subject Of Institute Lectures

The Institute of Southern Culture will present a series of lectures on April 24 as part of its 1963-64 program.

Promotes Study

The Institute was founded at Longwood College in 1956. Its chief objective is to promote the study of the traditional aspects of the southern civilization. These traditions are presented through academic courses, special lectures, and the publication of research in the area.

Lecturers for this year's institute are Dr. Lorin A. Thompson, Dr. James M. Helms and Mr. Robert C. Smith. Dr. Thompson, Director, Bureau of Population and Economic Research at the University of Virginia will lecture on "Regional Factors that Inhibit Economic Progress in the South." His lecture will be given at 11 a.m. in Jarman Hall.

"The Southern Negro at the Polls" will be the lecture topic of Dr. James M. Helms, associate professor of History and Social Science at Longwood College. Dr. Helms will lecture at 4 p.m. in the lounge of the Student Activities Building.

Smith Lectures

The topic of Mr. Smith's lecture will be "A Comparative Study of How News Media Treat the Southern Racial Issue at the Local and National Level." Mr. Smith, the editor of the editorial page for the Charlotte News, will give his lecture in Jarman Hall at 8 p.m.

Upperclassmen Receive Awards For Scholarship

Two Longwood students, Martha S. Bergeron and Dana Marie Brewer have been awarded scholarships for advanced study. Martha, a Junior English major from Richmond, is one of two Virginia students to win an $800 scholarship awarded by the English Speaking Union for summer study at Oxford University. She plans to study Seventeenth Century English Literature under the British lecture tutorial system. Her scholarship also provides for some travel so that she can have a more intimate knowledge and understanding of the English people.

MARTHA BERGERON

Dana, a senior from Alexandria, is double majoring in history and Spanish. She recently received a Graduate Scholarship from Tulane University in New Orleans, to study there. She will be a candidate for the degree of Master of Arts in the Department of Latin American studies.

Dana plans to divide her course work in these areas: Latin American History, Spanish, and a tentative minor in Political Science. She hopes to complete her degree in a year's time. Right now she is planning a thesis around an interest in the various religious movements in America.

DANA BREWER

Newly appointed editors-in-chief of two Longwood publications are Donna Weatherly and Marcy Hynes.

Donna will head Colonnade staff and Marcy, the 1965 Virginian.

Alpha Kappa Gamma Society Honors Eight New Members

Alpha Kappa Gamma, the honor fraternity for leadership, recently tapped eight new members into their society. Those receiving bids to join were Sarah Jane Lynch tapped by Lynne Osteen, Melody Saunders by Peg Waldo, Ann Persak by Sandra Craig, Wanda Old by Betty Ann Rex, Laraine McGhee by Peggy Whitaker, Bonnie Ramsey by Dana Brewer, Margaret Shepherd by Lewann Ripper, Tapped for honorary membership was Miss Merry Lewis Allen.

Member's Activities

The new members include a variety of campus organizations in their activities. Sara Jane Lynch, a physical education major, is a member of the H2O Club and is the Athletic Association president for the 1964-65 session.

Melody Saunders, another physical education major, is treasurer of the AA at present and will take office as the Senior Class President for the coming year. Melody is also working on an honors paper which concerns breaking down the action of the overarm throw in softball.

Ann Persak, a biology major, was co-chairman of the Water Pageant and is treasurer of the Longwood Players. She is also a member of Alpha Psi Omega.

Weatherly, Hynes Head Publications

The Publications Board has announced the new heads of the Virginian and Colonnade. The new editors are Marcia Jean Hynes and Donna Lee Weatherly.

"Marcy," a rising senior from Cheverly, Md., will edit the 1965 Virginian. She has been on the Virginian staff since her freshman year. She was a typist for two years and this year was the copy editor.

Marcy is working towards a B. S. in Secondary Education in History and Social Sciences. She was secretary - treasurer of the Freshman Commission, and in her sophomore year was on the Public Relations Committee of the Y. W. C. A.

Editor's Activities

As a Junior, Marcy was co-chairman of Circus; she was a member of Pi Delta Epsilon, the national Journalism fraternity; and served on the Athletic Association Council as Class Hockey Manager.

Marcy will select her staff from lists which will be posted on which all interested students may sign up for the coming year. Donna, who will edit the 1964-1965 Colonnade, is a rising Junior from Norfolk. She is studying for a B. A. in Secondary Education in English.

At Maury High School in Norfolk Donna worked on the newspaper staff. She joined the Colonnade staff this year as a member of the Literary Board.

Donna is a member of the Nathaniel Macon Society and of Sigma Sigma Sigma social sorority.

Spring Brings Elected Officers For Coming Year

Spring has brought forth the elections of new officers of the five major organizations on campus as well as the class officers.

Minor offices have been filled as follows: Legislative: Vice - president, Kathy Dodge; Secretary, Karen Diederick; and Treasurer, Janet Gormus. Senior Representatives are Bonnie Ramsey and Betty Shepherd; Junior Representatives, Frances Stewart and Jinny McCoy; and Sophomore Representatives, Nancy Brown and Pat Finn. The Day Student Representative is Rachel Gentry.

Filling Judicial Board minor offices are: Vice-chairman, Laraine McGhee; Secretary, Mary Lee Shoulters; Senior Representatives are Maria Grant and Joyce Powell; Junior Representatives, Linda Baasford and Betty Garner; Sophomore Representatives are Ann Casheen and Becky White; and the Day Student Representative, Virginia Abernathy.

Vice-president of the Athletic Association is Henrietta Gilliam. Secretary is Barbara Ragland, and Treasurer is Bobbie Allen. New holders of minor offices in the Y. W. C. A. include: Vice-president, Pauline Perrow; Secretary, Fran Lipford; Treasurer, Carol Gibson; and Freshmen Counselor, Sue Gooden.

House Council's new minor offices are to be held by Tot Sykes, Vice-president; Jean White, Secretary; and Karen Mosser, Treasurer.

The Senior class has re-elected Melody Saunders, from Danville, as President of the Class of '65. Angel Stevenson of Roanoke was elected Vice-president. Bobbie Burrell of Hampton-Sydney has been chosen Secretary, and Kathy Puckett, of Pearisburg, has been chosen Treasurer.

Harriet Anderson of Radford will lead the Class of '66 as President, and Sally Grayson, also of Radford, will be Vice-president. Mary Kay Richardson of Alexandria was elected Secretary, and Olivia Gibson of Richmond was elected Treasurer.

Presiding over the Class of '67 will be Betty Jo Hamner of Richmond. Mary Virginia Mason has been elected Vice-president. Karen Walton of Arlington is the new Secretary and Frankie Lansing of Staten Island, New York is the new Treasurer.

Mark In Time

The world is still big physically, no matter how "small" a man tries to make it. There are still billions of people around, no matter how insignificant a man tries to make them. Each individual lives and dies and leaves his mark in time.

And in this "small" world full of "insignificant" people is a college. It's not a big place, but then it's not really small either. There are quite a few students there. Each one comes and goes and leaves her notch in time.

Everyone leaves a mark just because they were here. But is it a scratch or a real dent? What makes the difference is the way in which the scratch or dent was made. This is the challenge.

The challenge is one of honor and character and maturity. It is not one of popularity and show and "it". There are some who accept the challenge, and they come and go and leave their mark in time.

100-Year Misconception

In view of the recent events in Wisconsin concerning Gov. George Corley Wallace and the Presidential primary held there, leaders from both political parties have broken out with a rash of statements on the future of the proposed civil rights legislation.

There have been disagreements both between and within the parties about the degree to which Wallace's unexpected number of votes will effect the pending bill. But no one can deny that there will be consequences.

A politically amateurish move by the state's favorite son, Gov. John W. Reynolds — a declaration before the primary that anything over 100,000 votes for Wallace would be a catastrophe — set the goal of the Alabama Governor and lent considerably more weight to his "victory in losing" campaign.

Although it has been reported, particularly by those whose sentiments lay with arch-segregationist Wallace, that his 264,100-vote dissent has thrown proponents of the legislation into a panic, it has, in reality, done no serious damage to the plans for the bill's upcoming passage. Among the many minor problems presented by the Wisconsin primary, there are two that are of immediate importance — 1) the propaganda that will evolve from Wallace's embarrassment to backers of the civil rights legislation, and 2) it will be more difficult and time-consuming for sponsors of the bill to get the number of votes necessary to stop a Southern filibuster within the Senate.

Perhaps the most eye-opening fact that can be drawn from the whole situation is the reversal of an age-old misconception. The South has suffered for more than 100 years the "holier-than-thou" attitude of the north on the question of racial discrimination. The results of the Wisconsin primary has brought home the fact that prejudice and race hatred are not dead in the North, but merely in hiding. The need for a definite program, based on the Constitution and fundamental tenets of the American way of life to be effective in all the fifty states, is clearly and vividly pointed out to us.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

— NOW THAT WASN'T SUCH A HARD TEST, WAS IT? —

Everyone's 'Charlie Hop' To Retire With 35 Years Of LC Memories

By Sue Goodens

The familiar strains of "Charlie, Charlie, here's a toast to Charlie Hop" will not be sung so often next year. Dr. Raymond French, our beloved Charlie Hop, is retiring a close second.

Recalls Arrival Dr. French came to our campus in 1929 and says, "I was greener than any of the Freshmen, and I guess that's one reason why I've always been partial to the green and white." Charlie Hop adds, however, that since he is graduating with the red and white, he can't help but like them too.

Raymond French was born in Virginia near Calleo. Fishing has been his chief hobby with hunting running a close second. After his retirement, Charlie Hop plans to live in Orlando, Florida with his son. There he hopes to be able to pursue his favorite sport. He promises to come back to Longwood next year for Circus.

Although he acquired the nickname of Charlie Hop before he started teaching here, it was at Longwood that the name caught on. Dr. French got mixed up in some dye one summer at VPI, and it turned him yellow. His roommate, Joe Perle, thought Dr. French looked like the Chinese man who ran "Charlie Hop's Laundry," and the nickname became a part of Dr. French.

Sponsors Classes Charlie Hop has sponsored seven green and white classes that have kept him "pretty busy." Now he is the honorary sponsor of the "pretty busy." Charlie Hop has fond memories of Circus, class productions, and class competitions. He remembers when interclass sports brought almost as big a crowd as varsity games — and the gym was packed to capacity for varsity games.

The sponsor of Chi, Charlie Hop can remember the nights he's been up until three or four in the morning getting the girls back into their dorms. Charlie Hop points out that Chi has served the school in many capacities, since it was formed. They have put cornerstones in some of the buildings on campus, they were responsible for erecting the Dell at Longwood Estate, and they had the statue of Joan of Arc in the Rotunda redone when it was mutilated. Of Chi members past and present, Charlie Hop says, "They've been a wonderful bunch of girls."

Works With Fire Drills Charlie Hop himself has contributed a great deal to the spirit of Longwood. He is responsible for the organization of summer recreation programs for small children so that the mothers could attend classes. For a number of years, the children really kept him hopping.

Dr. French and S. L. Graham, former business manager of the college, instituted the fire drill system at Longwood. For fifteen years Charlie Hop worked with the girls having fire drills, and he feels that they really are good training. Charlie Hop has also been instrumental in the making of fire prevention solutions for Circus and productions.

Comments on Leaving About having to leave Longwood, Charlie Hop says, "I do hate to leave Longwood; I really do." Charlie Hop loves to have his girls stop by to say hi and talk over anything, except his retirement. He says, "I'm really proud that they think that much of me, but I wish they wouldn't talk about my leaving."

To many people, Charlie Hop's trademark is his green tie. To those who know and love him, the thing that sets him off from the ordinary and endears him to the hearts of his "Longwood Ladies" is his ever present smile.

Kennedy Memorial Library Requests Appropriate Letters

Dear Students:

Our generation has experienced few shocks, and none have we shared more intensely and none has moved us as deeply as the death of President Kennedy. All Americans were stunned and grieved by his untimely passing, but perhaps you felt the blow more than all the rest. He was a man who shared his youth and ideals with young people and awakened within us the challenge to find purpose and to carry out our responsibility to ourselves and to our country.

We believe that the personal letters college students wrote to your support and cooperation to make this project a success. If you have saved any of the letters you received which commented upon the effects of the events in Dallas, and if you are interested in donating them to the library, please send them to: Letters, Box 756, Blacksburg, Virginia, 24060.

If possible we would like to have the original envelope showing the postmark and date. Upon receipt of the letters, we will assemble them and forward them to the body of the National Archives in Washington, D. C.

It should be remembered that these letters will be made available for examination by competent and interested persons at the library, and thus, any personal matter may be deleted or the letter may be reprinted omitting these parts. We will attempt to acknowledge all letters which are received.

We feel that if we are able to obtain an adequate number of these letters representing a fair cross-section of the U. S. college population, then our generation will be enabled to make a real and unique contribution to history, helping to paint a clearer picture of our times.

Sincerely yours,

Paintings By Chavatel Reveal Existential Ideas

By Barbara Melton
Mr. George A. Chavatel has had displayed for some time several modern paintings in the foyer of the auditorium. It was suggested by Dr. William J. Sowder that these paintings reveal existential ideas, and it is under the direction of Dr. Sowder that this article has been written. Special thanks also goes to Miss Gina Williams who assisted in the writing of this story.

In order to understand these paintings in terms of existentialism, it is necessary to present a brief discussion of existentialism. Existential philosophy hinges on the assumption that consciousness is a state of mind, but a direction; one is conscious only if he is conscious of something. Consciousness implies a subject and an object but resides in neither. Consciousness occupies the split occurring between these phenomena, maintains the existential philosopher Karl Jaspers: there he says lies Consciousness and all clarity.

Within this realm man is, if ever, to achieve transcendence. One of Mr. Chavatel's paintings is a fine evidence of how this transcendence can be possible.

Shows Transcendence The background of this work presents a series of vertical orange, red, and blue strokes. Looking at them one experiences the vague dissatisfaction that always accompanies dissipated energy, until suddenly out of this energy (which Jaspers would call encompassing) appears two bold yellow spots. The eye begins painfully to spot from one spot to the other, while the viewer attempts somehow to adjust to a distance in which both spots can be contained and at the same time keep the swirling background in proper perspective.

At exactly the right distance from the work, the two spots — representing now subject and object — disappear, and it is as if the reason between the two (the compositional center of the work) that remains. For the instant the viewer outside of himself becomes the rarest of all experiences — pure consciousness, transcendence.

Studies Evil

Central to the existential philosophy of Gabriel Marcel is the difference between problem and mystery. "A problem," he says, "is something I can seize upon and reduce; mystery is something in which I myself am involved: it cannot be reduced; it cannot be grasped." One of Marcel's complaints involves the treatment of evil and good as problems rather than as mystery. Sociology, for example, treats evil as a social disorder to be looked into an effect the cause of which can be solved. This approach as well as that of Freudian psychology and much traditional religion gives the impression that evil is a game, a sort of object set before me and is overcome as such. "Evil," Marcel maintains, "cannot be objective; it is an indefinable part of myself. Mr. Chavatel reveals in one of his paintings just how much a part.

The viewer is drawn into this piece through a series of appallingly powerful pink and black swirls which bring instantly to the mind the old time hymn, "I Was Sinking Deep in Sin . . ." The repulsive, dirty, yet endlessly fascinating pink, the dominant color in the work, reveals in all its mystery and ambiguity the paradox of evil.

Slithering in, around, and through these pink swirls are black bands, dirtier even than the pink. Over the viewer, as he views this heaving mass, steals the same sort of delicious horror enjoyed at the rattlesnake pit in the circus, and then ab-

Otto, Kolva Represent LC In Golf Tournament

by Bobbie Burrell

Excitement reigned at the Longwood Golf Course recently. The nine contestants in the tournament which determined the two girls to represent Longwood at the Virginia Collegiate Women's Golf Tournament played under perfect weather and ground conditions. With the exception of a few piercing screams the day was rather calm. Most of the screams came from Joanna Otto and Dianne Davis. Dianne got the first birdie of her golfing career (a one under par) and Joanna got the first eagle. An eagle is two under par. Jo got this amazing eagle on the 18th hole, and everyone on the golf course could hear the screams of excitement.

Prepare for Contest

The winners of the Longwood tournament were Joanna Otto and Kathy Kolva. Jo is a junior hailing from Chester; Kathy lives in Ohio. These two girls will be defending the championship which Jo and Bobbie Burrell brought home after last year's state tournament. In the Longwood tournament Jo shot a 97 and Kathy 101. The girls will now begin practicing for the state tournament to be held at Eagleside on April 25 with Mary Baldwin College as the host college.

Other contestants in the Longwood tournament were: Lois Oenshain, Bobbie Burrell, Dianne Davis, Marty Stastny, Chris Longstreet, Sarah Jane Lynch, and Bess Mann. These girls suffered from tired feet and aching muscles Friday and Saturday, but other than that the tournament was very successful. An evaluation of this year's tournament is being made by Jo and Bobbie with the hopes that next year's tournament will be bigger and better. If you have any suggestions, please let these girls know.

Madison Downs LC In Tennis Match Tourney

The Madison team was successful in making a clean sweep of the five tennis matches held here on Saturday. Those competing the Longwood College team were Nancy Morefield, Henrietta Gilliam, Carolyn Cline, Rosemary Rudy, Ann Downey, Jenny Horton, and Tot Sykes.

The next tennis matches will be played will be at Westhampton on April 20. The Longwood team will then travel to Lynchburg College for a match on April 30, but will return home for a match with William and Mary on May 5. The last match to be played will be at RPI on May 7.

Miss Heintz, who is coaching varsity tennis, will choose two members to represent Longwood at the Middle Atlantic Collegiate Tennis Championship at Mary Baldwin College in Staunton, which will be held May 10 through May 14.

Delegates Elect New Officers For SIASG

Emory and Henry made the invitation to all the colleges that the 50th annual SIASG Conference be held there.

After seminars on Faculty-Student Government Relations, with Legislative; and Faculty-Student Government Relations with Judicial, the installation of new officers took place.

In summary, the convention provided an interesting and invaluable exchange of ideas, suggestions, and policies. Besides this, it provided an opportunity for students from colleges all over the South to meet on common grounds.

A special thanks must go to Co-Chairmen Joyce Powell and Dee Dederick for making the conference possible and for providing the ingredients for a successful meeting.

New Schedule Now In Effect For Sunday Meal

The new system for Sunday night dinner began recently and will be continued on a temporary basis. The schedule is as follows: Seniors-5:15, Juniors-5:25, Sophomores-5:35, and Freshmen-5:45. It has been assumed that there will be the same selection of food for everyone. If students wish to eat at a particular time other than their scheduled time, permission must be obtained from a member of the executive council of House Council.

AA News

The new A. A. Council was installed on April 13 to work with the newly elected officers. The new group will continue to coordinate varsity and class athletic contests for the 1964-65 college term. The free-time recreational pursuits will also continue.

Ways and Means — Drinks and possibly popcicles will be sold at May Day and at the dress rehearsal.

Refreshments — Refreshments were served to the Madison College tennis team following the match Saturday afternoon.

Picnic — A picnic and meeting will be held at Longwood Estate May 4 for the new Council.

Golf — Joanna Otto and Kathy Kolva will represent Longwood at the tournament at Mary Baldwin.

Spring sports — Announcements concerning class archery and tennis will be posted on the A. A. bulletin board. Archers from each class will compete for high scores and tennis doubles teams will vie for matches as the perennial battle continues for points toward winning the color cup. On the class level, softball practices will begin soon also.

Varsity archery will be conducted by Miss Rebecca Brockenbrough and managed by Nevis Born. Practices will be held every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 4:00. At the end of a certain amount of practicing time, a team of five archers will be chosen. Anyone interested in trying out for the team should contact Miss Brockenbrough immediately.

A. A. Sets Up Council For 1964-65 Session

The A. A. Council has chosen its committees for the following year. New managers are varsity hockey, Phyllis Laseley and Dianne Davis; class hockey, Kay Moore and Jane Wilson; varsity basketball, Frances Stewart and Sharon Williams; class basketball, Bess Mann and Connie Spradlin.

Other new managers are varsity archery, Nevis Born; class archery, Pat Lyddane; varsity tennis, Carolyn Cline; class softball, Becky White; class softball, Barbara Agee and Sandra Long; class volleyball, Linda Reams and Geri Gerhardt; publicity, Mary Gomp; social, Brenda Donovan; recreation, Jayne Eddy; Ways and Means, Jenny Morton; and historian, Karen Ruder.

White's Article Appears In "Town And Country"

by Linda Turner

A third article has been sold by Mr. Ellington White for publication in the widely circulated magazine, Town and Country. Mr. White, assistant professor of English, joined the Longwood faculty three years ago after teaching at the University of Richmond, serving as Director of Publications at Hollins College and teaching at Mississippi Southern College. He attended Washington and Lee University for two years, received the BA degree from Kenyon College and acquired the MA degree from John Hopkins University.

Writers About Bermuda — "Bermuda, the Half-Way House," the article to appear in Town and Country, describes bone fishing around Bermuda. The article resulted from a hasty trip there last summer when Mr. White stayed for five days fishing.

In December 1963, Sports Illustrated published an article, "Singing Waters and a Sea of Mud," about Lake San Carlos in North Carolina and angling for crappie, catfish and bass. His first published article was a character sketch about a guide who lives in the Everglades of Florida and knows the good fishing spots for miles around his home deep within the marshland.

Plans Trip to North — This summer Mr. White has two assignments to complete. He will visit an Anglican priest and bush pilot in Quebec, Labrador who serves his parish by airplane. The Trough Club in West Virginia, owned by forty men and containing three thousand acres will be the subject of his second article. The large area of the Club houses one of the last streams in the United States that contains small mouth bass.

Writes Short Story — However sportsperson he is, Mr. White's primary interest is fiction and the literary essay. This month the Anthology of Short Stories contains his story, "The Sergeant Good Friend."

When asked about his sports specialty, he replied, "Fly rod fishing." Traveling in and around the United States provides him an opportunity to do the best angling possible in the most popular fishing spots.

May Day Plans In Final Stages, Theme Revealed

Preparations for the annual May Day Pageant are now in their final stages. The theme for this year's festivities is "A May Mid-Day Dream." The story is adapted from the faries and elves poem of Shakespeare's A Mid-Summers Night Dream.

The program will be held in the "Cell" of Longwood Estate on May 2 at 3:00.

Queen Bobbie Cadow and her court will be escorted by their fathers.

May Day Chairman, Judy Hackney is pleased with the progress in the program and wishes to thank all those who have worked so hard on the pageant.

L'Engle Speaks To LC Students Quest At Tea

Madeleine L'Engle, a writer of children's literature, was the guest speaker of Beore Eh Thorn and made the address in the last assembly. A tea was given in her honor by the English honor society.

Miss L'Engle, a graduate of Smith College cum laude of Massachusetts, received on July 15, 1963, the distinguished Newberry Award for her book, A Wrinkle In Time. This is the highest award given annually for the finest contribution to children's literature.

Uses Time Device

A fantasy of time and space, A Wrinkle In Time is an adventure story into outer space and employs the concept of tesserae, which enables one to be transported anywhere in the universe without the use of time. She has written seven other books which also reveal her strong portrayal of children and family life such as Camilla Dickinson, And Both Were Young, and The Moon by Night. She has been an actress, performing with Eva Gallienne and Margaret Webster and playing roles in Uncle Harry, The Cherry Orchard, and The Joyous Season.

Writes Plays

Conversely, she has written a number of plays and is currently working on the scenario of her play, Letters of a Portuguese Nun, which will be made into a movie next year starring Natalie Wood.

their outstanding leadership, in one of the four divisions of athletic ability, social and campus leadership.

AKG's portion of the assembly began with Billie Sue Board singing "I Would Be True" accompanied by pianist, Sally Portage. Devotions were then led by Charlotte McClung. After Lynne Osteen followed with a speech on "What is AKG?", all the members linked their fingers signifying the lasting torch of intelligence and leadership. President Evelyn Gray then explained what qualifications are looked for in a new AKG member.

Class Of 1965 To Feature Groups At Intercollegiate Folk Festival

By Maria Grant
Put on your walking shoes, grab your friends, and head for the Dell May 9th at 2 p.m. Then you're set for the Intercollegiate Folk Festival sponsored by the Junior class.

The informal festival will feature several groups who performed in the Hootenanny February 22, plus some new faces.

Remember the Collegian Quartet? Bill Woods, Tommy Boehr, Lynn Straley, and John Turner from Emory and Henry College have appeared at East Tennessee State University, Virginia, where students from Roanoke College, and at civic clubs, banquets, and high schools in the area. Also at Radford and King College.

The Collegians have added a band to their group and since the last appearance at Longwood they have also recorded an album.

Longwood and Hampden-Sydney will again take part in the entertainment, although the line-up is indefinite at the present.

New to the area this time are three students from Roanoke College. Kit Bond, Tom Miller and Steve Snedegar, who call themselves "The Inkkeepers." They have appeared at the Hootenanny Club at Myrtle Beach, Colonial Hills Club in Roanoke, and do a national commercial for a clothing store. The trio writes many of the numbers they sing and these will be included in the show.

Under audition contract for Columbia Records Co. are Dan and Harvey, who turned professional this past year. Both have interesting and varied backgrounds in the field of music.

Dan Bravin (22) graduated from City College in N. Y. but was born in Haifa, Israel and lived there till 1959. He plays concert piano and dance band piano in the Army Training Band at the Navy School of Music in Washington, D. C. After graduation in May he will play for the Fort Devan, Mass. Army Band. Harvey Bluerick (23) also graduated from City College, N. Y. Before joining Dan, he sang and played through New York and Greenwich Village and was Head Music Counselor in guitar in summer music camps. Harvey is the arranger for the group and plays Spanish guitar.

Since becoming professionals Dan and Harvey have played at the Exodus Night Club, the Casalt and Sabrah Coffee House in N. Y. Also in concerts at City College, Harper College, and the Julliard School of Music.

In Greenwich Village they performed at the Finjon and Avital coffee houses. They've also done shows at the Finjon Coffee House in Montreal, Canada. The duo sings and speaks in 5 different languages.

If you like folk music (whether straight or with an international flavor) there'll be quite a variety in the Dell May 9th!

"Inkkeepers," Tom Miller, Kit Bond and Steve Snedegar are one of groups featured in Inter-Collegiate Folk Festival. The festival will be held at Longwood Estate Dell, May 9, at 2:00 P. M. Hootenanny is sponsored by Class of '65. Come along!

Eighteen Girls Enter Miss Longwood Contest

You may not believe it? Well, it's true! Your very own roommate may be Miss America of 1965. You wonder how? First of all, she must have entered the Miss Longwood Contest to be held on Tuesday, April 28, at 7:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

At the Miss Longwood Contest, two winners will be chosen from the eighteen contestants on the basis of talent, beauty, poise, and intelligence. One girl will be crowned Miss Longwood, and she will go to the Miss Virginia Pageant, July 8-11 and maybe on to the Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, N. J., where she could win up to $10,000 in a scholarship and many other prizes. The other girl, whose title will be Queen Longwood, will go to Pensacola, Florida for the week of June 7-14, where she will compete for the title of Queen of American Colleges in the America's Queen of Queens Pageant.

These girls will be judged by top quality judges who have had experience in contest judging.

Support for Clubs
Not only is the Miss Longwood Contest beneficial to the contestants, but it can also help your organization if you have thought enough to enter one of your girls in the contest. Every time the name of the girl you sponsored appears, the name of your organization will also be there. Your organization may also earn some extra money from this contest if its members are willing to sell tickets to the contest as the organization will receive 25 cents on every ticket its members sell. Admission is $1.00, and this may seem like a lot until you realize that this admission fee will be the only source of money to send your fellow students and a chapone to the Pensacola pageant and the Miss Virginia Pageant. If your organization wishes to sell tickets, you should contact Kitty

Pettit in Main Cunningham Annex, Room 155.

Chairman for Contest
The chairman of this year's contest is Jo Leslie Andrews, who was last year's Miss Longwood. Working with her are the chairmen of contestants, Nancy Hughes and Mary Bodine; the chairman of production, Cherrany Howe; and the chairman of judges, Nancy Ruckman.

Come out and see these girls who will represent you and your school in these two beauty pageants and make the Miss Longwood Contest of 1964 a huge success.

Bagnold's Chalk Garden Set As Last Play Of Year

The Chalk Garden, a play in three acts by the contemporary playwright Enid Bagnold, will be presented by the Longwood Players in Jarman Auditorium on Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday nights, April 22, 23, and 25 at 8:00 p.m.

Wiley Directs

This unusual comedy-mystery is directed by Mr. David Wiley, who is assisted by Pat Newton. The cast of seven women and two men include Mary Lynn Lander as Madrigal, Laurel's companion; Heather Mader as the precocious Laurel; Sally Richter as the grandmother, Mrs. St. Maughan; Linda Butler as Olivia, Laurel's "sinful" mother; Shirley Timberlake as the nurse; Maria Konovaleff as the second applicant; Chickie King as the third applicant; Gerry Ragland as the old judge; and Mike Couchman as the manservant Maitland.

Crew Chiefs
Crew chiefs are Stage manager, Bonnie Ramey; Publicity, Dianne Bigger; Scenery, Jackie Walker; Lights, Dave Reives and Ed Erickson; Sound, Laura Lee Meyerhoffer; Properties, Ellen Miller; Make-up, Cherrany Howe; House, Sandy Waugh; Costumes, Mary Lee Barnes; and over all the crews is Patti O'Neill, technical director.

Admission for Longwood students has already been paid by the activities fee. Tickets for students of other colleges is .50, and for all others, the price is $1.00.

"Chalk Garden," unusual comedy-mystery by Enid Bagnold, will be presented by Dr. Francis B. Simkins, professor of history at Longwood College, will give a public lecture May 6 at 4:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge of the Student Building reviewing the Institute of Southern Culture program for 1964.

AKG Sponsors Unusual Auction

Fun, excitement and thrill cries of "I'll raise the bid!" rang through the Main Rec as Alpha Kappa Gamma offered for bidding unusual items at their auction, which is held every two years. The proceeds go toward establishing a self-perpetuating scholarship to be awarded to a worthy upperclassman.

The two auctioneers for this year's auction were Mr. Jake Wamsley and Mr. Earl Rubley. Among the items auctioned off were many interesting ones: an exhibition of the "bird" by Mr. Helms, banjo lessons from Dr. Lockwood, a steak dinner with Mrs. Cover, two charcoal sketches done by Mrs. Vierra, a golf game with Dr. Sneller, and horseback riding with Dr. Jackson.

The item creating the most excitement and the highest bidding was the privilege of naming the color of Charlie Hogg's tie. Red-and-whites vied with green-and-whites to outbid each other. The red-and-whites were finally victorious, paying $45 to have Charlie wear a bright red tie.

Co-chairman for the auction committee were Dana Brewer and Lurline Robertson. Peggy Whitaker was publicity chairman and Jeanne Kafer was business manager.

Kappa Delta Pi Elects Officers

Thirty one new members have been initiated into the Beta Epsilon chapter of Kappa Delta Pi, national honorary education society. New senior initiates are Cynthia Alcock, Betty Alvis, Jo Leslie Andrews, Ednae Hudson, Marie Murphy, Betty Ann Rex, Anne Sneed, Betty Ruth Simpson, Dolores Watkins, and Nancy Burke.

The following new officers for next year were also installed: president, Bonnie Ramey; vice-president, Doris Harwell; secretary, Becky Evans; treasurer, Betty Perkins; and historian, Pauline Perrow.

Exhibit Of Modern Art On Display In Jarman

rudely out of that mass appears an eye (?) blob (?) a black diamond (?). In an instant the painting flicks, comes together, and the viewer is thrown back upon himself, and in this thrownness realizes his own involvement, an experience made even more positive as he leaves and looks behind: there following him is that; and to use a line from "Blackberry Winter," a fine short story saying much of what Marcel and Mr. Chavatel are saying: "I did follow him all the days of life."

Is sharp contrast to the black and pink a work revealing not the mystery of evil but of good. And here one again finds a clue to the study of this work in Marcel, who has used the word to define the power of good. Leaning over the baby he asks himself what is the presence that makes itself felt, which protects from all harm? This being, entirely within his own power. Whence the vulnerability, the mystery of the sacredness, of the unprotected, of good.

The compositional center of the deeply religious work is a brilliant white, and to borrow a phrase from Marcel, "luminous fragment." Directed at the fragment, spaced beautifully as if in adoration, are three irregular triangles — subtle symbols of a trinity: suffering, purity, creativity. Or is this Christ himself or the three Wise Men? Pouring up, welling up — the energy which Mr. Chavatel gets into this stroke is in itself a little miracle — from nowhere and everywhere is a thick blunt wave which threatens to pour over and blot out forever the fragment. Poked over and above with absolute power to bring Master, the thick wave is stayed. Let it stayed and there remains the last hope of the world, as Christ knew: the mystery of the invulnerability of the sacred, of the pure, the innocent, the unprotected.

Existentially, perhaps aesthetically too, the best of Chavatel's paintings in this exhibit is a composition in black, white and gray. In this painting the artist has complete control of his medium, and in it he displays to a fine advantage his real forte: welding a brush of almost ferocious energy. There is in this painting no waiting for adjustment to distance as in the yellow spots, there is no gradual sinkin as in the pink and black, there is no gathering calmness as in the luminous fragment; rather there is the sense of being grasped and rushed to the center of great swirl, appearance not unlike Haley's Comet.

Once inside it, as if on a great roller coaster, the viewer is surrounded and suddenly released like a rock from a slingshot out into . . . In this excellent action painting, Chavatel has in the comet's eye evoked perfectly the existential dizziness of Kierkegaard, the anguish of Sartre, and despair of Heidegger, and out of it sweeps on into the "leap" to Heidegger and Sartre's Nothingness. Jasper's Transcendental God? Or is it merely back to the dark ground of self, there once again to be seized and again to fling out to find what is real there?

Mrs. Jeanne Whitaker Clabough, Dr. Carolyn Wells, and Dr. Letta Holman attended a meeting of the Association of Southern Biologists at Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia.

Jeanne presented a paper concerning a technique that she developed for removing media from the protozoan Tetrahymena pyriformis. Possibly this technique can be applied to other protozoans.

Jeanne is presently working on her honor's paper, "A Comparative Analysis of Amino Acids in Tetrahymena pyriformis under feeding and starvation conditions." Her technique was developed while trying to separate the cells from the growing media in order to obtain her starved cells.

Attorney General Visits Farmville Area

Board And Council Revise Rules For '64-65 Session

By Sharon Compton

The Legislative Board and House Council have made changes in the existing rules of governing student activities and dormitory life that will become effective beginning with the 1964-65 school session. Aside from the actual revision of rules, many have been reworded to clear up ambiguities, others deleted, and new ones added.

Of major significance is the fact that House Council will exert more authority. They will be invested with the power to handle sign-in and out cases, whereas before this was a responsibility of the Judicial Board. Respective dorm presidents will handle these sign-in and out cases and will have the authority to issue campus to those students who violate its rules. However, no extenuating circumstances will be handled by House Council. The election of presidents prior to the next school year is necessary since their responsibilities have been broadened as a result of taking over some of the duties of the Judicial Board. Unlike previous years, next year the dorm president will be aided by an assistant, who will be elected sometime in the future.

To Alcoholic Beverages on page thirty will be added the rule which states: If a girl plans to go to Hampden-Sydney, and she also plans to drink at a public eating place, she must sign out for one and return to the campus and sign in. Then, she may sign out for the other destination. She may not sign out for both at the same time.

Under Off Campus on page thirty-four of the Student Handbook, rule two has been changed so that the main portion will read: A lateness of ten minutes or under (including the five minutes for the dorm president or the executive council of House Council. Cases that exceed this time will be dealt with by the Judicial Board.

On the other hand, a new addition will be made to the Off Campus rules stating that: Freshmen may obtain special permission from their head resident to have 12:30 p.m. sign-in time on Saturday nights if their dates are coming from beyond the fifty-mile radius.

Moreover, organizations will not be permitted to sell food, except for special occasions, at which time the respective organization will be notified.

A relatively quiet Farmville, Virginia, erupted into mass of excitement as Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy visited free school system Monday. Question and answer session at Hampden-Sydney College terminated Mr. Kennedy's tour.

Civil Rights Advocate Visits Prince Edward

By Donna Humphrey

Robert F. Kennedy, one of the nation's most controversial advocates of civil rights, visited segregated Prince Edward County Monday.

Stop At Longwood

After landing at the local airport, the Attorney General and his party drove through Farmville and stopped at various points to speak to well-wishers. At Longwood, Kennedy told a group of squealing admirers to serve Virginia after they have completed their education.

From Farmville, the entourage moved into the county where it stopped at the several branches of the Prince Edward Free School Foundation. At each of the schools the Attorney General accepted pennies the children had saved to donate to the Kennedy Memorial Library in Boston, in honor of the late President John F. Kennedy.

Visits Motion

At R. R. Motion High School, Kennedy, assistant Attorney General William J. Vanden Heuvel, and the trustees of the Free School were introduced to the student body. Kennedy told the students to take advantage of their educational opportunities, that there was no place for unskilled labor today. He also told the students that turbulence is good, for out of it comes new ideas.

The Attorney General then presented ET boat pins of his late brother to students who had taken part in the welcoming program.

Answer Questions

The final stop in the Attorney General visit was a trip to conservative Hampden-Sydney, where Kennedy was greeted with Goldwater posters. When asked those who opposed civil-rights legislation to indicate their disapproval, the majority of those present applauded vigorously. Only a small percentage in the Hampden-Sydney audience indicated that they were in favor of the present civil rights legislation.

Kennedy then invited the dissenters to discuss the legislation with him. The students then pled the Attorney General with questions dealing with the controversial Title II of the bill, tuition grants, and voting requirements.

Kennedy carefully pointed out that he was in favor of jury trials for those who would violate the Civil Rights Legislation should it be enacted into law. He also told the students that it would have been better had the states enacted the legislation instead of the federal government.

After giving answers to their questions, Kennedy asked the students what they would have done in Mississippi when Wallace failed to uphold the Constitution. There was a conspicuous silence to the Attorney General's question.

Research Team Devises Tests In Education

A research team from the University of Toledo was awarded a contract from the Cooperative Research Board of the United States Office of Education to do research on the characteristics of teacher education students in the British Isles and the United States.

The team has devised many experiments and demonstrations to test teacher education. All efforts, however, have been confined within the national boundaries and no attempt from the research center has been made, as of late, to compare the teacher education program and teacher preparation of the United States and other countries.

Longwood College is one of fifty universities and colleges participating in this experiment. On May 8 and May 11, the students, who are preparing to teach at elementary and secondary levels of school, took the tests that were sent out by the research team. These students were selected at random from the sophomore, junior, and senior classes. The testing program consisted of general and professional knowledge attitudes, and personality characteristics.

The principle purposes of this study consist of the following: 1. general education preparation; 2. general attitudes and personality.

Anne Casteen Receives $100 Wygal Scholarship

It was announced yesterday that the recipient of the Freshman Class Scholarship for the Class of 1967 is Anne P. Casteen.

The scholarship consists of $100, to be awarded each year to the member of the Freshman Class best exemplifying the spirit of Longwood College. The Freshman Class is responsible for making this selection.

During her first year at Longwood College, Anne Casteen has indeed been an outstanding example of Longwood spirit. She served in the Y as President of the Freshman Commission. Outstanding academically, Anne made the Dean's List first semester.

Also socially active, Anne was Pledge President of Sigma Kappa. Finally, placing great faith in her ability, the Class of 1967 elected Anne to be Sophomore Representative to the Judicial Board.

The scholarship was established this year by Mr. Fred O. Wygal, in concurrence with the Freshman Class, as a result of the new Freshman tradition of throwing pennies over the Rotunda rail.

Hester, Pearce Hold Concert Next Sunday

The Longwood College Music Department will close out its year of music activities Sunday, May 17 at 4:00. A joint recital featuring Judy Hester and Sue Pearce, two Sophomore music majors will be held in the Student Lounge.

Sue, on clarinet, will present selections from "A Concerto for Clarinet" by von Weber. She will be accompanied by Mildred Johnson. Sue is a student of Mr. Darrell Harbourn.

Judy Hester, a mezzo soprano, will sing selections by German, French, Italian, and English composers. Mr. Edward Hull is her instructor. Mildred Johnson will also serve as her accompanist.

The public is cordially invited to attend this recital, which is the last in a series of student recitals presented each year.

Johnson Wins Longwood Title, To Attend Virginia Pageant

Longwood held its annual "Miss Longwood" contest recently in Jarman Auditorium. Amid eager faces and anxious anticipation a queen was chosen. Mildred Smith Johnson, a 19 year old sophomore from Union, Va. became the new "Miss Longwood."

"Honey," as she is called by her friends, is a music major emphasizing voice and piano. For her talent she sang "One Kiss" by Sigmond Romberg. During an interview with Honey, she commented on the contest: "I am most grateful for the honor to represent Longwood College in the Miss Virginia Pageant. I was very excited and still find it hard to believe."

A second queen was chosen also. Ruth Ann Baxter, a 19 year old sophomore from Petersburg, was crowned "Queen Longwood." Ruth Ann is majoring in mathematics while at college.

For the talent competition, Ruth Ann portrayed Pinocchio as she changed from a wooden toy to a happy little boy. Ruth Ann said of the contest: "The Miss Longwood Contest was a most exciting event. The excitement for me was too much; I still can't believe it."

For each queen the judges chose an alternate. Miss Longwood's runner up is Kay Catron, a 20 year old sophomore from Pulaski. Kay did a pantomime and danced called "Honeybun" from the musical, "South Pacific." Cathie Dugan, a 19 year old freshman from Roanoke, is Queen Longwood's alternate. Cathie played "Malaguena."

bathing suit competition, a three-minute talent, an evening gown appearance, and an answering period of two questions.

The contestant receiving the highest number of points became Miss Longwood and the one with the second highest, Queen Longwood.

Miss Longwood will represent the college at the annual Miss Virginia Pageant where a contestant is selected to compete in the Miss America Pageant.

Queen Longwood will go to Pensacola, Florida in the month of June to represent the school at the Festival of Five Flags.

PINOCCHIO REIGNS!

After her own successful year as Miss Longwood, Jo Leslie Andrews crowns new Miss Longwood Honey Johnson, during recent contest in Jarman. Ruth Ann Baxter will reign as Queen Longwood. Runners-up are Kay Catron and Cathie Dugan.

The Time Is Now

Our society has always forced its Negroes to have a strong racial self-consciousness. Whether he wanted to vote, go to school, get a job, find a place to live, ride a bus, buy a hamburger, or visit a movie, the Negro has had to remember his race. Race consciousness is not something new, but it is only recently that the Negro, in accepting his identity has made it a symbol of a demand for justice.

Today in the face of such movements as the Black Muslims and the African Nationalists, many segregationists long for the good old days when the NAACP looked radical. These organizations are the by-product of impatience — impatience with the white race who after 100 years are still mulling that segregation is an evil that sooner or later must be removed from our society, but that the time is not right. The majority of the Negro population still look on these radical movements much as most sane white citizens regard the Ku Klux Klan. We have a right to fear the growing importance and numbers of these groups, but we also have a duty to realize that we are, in fact, responsible for their actions by our very complacency and blindness.

For the sake of "sacred southern tradition," we jeopardize domestic unity and endanger our international strength and prestige. We do not say to forget or to be ashamed of our southern heritage, but we do say, don't let us become like parasites feeding on the past. It is time to make new traditions — a new heritage. The South has always been noted for its leaders, its ideals, and its courage in the face of injustice. We need only to realize that we are in the midst of a social revolution that we can not, and should not want to, prevent because it has already begun. We can no longer ignore the Negro — he is no longer asking, he is demanding his rights.

Over and over again we hear the cry of "state's rights," "big government," and "loss of freedom for the individual." If we want to exert our state's rights, cut down the power of big government, and regain our lost freedom, then we must accept the responsibility ourselves. We can not claim the right to control and then ignore the problem.

The Negro must be able to enter the main stream of world culture with the same opportunities, protections, and incentives as other free individuals with whom he must compete. We must let him assume his rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" as guaranteed by our forefathers. And the time is now!

House Mother Retires After 8 Years At LC

Being a housemother is not one of the easiest jobs in the world, but it can be rewarding and eventful. Mrs. Ruby Jones, who is retiring after her eighth year here at Longwood, can verify this.

Her first six years were spent taking care of the girls in Tabb Hall and the past two years has found her in North Cunningham. After finishing out the school year in May, she will probably return to Sheppard. Mrs. Jones owns a farm in Sheppard, where she lived before coming to Longwood.

Mrs. Jones is very devoted to her five grandchildren of whom she is very proud. A great deal of her time will be taken up just being a good grandmother.

An enthusiast of several hobbies, Mrs. Jones has three favorites among them gardening, and, in particular, "Garden Week" is one of her special loves. She also enjoys needle point and has done several pieces of her own. Traveling is a favorite with Mrs. Jones and she hopes to be able to do a great deal more of it after her retirement.

Graduation Thoughts Of Passing Senior

by Marcia Siegfried

Eighteen days till graduation... If I make it through exams... guess I had better start packing now... wish I didn't have so many souvenirs... well, I'll just make myself keep one thing to remember my days at Longwood... Just one, no more than that.

What's that green and white object doing in the closet? Oh, it's my old rat cap with the red magic marker wrapped up in it. There's the Japanese kimono I wore in sophomore production and my caveman outfit from our junior circus skit. Two sun-faded scarves... my sunbathing "Proper Attire."

Four Virginians... they must weigh a ton! Wonder if I'll ever use this term paper. My in-and-out card... hmmm... used up three my freshman year. This next, and a half card this year. Well that's the price you pay for getting on in years.

Let's see... my Leo's 460 hide this. A plate from the dining hall. A rotten easter egg? ... Barf! Here's my blue jeans and Red Ram shirt. 200 empty Marlboro packs! ... too bad

I gave up smoking before the contest ended. The remains of a carnation from my "big sis"... cheerful cheerio note.

This looks interesting... a package of letters from Tommy... no, Bill... oh, they're from Phil... which one was he? I've got to keep this... my faded sweatshirt saying "the class of '64."

Well, I've got to throw away something... at least one thing! ... well, good-by term paper.

Longwood Roofs Receive Floods Of Sun Seekers

by Royce Rankin

Mass egression to the dormitory roofs of Longwood was noted this week as the rains ceased, the sun emerged, and the temperature rose past 90.

Students, fortified with blankets, pillows, cigarettes, food, books, stationery, cards, radios, sprinkle bottles, lotions, and a strong desire to be together, rushed to lie on the pebbles and absorb the magic solar rays.

Inquiring into the purposes of such intense efforts evoked some very interesting replies. Most girls desire a tan; some want to lighten their hair. Two students don't smoke but wish to conform and have heard there's a possibility that continued exposure to the sun causes skin cancer. Many people feel it's their duty to cheer up the Air Force pilots as their planes circle overhead.

Some of the fashion-conscious have read that horn-rimmed glasses and freckles are very chic this Spring; these people are fulfilling a two-fold purpose by weakening their eyes and cultivating freckles. Several of the freshmen feel they look too young and have heard that increasing sunbathing guarantees wrinkles by the age of twenty-five. In any case, walking to the roof is less expensive than flying to Nassau.

Simonini Publishes Book Reviews Southern Scene

By Barbara Melton

The most recent publication to come out of a member of the faculty of Longwood is a book by Dr. R. C. Simonini, Southern Writers: An Appraisal in Our Time. The book consists of eight essays which have been compiled and edited by Dr. Simonini. His work was done in conjunction with the Institute of Southern Culture held annually in the spring at Longwood College.

Each of the essays in this book have been presented in lecture form at some time during the Institute's one-year history. In addition to the essays themselves, the book includes an introduction in which Dr. Simonini states the theme of the collection: "Southern literature was born in a struggle of the creative artist for recognition in an indifferent society; it has flourished as its writers reacted with varied inspiration to their environment — its traditions, aspirations, achievements, and failures."

Writer in Society. In the first essay, Willard Throp establishes the position of the writer in the Old South as alienated from his society. He maintains that one of the main reasons for the lack of writers in this period is because "certain features of the Southern agrarian society... crowded out the artist and poet." By these features Mr. Throp refers to uncontrollable climate conditions, over crops, illiterate labor force, and the ever-presenting job of keeping a plantation in order which gave the Southerner little time to develop his literary genius.

As a result, he was content to import his literature from European sources. Robert D. Jacobs in his essay "Poe in Richmond" deals with Poe as a Southerner. He writes that the problem lies in the fact that Poe "alternated between the stance of the sensitive, aristocratic poet and that of the shrewd, somewhat unscrupulous, journalist; neither image was completely satisfactory to the Southern mind, which was in the 1830's, as it is today, always self-conscious." He describes Poe's behavior as a youth as typical of the image of the young Southerner — the romantic Byronic hero.

Army in Fiection. Louis D. Rubin maintains that the Confederate army has not been reproduced in any good fiction by any Southern writer. He does hold, however, that the Confederacy has held secondary positions in such works as Faulkner's Asheville, Asheville, Southern writers, according to Mr. Rubin, are more interested in preserving the ideals, virtues, and image of the Southerner of the Old South instead of the Confederacy itself.

In "James Branch Cabell and Southern Romanticism" Dorothy B. Schlegel presents the perspective of Southern romanticism, and she believes that "the chivalric aspect of Southern Romanticism has provided the richest nourishment to the genius of the younger James Branch Cabell." Perspective of the South. Although it is not possible here to go into details concerning all the essays contained in Dr. Simonini's book, it features other scholars as Lawrence G. Nelson, C. Hugh Holman, James B. Meriwether, and Richard K. Meeker. It is an established fact that the South is the center of a literary renaissance. However, the South, as it always has been, is an area of complex history and ideas. It is the least understood area in the country because (Continued from Page 4)

Red And Whites Win Annual Color-Cup

Results Of Scores

Tally Up 50-10 Lead

By Sharon Williams

It's not too much of a surprise as to whom will receive the color cup this year. The red and whites have come up with another lucky year, as the tally now stands with the reds leading 50-10.

The sophomores and seniors started the year off with a bang by capturing the tennis singles and doubles. With a victory under their belt and an overflow of enthusiasm the seniors went on to maintain an undefeated career in class hockey.

A short lull in activities after hockey gave all four classes time to regroup themselves and prepare for a head-on battle in basketball. The sophomores were knocked out in the early rounds at the hands of the juniors. Paced with the ability of the seniors, the juniors were to pit all their strength against their mighty foe. But it was in vain. The freshmen were the last green and white hope. Both seniors and freshmen decided to make it a Mustang season. The score was close until time ran out on the freshmen and a red and white dropped the winning bucket to capture the basketball crown.

Volleyball was next on the sports agenda. The seniors and sophomores made a fancy clean sweep of the sport with three out of four game wins. Attention was then given the "water babies," as the swim meet came into view. This looked like the green and whites' big chance for they were loaded with potential, enthusiasm, and the desire to win. The score juggled back and forth with the red and whites coming out on top with a ONE point difference to win.

Softball, the non-interest sport, was forfeited to the green and whites. The senior and sophomores didn't have enough eligible players to compose two teams.

Spring class tennis is still in the making. Once again, the green and whites have a good chance. But, who knows?

Longwood Girls Visit Convention In Washington

The American Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation held its annual convention in Washington, D. C., May 8-May 12. This was the first time in seventy-five years that the convention had met here.

The purpose of the convention was to provide information on all aspects of Physical and Health Education, through research and discussion of problems and trends in these fields. Fourteen Longwood Physical Education majors attended the convention, accompanied by Mrs. Emily Landrum and Miss Beulah Bowman, instructors of Physical Education.

Six of the students were on the student steering committee and were participating in the session under the direction of Dr. Catherine L. Allen, president-elect of the American Association. This committee worked to plan recreational and social activities for those attending the convention.

Sportin' Chance

By Linda Turner

This summer will be different. Certainly no one can be a complete failure twice in a row. Determination wasn't my problem; it was fright. To be precise, I was initiated into the sport of skiing by a discouraging succession of events.

Having ridden as lookout for a ski club for two months, the techniques of staying above water appeared simple. Why anyone should be able to grasp a rope and guide two feet steadily. The only apparent things to remember were to stay directly behind the boat and not to slip into the wake.

I was ready to try it the first time several amateur skiers offered their teaching services. The disc was suggested as the best method to begin. The instructors said, "You just sit on it and hold on." Every condition was perfect wave-wise and weather-wise. The main drawback was trying to get aboard the contraption. As quickly as I landed on one side, I slid off the other. "Clench the edge with your ankles. Tilt your body backwards." My actions were as orderly as the directions until the boat left me behind. The backward flip resulted in one bruised eye which met the disc underwater as both were emerging. Perfection was never obtained in this phase, but I was ready for the real attempt.

Jumping skis were the only type available and proved to be handicap number one. Number two handicap was the fact that I was supposed to put the skis on while keeping afloat. It was physically impossible for me to control my feet. Even my legs would not extend straight out in front of me.

"Keep your arms taut and your legs slightly bent." The boat pulled away slowly. When I felt the tug it was gradually becoming more difficult to hold on. One of the ropes had become entangled around my left foot and ski. After being dragged the distance, my bruised eye was forgotten for more important rope burns, and bumps.

That experience won't prevent my trying again. Being frightened that day will cause me to be more attentive this summer.

Congress Now Studying Major Student Aid Bill

Any capable student will be able to attend college without financial worries if a new national student assistance program is approved by Congress. The bill, authored by Senator Vance Hartke, provides for a multi-purpose program of student financial assistance, flexible enough to meet the diverse requirements of the nation's post-secondary institutions, and balanced between loans, scholarships and student employment activities.

Faculty Defeats Council Members In Softball Game

Longwood's faculty defeated members of the Athletic Council, 5-0, in their recent softball game on the athletic field.

The faculty team, composed of Dr. Lane, Mr. DeWitt, Mr. Umphlett, Dr. Solo, and Mr. Rubley was assisted by Mrs. Lane, Mark Rubley, and several Longwood students.

In the first inning, the student team had players on first, second, and third bases. This was their only threat of the game, but they didn't manage to bring any of their players home. The faculty team posted four runs and didn't score their final one until the last inning.

The four-inning game was umpired by Peggy Waldo.

Dating, Picnic Rules Revised In '64 Handbook

sanization must obtain permission from the Dean of Women.

Numerous additions have also been made by the Legislative Board, one being the term "special probation," which will be added to the list of General Terms on page twenty-nine of the Handbook, and which deals with the involvement in Honor Code matters. Any other involvement in such matters will affect further punishment and will be dealt with at the discretion of the Judicial Board.

Rule number four under Picnics will be deleted, and rule number three has been revised so that it will read: Students must leave picnics by 9:00 p.m. if unchaperoned. Before the revision, this rule read: Students must leave picnics by 9:00 p.m. if unchaperoned and they must leave picnic by 9:00 p.m. if chaperoned.

Rule number four has been deleted from Riding and Cars on page thirty-three, but a new one has been added for the Seniors which states that they may not register cars belonging to underclassmen.

Lastly, two new additions will be made under Dating on page thirty-three of the Handbook, each stating respectively: 1) Two or more girls and their dates may visit Hampden-Sydney fraternity houses on weekends until 5:00 p.m.; and 2) Girls may not date boys on the black list within a fifty-mile radius.

Head lettuce and chef's salad were most favored in their field, and "vegetable soup outranked chicken noodle soup. Twenty desserts received 80 per cent or more with only one, purple plum cobbler, receiving less. Of the desserts, ice cream sundae were highest with 98 per cent.

"This survey has been very useful in helping us plan our meals. The results are being taken into consideration and the management would like to thank the students for their help. There will be a chance for the students to change some ratings next year when we hope to run another survey," Mr. Morris Pennock, manager of the dining hall said. Mr. Pennock added that the new assistant manager, Mr. Harry Stiel, who came to Longwood after spring vacation, is also being very helpful.

Testing Program Bases Study On Principles

- professional education knowledge
- general intelligence of pre-service teacher education in both countries

The most emphasis, however, will be placed upon the products of the teacher education at various stages in training.

This program was first suggested by Admiral Rickover in his book American Education - A National Failure. It is the first time comparison tests have been made between different countries.

Slater Survey Reveals Food Preferences Of Longwood Girls

Doughnuts for breakfast, bacon, lettuce and tomato sandwiches for lunch, and roast beef with potatoes for supper ranked as the favorite foods of Longwood students in the Slater Service food preference survey taken here February 20.

The survey was taken to serve as a guide for the dining hall management in preparing meals which better suit the student body.

Other popular breakfast entries include hot cakes with 89 per cent of the voters being in favor of them; scrambled eggs, 84 per cent; and French toast, 87 per cent. Doughnuts received 94 per cent. The most disliked in this category were Spanish omelet at 26 per cent and soft cooked eggs at 38 per cent.

In the sandwich area, eleven entries received a vote above 80 per cent. Bacon, lettuce and tomato sandwiches had a unanimous vote of 100 per cent. Some of the others were hamburgers, grilled cheese, pizzasburgers and hot roast beef all receiving votes of 92 per cent or above. Egg salad sandwiches were low at 68 per cent.

Fourteen meat entrees received 91 per cent or better with roast beef, roast turkey and beef steak claiming 98 per cent. Other favorites are bacon, frankfurters, fried chicken, ham, pork and pizza.

Potatoes ranked higher in five forms than did any other vegetable. French fried potatoes scored 100 per cent with baked potatoes and whipped potatoes claiming 99 per cent and 97 per cent respectively. Corn, baked beans, and green beans were also in the 90 percentile. Eggplant came in last in the vegetable category at 25 per cent.

Head lettuce and chef's salad were most favored in their field, and "vegetable soup outranked chicken noodle soup.

Twenty desserts received 80 per cent or more with only one, purple plum cobbler, receiving less. Of the desserts, ice cream sundae were highest with 98 per cent.

"This survey has been very useful in helping us plan our meals. The results are being taken into consideration and the management would like to thank the students for their help. There will be a chance for the students to change some ratings next year when we hope to run another survey," Mr. Morris Pennock, manager of the dining hall said. Mr. Pennock added that the new assistant manager, Mr. Harry Stiel, who came to Longwood after spring vacation, is also being very helpful.

Varsity Tennis

This year's varsity tennis team left 1964 behind with three victories under their belt. They dropped their first match to Madison in a 5-0 loss. Then they settled down, regained their composure and picked up three consecutive wins with a 3-2 victory in matches over Westhampton, Lynchburg, and William and Mary.

Nancy Moorefield and Pat Burdette have been selected to attend the Middle Atlantic Collegiate Women's Tennis Championship at Mary Baldwin College. This is a composite of varsity tennis players from colleges all along the eastern seaboard.

Ratting Changes Urge Student Comments

By Kay Young

It's Wednesday, the sixteenth day of September, 1964 and the Freshmen class hears that old tradition of Longwood — "ratting!" "Poor-r rats!"

The time is five o'clock; the scene is in the Sunken Gardens; and Betty Jo Hammer, Sophomore Class President, is making a ceremonial speech for the ratting of the rats. The rats are being copped by their "Big Sisters" (if they can find their Big Sis!) and now the group is singing a song to close the ceremonial capping.

Thursday, night the Sophomores entertain their rats in what appears to be a "friendly" occasion! But, alas! Here are the Top Rats and Orchids headed by Miss Zix — the most feared of all after scaring the "rats" sufficiently for one night, the party ends, and the Freshmen return to their dorms for a night of nightmares!

Rats Take Notes

All through the daytime the Top Rats and others of the class of '67 carry notebooks — and take notes! What are they writing in their little books? This remains a mystery for the Class of '64.

Friday night the poor rats are "terrified" once more as Buzz Night becomes a Hell Night and the "ugly" bophs walk the Colonnade and "buzz" the dorms! It's Saturday, and look at the cute little green and white frogs! For once the Class of '67

Longwood that has so consistently won state honors, and in addition, has also had national award winners.

will be able to have clean rooms without the expense of taxing themselves! Two o'clock and the rats copped! The frogs are exhibiting their talents in front of Wheeler.

Little Rat Courts are tonight, and Monday night will be Big Rat Court. Who will be the Top Rats for the Class '69?

Rules Are Changed
The changes in ratting for next fall will definitely create a better atmosphere between Freshmen and Sophomores. The old system has tended to create ill feelings held by some Freshmen for their Sophomore "superiors."

If the inexperienced Freshmen only realized the fun they could have during ratting, then the old system could be of an advantage. But the inexperienced Fresh are sometimes petrified, even to the extent of tears. There may still be flaws in the changes, but definitely the Fresh won't continue to "fear" their seniors of one year throughout their college career, and the Top Rats and Orchids can prove their pleasing personalities to a receptive group after "ratting" is over.

Spring Concert Joins Chorus

The Women's Chorus of Longwood College under the direction of Patricia M. Reilly and the University of Richmond Men's Chorus directed by Jack Jarrett joined in a concert recently held in Jernan Hall. This delightful spring entertainment was presented by the music department of Longwood College.

Students of Longwood and guests enjoyed such lovely selections as "Come Beloved," "Villancico," "May Night," "Do You Remember," "Brigadoon," and many others. The two choruses were accompanied by Dulka Defratt, Carole Combs, Sylvia Jarrett, Sue Pearce, and Janet Palmer.

The Jone returns from February's Intercollegiate Hootenanny were Tommy Boober, Lynn Stradley, John Turner, and Bill Woods, better known as The Collegian Quartet.

Their repertoire included "Trouble the Water," "Bethlehem," "Johnny I Hardly Knew Ye," and a parody on Rock'n' Roll.

Folk Festival In Dell Success For Juniors

Longwood Estate's Dell was the scene of an Intercollegiate Folk Festival Saturday May 9. Gene Elke of radio station WFLO acted as emcee for the show which featured four groups of singers from various colleges around Virginia.

Leading off the festival were the Inkeepers from Roanoke College. The trio, composed of Steve Snedegar (guitar), Kit Bond, and Tom Miller (banjo) sang, among other numbers, "Green Fields," "Maria," "Redeemed," and "Victory Dugan." Kit Bond's impersonations in "Madira" added some extra humor to their routine.

Next were Longwood's representatives to the entertainment. Kathy Brewer, dit "House of the Rising Sun" with Barbara Moore accompanying her on bongos. Laurie Soyars and Nancy Jo Taylor did their versions of "Albion" and "Winkin, Blinkin and Nod."

Enrollment Reaches 1400

For Coming Semester

by Marcia Siegfried
The admissions office reports an expected 438 new freshmen and 35 transfer students, next year, making the enrollment approximately 1400 students.

For the newcomers as well as the rest of the student body, many departments are bettering their curriculum by offering new courses.

Perhaps the greatest change is the broadening of the English Department into what will be called the Department of English, Speech, and Dramatic Art. Majors are offered in any of these three, or in a combination of them. Several new courses have been added: Chaucer, Voice and Diction, Fundamentals of Acting, and History of the Theatre.

The department of Business Education offers these new courses: Law and Society, Problems in Finance, Data Processing, and Office Management and Procedures.

A new offering in the Education department will be The Public School in the American Community. For Philosophy advocates, there will be Philosophy of Science, American Thought, and Ethics.

The field of Economics will next year include four more courses: Economic History of the United States, Comparative Economic Systems, Public Policies in Relation to Business and Labor, and The Evolution of Economics Thought. Two new government courses to be offered are Parties, Politics and Pressure Groups in the United States, and Public Law and Jurisprudence.

In the Department of Mathematics, Mathematics for Teachers in the Elementary Schools will become a year-long course (Mathematics 123-124). Although Mathematics 155-156 will not be offered next year, Fundamentals of College Mathematics, (Mathematics 161-162) will still be offered. Advanced Algebra (342-343) will be extended into a year-long course.

The Department of Natural Sciences will offer two new courses: Great Experiments in Science, and Science for Elementary Teachers. Another course, Special Projects in the Natural Sciences, will be offered more on an individual basis, with from two to four credits. This course has the advantage of being available to be taken 3 times for credit.

An enlarged program of swimming is the major change in the Department of Physical Education. A course will be offered for the nonswimmer as well as for the intermediate synchronized swimmer and for competitive swimmers. Other offerings in the department are a course in Exercise and Body Mechanics, and in a Survey of Contemporary Dance Forms.

Recent Poll Reveals Presidential Preference

by Margaret Moely

The recent poll taken in the dining hall by the newly established Young Republicans Club revealed that the only potential Republican presidential candidate preferred by Longwood students over Johnson is Henry Cabot Lodge. Out of the 683 students participating in the poll, 58 percent voted for Lodge and 42 percent for Johnson.

Barry Goldwater and Richard Nixon ran second, both receiving 36 percent of the ballots to Johnson's 64 percent. Scranton trails with 28 percent, Rockefeller with 22 percent and Margaret Chase Smith with 11 percent.

Forty percent of the voters were undecided or had no preference as to party choice, while 38 percent sided with the Democratic Party as opposed to 24 percent voting a Republican ticket.

Through this poll, the Young Republicans hoped to see the strength of each possible Republican candidate against President Johnson, the Democratic's probable choice. Although Longwood students chose Lodge as the Republican to beat Johnson, the members of the club have passed a resolution supporting the nomination of Senator Barry Goldwater for President of the United States.

They have also elected their officers for the coming year: Chairman, Bobbi Rice; Vice-Chairman, Nancy Mowrey; Corresponding secretary, Joanne He'd; Recording secretary, Kay Callison; Treasurer, Mary Carlson; and Representative at large to the Executive Board, Pauline Perrow.

The club's new advisor is Mr. Clyde Clements, English professor. At one time, Mr. Clements was the Chairman of a Young Republicans Club in the Pittsburgh area.

Language Hall For Majors In Cox Dorm

A new addition to the Foreign Language Department for the 1964-65 school term will be in the form of a foreign language hall on first floor Cox. The hall will be occupied by French and Spanish majors and exchange students. The French and Spanish will be at opposite ends of the hall. The language units will coordinate with the French and Spanish clubs and with the French and Spanish tables in the Dining Hall.

There have been twenty-nine people to sign up to live here, 17 sophomores, and 2 exchange students. Incoming freshmen who express a desire to live there will also be placed in the units.

Foreign Students Arrive

The two exchange students, who also speak English, will help in their respective departments as well as work toward a degree. Jacqueline Courvoisier, the French speaking student, is from Switzerland and has traveled in Germany. She is interested in children and teaching as well as social work.

Lucia Koppány, the Spanish speaking student, is from Buenos Aires, Argentina. In addition to Spanish, she speaks English, Hungarian, French and some German and Italian. She is interested in teaching modern foreign languages to children and young adults. Both students are expected to be at Longwood in time for the orientation period.

Rosalyn Roane, a present senior, has done much work in setting up room assignments, and the two club presidents, Bettina Bowles and Diane Upshur, have helped in arranging and calling meetings.

Therefore, in order to understand the literature of the South, one must understand the dilemma of the South as such and the problem of the Southern writer in his fascinating, if not somewhat mysterious, society. Perhaps through these essays one can come to some knowledge of what the South is all about and thus understand its literature.

Phi Beta Lambda Honors Girls

At the state Phi Beta Lambda convention, the college organization of Future Business Leaders of America, held in Roanoke recently, nine Longwood girls were represented. They were Jeannette Kafer, Jean Lunde, Bonnie Gaudin, Shirley Mann, Gayle Stevens, Barbara Sours, Molly Freeman, Linda Farrier, Joyce Stanley along with Dr. Landrum and Mr. Burnside.

Three of the girls came back from the convention with titles. Jean Lunde won Miss Future Business Executive for the state and was nominated to run for national vice-president of Phi Beta Lambda.

Barbara Sours was honored as Miss Future Business Teacher of the state. Joan and Barbara are both entitled to compete for national titles for Miss Future Business Executive and Teacher.

Joyce Stanley was elected state Phi Beta Lambda vice-president. All three girls will attend the national convention to be held in Washington, D. C. June 14-16.

Les Francophiles recently held its final meeting of the year. Sides of Paris and the Chateau de Laine were shown in the small auditorium. Immediately following this program all French students were invited to a picnic at Longwood Estate.

Melle, Pedrotti wishes to thank the past officers, congratulate the new ones, and express her appreciation to all the students who took an active part in the French club meetings of this past year. She especially wants to thank you all for the lovely silver engraved letter opener. As she said, "I was very moved by this gesture."

Persak Heads Circus, Plans For "Big Day"

AKG Announces Theme Of Upcoming '64 Circus

The annual Longwood circus weekend will be held in Jarman Auditorium on October 24 at 8:00 p.m.

"Animals, Klowns 'n Gowns" is the theme of this year's Circus.

Under the direction of General Chairman of Circus, Ann Persak, Alpha Kappa Gamma has really been working hard.

ANN PERSAK

Ann is a senior Biology major from Millbrook, New York. She has been working in Jarman since her freshman year.

As a freshman she was scenery chairman of Freshman Production. In her sophomore and Junior years she was in charge of sound for AKG which gave her a chance to see the way Circus was run. Also as a junior, Ann was treasurer of Longwood Players and a member of Alpha Psi Omega.

Since her freshman year, Ann has been active in the YWCA. She was on the Freshman Commission, and a member of the cabinet in her sophomore and junior years.

In her junior year, Ann was co-chairman of the H2O Club Water Pageant. This year, as president of the H2O Club, she will again be co-chairman. Ann is also a member of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority.

According to Ann, the duties of the General Chairman of Circus can be compiled under one word, "organization." She says that she has her hands into a little bit of everything, helping the freshmen, appointing duties, calling meetings, and generally making sure that everything runs smoothly.

Each member of AKG has been assigned a specific duty: Sandra Craig and Laraine McGhee are in charge of the skits; Melody Saunders, clowns and animals; Milly Woodward and Lurline Robertson, publicity. Also Wanda Old will direct the Circus Court, and Betty Shepard, the booths.

With Circus less than three weeks away, tension is mounting. With the sings in the Rotunda, the feverish scurry to complete each skit and still keep it a secret; the paint battles; the elections of the Ringmaster and the Animal Trainer; and the fierce, yet friendly competitions, Circus again has pervaded the campus.

Workshop Creates New Radio Program

"What ever happened to Listening at Longwood?" - This was the conclusion of the radio program "Casing the Campus" produced by the Radio Workshop of Longwood and WFLO at 3:30 every Wednesday. The program is written, directed and produced by the Workshop under the guidance of Dr. Lockwood.

Change of Format

The members of the Workshop have decided to change the format of the program. In the past, Listening at Longwood has been based on the interview or discussion format. However, the eight members of the Workshop are trying to increase the audience interest in the program. Therefore, the program is being based on what is interesting to us - the students.

Last week's program was the combined effort of all Workshop members to satirize and to inform the student body about items of interest which are not commonly known or are of specific interest. Some items included were the closed circuit TV in the Hiner building, the IBM system, the foreign language department, as well as announcements, and a few satirical items.

Open to Suggestions

If anyone or any group has suggestions or comments about the program to make it more worthwhile, the Workshop would appreciate your interest. See Dr. Lockwood or any member of the Radio Workshop.

Simonini Edits Institute Book On Literature

Southern Writers: Appraisals in Our Time, edited by Dr. R. C. Simonini, is one of the first publications of the new University Press of Virginia. The book has been published under the auspices of the Institute of Southern Culture.

Included in the book are light essays selected from previous publications of the Institute. Poe, Mary Johnston, Ellen Glasgow, James Branch Cabell, Faulkner, Civil War fiction, the writer in the Old South, and the youngest generation of Southern fiction writers are some of the topics included in the 191-page volume.

Students are urged to see this volume in the Longwood College Bookstore and to support the work of the Institute of Southern Culture.

Hall Swartz To Head Up Fresh Circus

A red and white circus by the Class of '68 has been placed into the hands of Judy Hall and Bernadette Swartz. Both girls are Freshman math majors here at Longwood. Judy is from Jarrett, Virginia, where she graduated from Jarrett High School. Bernadette is from Lynchburg, Virginia, and is a graduate of F. C. Glasco High School.

Committees have been appointed, and the following have been chosen co-chairmen of their respective committees: Secretary - Evelyn Flannigan and Mary Ann Smith; Make-up - Peggy Glaze and Mary Beth Patterson. Music will be handled by Gary Beckwith and Nancy Young; Dance - Patty Dolz and Andy Ray; Props - Suzanne Hall and Beverly Hardin; Costumes - Lisa Ander and Mary Ann Woerner. Lights will come under the direction of Linda James; Make-up - Linda James; Spiegels will be in charge of writing the script.

Thurmond In Farmville Speaks At Gathering

By Maria Grant

"I didn't leave the Democratic Party, the Democratic Party left me." So stated Senator Strom Thurmond of South Carolina before an overflow crowd in the Farmville Court House Monday morning.

Met by a band outside and a standing ovation inside, Senator Thurmond aimed a good part of his speech at the students - both college and high school - who made up three-fourths of the audience. There were several Goldwater banners, a few hats with Goldwater stickers, and loads of buttons. A member of the opposition (from Longwood) for a "Socialist dictatorship," contradicting the freedom which comes from the Constitution.

Senator Thurmond opened his talk by saying that since he has been in the Senate no greater man has served in that branch than Harry F. Byrd.

The topic then turned to the issue at hand when Thurmond said that the country faces a crisis. He said he has been a Democrat all his life, but now the "Democrats have abandoned their party."

The senator claimed the present government is heading for a "Socialist dictatorship," contradicting the freedom which comes from the Constitution.

Further, he continued, there is no longer a true system of checks and balances because all the power is concentrated in Washington. Senator Thurmond expressed his concern over the Federal government "injecting itself" into the lives of people on both local and state levels.

The South Carolina senator said he has served in the Senate with Barry Goldwater for ten years and he claimed Goldwater is "truthful, courageous," and "not trigger-happy." He is a man dedicated to the country and will protect the future of Americans.

"Don't let people say he (Goldwater) hasn't got a chance," Thurmond went on. And he briefly cited the great number of college-age voters whom he has talked to who are backing Goldwater because they know "there's something wrong" in the way things are run in the government today. He also said there was a lot of "grass-roots sentiment" throughout the country and stated there were predictions that Goldwater would carry Texas.

Senator Thurmond praised Goldwater's fiscal sense - the fact that he wants a balanced budget. He said the Demos have "led the parade" for "spend, spend, spend."

He then blamed the Democrats for "accommodating the Communists" - by wishing to disarm in hopes that the Communists will do the same; and by too much foreign aid to Communist and neutral countries. The senator said that we have to "stand for America" and "put our country first." In his words "you can't buy friendship with money."

From there he turned again to the "danger facing us" as a result of the Democratic party leading the country down the wrong road. That party is "dominated by big party bosses" and minority groups, he said, and "we must rise up" to help the country get back on the right road.

He lashed out at Johnson by saying "you can't run against a skunk without being hurt." Then he hit at Humphrey by listing a number of ADA proposals which he claimed Humphrey (and Johnson) greatly supported, but which Goldwater and Miller both greatly opposed.

Thurmond said there is a necessity for more character in government. He also stated there was no excuse for lying or deception in the Federal government.

In closing, Senator Thurmond expressed the fact that this may be the "last opportunity to vote for a conservative."

Shakespearian Drama Opens Players, Jongleurs Season

This being the 400th anniversary of Shakespearian drama, the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs will present as their first production "Romeo and Juliet." The play will run the 5th, 6th and 7th of November.

In the recent casting, the lead roles of Romeo and Juliet were given to Larry Garst and Mary Ann Chinn. Supporting them will be Gerry Rusland in the dual roles of Escalus and the Apothecary.

Also playing dual roles, we have John Marshall as Paris and Gregory, John Hult as Friar John and Abraham, Ed Zimmerman as Balthasar and Mercutio.

John Young portrays Montague, J. F. Hester - Capulet, Tom Washie - Peter, and Bill Wise - Nurse. The good, but incapable Friar Laurence is portrayed by John Marshall. Jones, Joe Whitted takes on the role of Tybalt and Dave Relyea portrays Romeo's good friend Benvolio. Mr. Clyde Clements will play the witty, if sometimes troublesome, Mercutio.

Longwood students in the play are Gregory Fox - Lady Mon-tagne, Shirley Timberlake-Lady Capulet, and Mildred Gwainey as the Nurse.

The first, second and third watch are acted by Linda Butler, Hortense Mitchell, and Patricia Stryker, Champe Arendall and Ruby Mae Cruseberry play the first and second servant, and Barbara Agee and Susanna Crisp have the roles of first and second citizen.

THE BALCONY GOES UP

Crews begin work on technical end of season's first play, "Romeo and Juliet." The girls above are hard at work on what promises to be one of the most elaborate sets ever used in Jarman.

Not A Thing To Say!

Another school year has started, another first issue of the Rotunda has come out, and once again we, of the editorial staff, feel the necessity of passing on a few words of wisdom to the incoming class. We have collected quite a treasure chest of verbal gems to aid the "green" frosh in her first months of adjustment. But when the time comes for us to transfer these into writing, we meet a stumbling block.

What does a freshman need to know? Should we remind her that among the 1001 activities she is pressured to join in, that she will probably only have time for 999? Perhaps we should reassure her that although she may now feel as if she were a nonentity amid all the rush and confusion of a new year, she is a very special and important part of this college.

Maybe we should emphasize the importance of her intellectual growth and maturing process while at Longwood. Then, too, there are all the time-honored traditions of our campus.

In the end we decided to forget all our sage advice and trust in the individuals' ability to determine for herself just what she wants out of her college life.

We came to the conclusion that experience is the best learning method. Mistakes will be made, but from them, we can grow.

Finding that we have nothing to say, we can only add our sincere welcome to the many that have already been passed along. Good luck to the class of '68!

Time To Grow Up

Way back then— you know, way back when women were protected much more so than today — a Longwood, excuse me, a Farmville State Teachers College lady, could get campused for going to a movie on Sunday. Oh yes, and there were unfortunate girls who received warnings for eating downtown on Saturday while waiting for a bus. And of course one would not even think of dating in the "rec".

Such rules have obviously been outmoded. Why? Simply because it is 1964, not early 1900. The freedom a Longwood girl possesses today is distinctly a product of the changing times.

Old Alma Mater has matured quite a bit since its birth in 1884, but it seems to have stopped growing upon reaching adolescence. After 80 years of experience its about time Longwood grew up and reached adulthood. This can happen only when the college takes on an atmosphere of adulthood. And this can happen only when administration and faculty express their confidence in the students themselves — you know, the students who have just been through kindergarten, grade school, and high school. They are supposedly ready to accept more responsibility, take on more studies, and show more mature behavior.

Naturally this is not always the case. But if rarely given an opportunity to show responsibility, one cannot exactly be called irresponsible.

If the collegiate atmosphere rarely "loosens its reins," one cannot really show mature behavior.

The cut system will perhaps prove to be the turning point in Longwood's growing process. And the entire responsibility of an adult atmosphere, after a free-rein system is in operation, will be on the shoulders, (or better, in the hands of) we, the students.

Our college will be no better than what we make it.

Maria Grant

Letters To Editor

Train Issue Attracts Response, Shirk Urges Student Comments

Editor's note:

This letter is being printed from the Mace and Crown, the Old Dominion college paper, because it was felt to be a matter of concern to a large portion of the Longwood students.

Editor, Mace and Crown:

In my recent endeavors in fighting Norfolk and Western Railroad from terminating their passenger trains 25 and 26, the Powhatan Arrow, in Petersburg rather than Norfolk, I learned that many people did not know of the railroad's intentions to do this.

Therefore, I would like to acquaint Old Dominion students of the railroad's intentions so that they may make a protest by writing the State Corporation Commission, Box 1197, Richmond, Virginia.

If the State Corporation Commission grants the railroad permission to discontinue its service, there will be no more fast service to points west. Tidewater college students who go to western colleges will be deprived of their transportation, and future students who wish to come to our college from the west will be at a loss for transportation.

Thus, the area will be a step closer to the past rather than the future. When we speak of a progressive future for Norfolk and Tidewater, we should automatically think of more and better means of transportation rather than fewer means.

Norfolk and Western says that they want to discontinue the mediocre service because they are losing money. This is not so. I rode the N&W trains in August when there were so many passengers that they had to take seats in the rest rooms, because there was no more available coach space.

Even if there were no passengers, it would be partly the railroad's fault. There is no dining service on the "Arrow" between Norfolk and Roanoke; and furthermore, when the east-bound train arrives in Norfolk at 1:30 a.m., the station is closed. Thus strangers have no way to phone for a cab, and there is a danger of that stranger being stranded in the marshy area for the night.

What a fine way to welcome guests to Tidewater! However, in spite of this inconvenience, we need the trains and the railroad can afford to run them. The company would certainly make more money off passengers in Norfolk than they would by cutting the line in Petersburg. In addition, whatever gains the N&W could convince themselves they would have, it would not be great enough to balance the loss that the people of Norfolk would suffer.

I have been advised by members of the State legislature that the only way to win our case is for people to either write to or go to Richmond on Oct. 19. If anybody would like further information concerning methods of transportation to Richmond, please contact me at 1200 Spotswood Ave., Norfolk, or call me at 622-6170.

Wualch Prints 'Jade Pagoda' By Sprague

Dr. Rosemary Sprague of the English Department has recently published her eighth historical novel, entitled The Jade Pagoda. The book, published by Henry Wualch, Inc., New York, concerns itself with the East India trade in Salem, Massachusetts, at the end of the 18th Century.

Like many of her other novels, The Jade Pagoda is a novel written for young adults. Adolescent literature has long been one of Dr. Sprague's favorite fields.

Dr. Sprague is also awaiting the release of an edition of the poetry of Robert Browning, which she has edited. It will be released later this month.

Frosh Hopes Rattling Stays For Future

Dear Editor:

I would like to express my opinion on the invaluable experience of rattling. I feel that the friends I made through it will be precious to me throughout my years at Longwood. I not only became acquainted with my fellow classmates and those of my sister class, but I feel very close to a few of the Top Rate, as well as numerous other sophomores.

The only difficulty I encountered was in trying to keep a straight face, and my only sadness came when rattling had come to an end.

I know that the memories of rattling and "Little Rat Court" will be cherished ones, and in the days to come I will smile and "complain" about when I was a rat.

I now feel a part of Longwood. The purpose of rattling stated in the Rat Bible is not a farce, and I sincerely hope that this tradition remains here so that the freshmen of the future will be able to undergo this truly enjoyable event.

Sincerely,
Charli McCoy

Englishman Accepts Post At Longwood

By Jo Ann Held

The London Times carried a small article about Longwood College last year. The article concerned itself with the availability of a position at the college as assistant librarian. In answer to our call, Mr. Michael Rees came from London, England, to Farmville, USA, last year.

Besides holding a degree in the Classics from King's College of the University of London, Mr. Rees received his librarianship from Northwest Polytechnic.

When questioned about Europeans versus American college girls, Mr. Rees' reply was, "The girls seem young but then everyone in America looks young. You put much more emphasis on youth than the English."

Comments on Politics

"Politics," he went on, "are incomprehensible! In England there are the Socialists and the Conservatives. The Socialists are for nationalism. The Conservatives are in favor of private enterprise. Here there is such a thin line."

MICHAEL REES
Assistant Librarian

On the subject of college life, Mr. Rees commented that, "here it is relaxed." In the schools that Mr. Rees has attended the students are nonresidents. They know their professors only from the class generally, and their relationship to professors is more formal.

Difference in Degrees

"Also, in England, degrees are mainly from universities and they are in fewer subjects. In preparation for teaching, for example, one would take only the subjects one would be teaching. He would then obtain a certificate after three years." In other words, there is no formal degree offered for prospective teachers, unless he gets a bachelor's degree in liberal arts and then does postgraduate work in education for a certificate.

As it stands now, Mr. Rees is under contract to us for one year, but it is possible that his stay at Longwood may be extended.

The students of the college expect their welcome to Mr. Rees and hope that his year with us will be pleasant and that he will be able to learn much about our country.

Wireless System At Longwood First In U. S.

A "Wireless Shorthand Learning System" has been installed here in the Business Education Department. Longwood College is the first college in the United States to install such a system. This system is unique due to the fact that it is wireless, without complications of installation, equipment, operation, or tape handling.

A battery powered unit with three listening channels is used by each student. It permits students to be taking dictation at three different speeds. Some students may be slower than others and therefore, may use the slow speed. However, for the excellent shorthand student, the faster speed is provided.

These units are lightweight but very rugged and deliver flawless sound quality and clarity. Easily passed out like a book, these systems may also be used in any room.

Finger tip operation gives the teacher immediate access to any or all of the three sending channels. There are sixty-six programs available at the twist of a dial without changing tape. Besides speaking over any of the three channels, the teacher can play material of her own creation from the audio notebooks, or other materials from other audio sources, such as a tape recorder or a record player.

By plugging into student units as she walks about the room checking their work, the teacher can also speak with individual students. The greatest aspect of this program is that the students learn much faster in the electronics classroom.

The rooms are open for any visitors to see the equipment and how it operates. If anyone would like to visit the rooms, contact Mr. O. J. Burnside.

Thomas Heads Public Relations

A new director of public relations and development has been named for Longwood College. He is F. Edgar Thomas, Jr. Mr. Thomas, who has assumed his new position, succeeds John E. Allen who resigned the post in order to resume full-time graduate studies leading to the doctorate degree at the University of Utah.

For 10 years Mr. Thomas served as assistant secretary of the Alumni Association of the University of North Carolina. This experience has helped prepare him for his new position at Longwood College.

In 1952 Mr. Thomas was appointed general manager of The Lost Colony, Paul Green's famous outdoor drama. In this position he directed the management and promotion of the drama during a highly successful twenty-fifth anniversary season.

A 1937 graduate of the University of North Carolina, Mr. Thomas received an A. B. degree in Education. He taught American History and other social studies in the high schools of Greensboro.

Blue 'n Whites Crush Pollyannas For First-Game Win

Top Seniors In Athletics Receive College Blazers

At the Athletic Association Banquet concluding the demonstration, eight seniors were awarded blue and white blazers. This year's recipients were Melody Saunders - white blazer, Sarah Jane Lynch - blue, Judy Wilson - white, Lurline Robertson - white, Henrietta Gilliam - blue, Carrie Wilson - white, and Earlene Lang - white.

The blazer, a symbol of outstanding participation and sportsmanship in athletic events at Longwood, the blazer colors are differentiated by the number of points accumulated by each girl.

Points are awarded accordingly:

- One point for a class squad
  - One for a color squad
  - Two for a class and a color team
  - Two for a varsity squad
  - Three for a varsity team
- Basketball, hockey, softball, and volleyball are class sports, whereas archery and swimming are color sports. Individuals are credited with one point for being a contestant, one point for

Athletics Boosted By A A Demonstrations

By Rusty Stephenson

As the month of September drew to a close the Athletic Association Council presented its annual A.A. Demonstration for the freshmen and transfer students.

The wheels started turning with the introduction of the Council's officers riding bicycles. The officers are President, Sarah Jane Lynch; Vice-President, Henrietta Gilliam; Secretary, Barbara Ragland; Treasurer, Bobbie Allen; Historian, Karen Ruder; and sponsor, Miss Rebecca Brockenbrough.

The association offers a complete intramural program open to all students in hockey, basketball, volleyball, tennis, archery, swimming, golf, and softball. A varsity program is maintained in hockey, basketball, tennis and archery.

The council also provides recreational activities such as bicycling, bowling, and ping-pong for the students' use the year round.

The demonstration director, Betty Wright, gave a short speech about the council and the various activities under its sponsorship.

The center of attention shifted to the gym floor where various students demonstrated their athletic prowess in volleyball, basketball, and golf. After the as-runner-up, and two points for a winner.

Members of the A.A. Council receive points for their services to the council. An officer on the council earns three points; managers earn three points; social, publicity, recreation, and ways and means committees all receive two points.

Simonini Speaks On Linguistics At Meeting

Dr. R. C. Simonini will speak at the meeting of the District G Association of Teachers of English. It will be held at Madison College on October 10.

His topic for discussion is entitled "Applied Linguistics in the Classroom." In this talk Dr. Simonini plans to illustrate how structural linguistics can be used to solve certain practical purposes of grammar that often occur in public school teaching.

sembled students had viewed fifteen minutes of fun and games. Orchestras presented a modern dance interpretation of three movement patterns within one rhythm.

Next on the agenda was the big move to the swimming pool where the H2O Club presented various swimming stunts and the Corkettes demonstrated a synchronized swimming routine. Kathy Kolva, exhibiting beautiful form, demonstrated the fiber point of diving.

After the swimming exhibitions the demonstration shifted to the athletic field where the spectators were given a bird's-eye view of wicket at its best. Three members of the varsity archery team showed what could be accomplished in archery with a lot of natural ability, three years of experience, and many hours of practice.

The hockey team, many of whom were still nursing banged shins and pulled muscles from a hockey camp, demonstrated what hockey looks like when everybody plays their own position. The tennis team, not to be denied, gave a commendable performance in the art of singles and doubles tennis.

The climax of the afternoon's activities was a picnic - minus ants, sunshine, and trees - which was held in the dining hall.

Around The Campi

Talk about irony—a senator rates class cuts when he hits town; the Attorney General doesn't.

Remember when you were a kid and wanted to be a real live cow? A few lucky LC students have succeeded. Those rides to the golf course via the garbage truck are just like a real western round-up.

Charlie Hop wrote that he's wearing his green tie for the whole month of October.

A recent green and red rumble become one of the most publicized point battles in Longwood history (next to the ones that used to take place between the classes of '64 and '65). It seems the house mothers in Cunningham conducted an all-out girl-hunt for the culprits. Amazingly enough though, not one person in the three dorms seemed to be in the vicinity of the crime. Hmmm...

Sixteen Longwood Girls Attend Hockey Camp

As the summer drew to a close and everyone was paying their respects to the beach, a group of sixteen Longwood girls went to the Pocono Mountains in Pennsylvania for a week at the National Field Hockey Conference. This makes the fifteenth year that Longwood has been represented at this conference.

The conference is really a camp, staffed by various English and American coaches and directed by "The Grand Old Lady" of field hockey, in the United States, Miss Constance Applebee.

Girls from LC who attended were Earlene Lang and Judy Wilson, our senior "mothers"; Nevis Born, Carolyn Cline, Phyllis Collins, Helena Hall, Phyllis Lasley, Jane Eddy and Karen Ruder.

Others who went were Rusty Stephenson, Connie Gailan, Ruth Spradlin, Connie Gailan, Frances Stewart, Dianne Davis and Pat Lyddane.

The activities at camp consisted of stick-work sessions, coached games, and match games during the day. "Chalk talks" were held at night. For the match games the Longwood teams played the other collegiate squads. Of special interest were the two games played against the "camp team," which consisted of the coaches and selected members of the college teams.

Although the games Longwood played ended in 3-0 and 1-0 defeats, the home team played exceptionally well.

At the end of a hectic week, the group packed their dirty clothes, said farewell to new friends, and with a variety of sore muscles took leave of Mr. Pocono.

Hockey camp made quite an impression on the sixteen Longwood representatives and it was felt that Longwood left a good impression behind. In the words of Miss Applebee: "I wish that every American girl had a chance to attend Longwood."

SAI Sponsors Annual Trips To Mesque

This year, as in the past, Sigma Alpha Iota will again be sponsoring trips to Richmond to various musical events. Notices of these events will be posted in the smoker and announced in the dining hall. All students are invited. Your dates are also welcome, provided you are responsible for their conduct.

The cost of these trips will vary according to the event. One dollar will be included to help pay the expenses of transportation on the Longwood bus. This is not a money-making project, but a cultural service to the student body.

The events which are scheduled for this year are:

Oct. 13, Tuesday evening, The Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy Conducting.

Nov. 16, Monday evening, Puccini's "La Bohème," Boris Goldovsky's Production.

Feb. 18, Monday evening, Donizetti's "Don Pasquale," Boris Goldovsky's Production.

Mar. 22, Monday evening, Young Uk Kim, Violinist, Peter Serkin, Pianist, Joint Recital.

April 6, Tuesday evening, Ballet Folklórico de Mexico, Company of 74 Dancers, Singers and Musicians, Directed and Choreographed by Amelia Hernandez.

The St. Louis Cardinals captured the National League pennant after beating the New York Mets 11-5. They will face the Yankees in a vie for the World Series Championship.

Hockey Team Roms To Landslide Victory

by Sharon Williams

Longwood's varsity hockey team started their season on September 26 with a landslide victory of 6-0 over Richmond's Pollyannas.

Although the semi-pro Pollyannas are a newly organized private club, they had only ten players instead of the regulation eleven. However, with a strong defense on the part of the whole team, they managed to hold Longwood to one goal in the first half.

Time was the test and the last half of the game was just the same. Longwood had an amazingly strong bench this year and they will find it to be a very valuable factor in tight games. Observations from the first game show that they will be able to rely on the protection of goalies Pat Lyddane and Cheryl Howe. In the vital and fast position of wing are the capable Lurline Robertson, Connie Gailan, Peggy Wilkins, Ruth Limerick, and Helena Hall.

Having played only one game, there is a lot to be said about the individual players. Only time in future games will tell.

Chosen for this year's blue and white team were: Nevis Born, Pat Brown, Carolyn Cline, Phyllis Collins, Dianne Davis, Jayne Eddy, Gerry Edwards, Connie Gailan, Helena Hall, Jean Hendricks, Cheryl Howe, Earlene Lang, and Phyllis Lasley.

Other members of the team include Nancy Moorefield, Ruth Limerick, Liz Parker, Barbara Raperud, Lurline Robertson, Pat Lyddane, Glinny Morton, Nancy Maxey, Frances Stewart, Peggy Wilkins, Karen Ruder, Connie Spradlin, Rusty Stephenson, and Judy Wilson.

Lucila Koppany and Jaqueline Convoifer are exchange students who are studying at Longwood under a scholarship program for one year. Their homes are Argentina and Switzerland, and this is their first trip to the U.S. Both arrived in August, and were admitted into Longwood with the status of Juniors. Jaqueline eventually plans to teach, and Lucila will probably continue her studies at the University of Buenos Aires.

Top Rats Of '67 Cap Frosh Of '68

At seven o'clock on the evening of September 18, eighteen red and white sixty-eighers received the highest honor that can be bestowed upon freshman rats—they were capped "Top Rats" and "Orchids to You" for the class of 1968.

The sheroed sophomore Top Rats performed their traditional duty at the annual Big Rat Court. This was the climax of ratting.

Hundreds of fellow freshmen and upper classmen watched as Susan Siz, Head Top Rat, put the coveted red cap on the head of Margaret Bridges.

Along with Margaret was Barbara Hooper. Barbara received the second highest position in the top rat ranks—that of Assistant Head Top Rat.

Other Top Rats were Justine Wilkins, Beverly MacFarlane, Myra Boone, Mary Ann Chinn, Carol Blythe, Linda Bayton, Cella Carter, Marian Bell, Pam Stear, and Betty Copley.

Orchids to You were Nancy Kenberry, Annie Ray, Jenny Daughtrey, Susan Bins, Pam Spigle, and Phala Leggett.

Margaret Bridges is an English major and hails from Richmond. Also from Richmond are Justine Wilkins, also an English major, Beverly MacFarlane, a Spanish major, Marian Bell, a pre-pharmacy student, Susan Bins, a business education ma-or, and Pam Spigle, a French major.

Barbara Hooper, an elementary education major, and Pam Stear, an English major, are both from Arlington.

A Roanoke, Nancy Kenberry is majoring in medical technology. Myra Boone, from nearby Salem, is majoring in English. Mary Ann Chinn, from Alexandria, is an English major, and an elementary major from Lynnhaven is Carol Blythe. Betty Copley is also an elementary major. She is from South Hill. From the eastern side of Virginia come Linda Bayton, an English major from Portsmouth, Annie Ray, a health and physical education major from Newport News, and Jenny Daughtrey from Chesapeake.

Cella Carter is a day student who lives here in Farmville. She is an elementary education major. Phala Leggett is from Wayside and is majoring in music education.

The new Top Rats have made no plans for the future. Their activities will depend on the results of the recent evaluation that was made on ratting.

On September 29, the new Top Rats gave the old Top Rats a party in Tabl Rec. At this time the sophomore Top Rats were given charms as mementos from the entire freshman class.

Phi Beta Lambda Group Achieves Top Positions At National Convention

Longwood's Gamma Epsilon chapter of Phi Beta Lambda, the national business fraternity, has achieved recognition on the state and national level. This fact was quite evident at the national convention which was held June 14 through 18 at the Sheridan Park Hotel in Washington, D.C.

Our three representatives were Jean Lund, Joyce Stanley, and Barbara Sours.

Jean Lund, who is President of the Gamma Epsilon chapter here at Longwood, was successful in her bid for office. She was elected national vice-president of Phi Beta Lambda and placed second in the competition for Miss Future Business Executive of America.

Joyce Stanley, who is state vice-president, proved to be a very able campaign manager and strategist.

Barbara Sours, who is a 1964 graduate of Longwood, placed in the top eight of the nation in the selection of Miss Future Business Teacher of America.

The convention, which also played host to the Future Business Leaders of America, was full of political overtones. Posters, campaign buttons, and other paraphernalia were displayed during the three day period. The usual events that were held lent much to the feeling of friendliness and co-operation which is essential but sometimes non-existent in situations of this type.

Longwood has every reason to be proud of these girls, who after intensive screening and testing procedures, proved to be leaders in their field.

LC To Offer NT Exams For Students

The National Teacher Examinations, a testing program for prospective teachers offered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given at Longwood this session on March 20th.

Value of Scores
Scores on the examinations are used by many large school districts for employment of new teachers and by several states for certification or licensing of teachers. The tests will also be offered on three other dates during the year at other centers in the area.

Any interested students may obtain further information about the examinations from the Department of Education.

FROM THE BOARD

The Legislative Board would like to extend a warm and hearty welcome to the student body and especially to the Class of 1968! We are looking forward to a busy and exciting year; this can be accomplished only through the support and cooperation of the student body. You, as members of the Student Government Association, may take an active part in Longwood affairs by expressing your opinions through your class representatives.

The following are some revisions and additions in rules which the student body should be aware of. The page numbers are found in the 1964-65 Handbook.

Page 35; By-Laws; 1. Activities Committee (1) It will consist of a Chairman and a Vice-Chairman who are appointed by the Legislative Board. There will also be two (2) representatives from each class to be elected by the Legislative Board and the newly appointed Activities Chairman and Vice chairman. All members of the Activities Committee will take office on April 15.

An Evaluations Committee has also been organized "to evaluate all student activities outside the curriculum." This student-faculty committee "shall have the power to acknowledge or, after a probational term of one year, disband all student clubs, societies, associations, and societies (honorary or otherwise) upon the approval of the President of Longwood College." Before a major decision is made, however, a poll will be taken from the administration and the student body and results tallied on a percentage basis.

A Student Government Suggestion Box has been placed in the Smoker outside the dining hall. We urge you to give us your suggestions, criticisms and ideas so that we may better serve the students and the college. We would like to invite all students who are interested to attend some of the regular meetings of the Legislative Board. These meetings are held in the Student Government Room on Wednesdays at 7:00 and are open to the student body — so bring your suggestions and ideas with you. See you there!

Mrs. Lankford explains various pieces of the Pakistani art exhibit to interested students. The exhibit can be seen on the ground floor of the library. The works are part of a collection purchased by Dr. and Mrs. Lankford during their recent stay in Pakistan.

Pakistani Art Exhibit Represents Floral Motif

"The functions of art in culture are (1) to maintain the concepts of reality, (2) to maintain the culture, its organization and role, and (3) to enhance the appearance of objects." With this statement in mind, one can come to an appreciation of Pakistani art, the current exhibit in the Library.

One of the interesting characteristics of the exhibit is the continuity of certain motifs throughout most of the articles on display. For instance, one is conscious of the floral motif, which renders various aspects of nature, such as fertility and productivity in Nature. Although the floral design is maintained, the artist always gives variations of that design.

Schlegel Attends Literary Meet In Switzerland

Mrs. Dorothy B. Schlegel, a professor in the Longwood English department, attended the International Comparative Literature Association held in Fribourg, Switzerland, August 31 through September 5.

Mrs. Schlegel has done extensive research on the Earl of Shaftsbury, and at this meeting she read a paper pointing out Shaftsbury's use of hermetic symbolism. For this paper she based her ideas on a Shaftsbury manuscript found in the public records office in London.

In reading this manuscript, Mrs. Schlegel saw serenity throughout it, as in the instructions to the engraver concerning the pictures to be used in the second edition of The Characteristics. A careful study of these pictures show that they would have a great meaning to a Mason. She concluded that Shaftsbury might have belonged to some sort of proto-masonic organizations or the Rosacrucians.

Mrs. Schlegel also feels that a study of the types and symbols used could possibly solve many literary problems.

Longwood Prepares For 'Animals, Klowns, 'n Gowns'

New Cut System Brings Confusion In Wake

Editor's Note: In an effort to clear the general confusion about the new cut system, the Rotunda is printing the following statement from the office of the Dean. The new system of cuts was announced last Tuesday, following a meeting of the attendance committee.

The college will no longer have a uniform system of cuts. The loss incurred by the student for absence from class will be given in advance by either the instructor or by the Dean. This applies to absences on days prior to and after vacations scheduled in the college catalogue. The student assumes full responsibility for the loss she incurs because of absence. An instructor may require an explanation of any or all absences from his class. He will judge the validity of these explanations and will decide whether or not they justify permission for the student to make up the work missed.

The only exceptions to the above are the cases: (1) of a student absent because of illness or (2) because of participation in a college activity approved by the Dean. Instructors are asked uniformly to permit students to

Alumnae Leaders Hold Annual Meet To Discuss Plans

The alumnae leaders of Longwood College recently met for the Alumnae Association's annual fall leadership council.

Led by Mrs. Phillip Roberts, of Staunton, president of the college's national association of alumnae, the group of some 50 officers, directors, committee chairmen, and college officials held a number of business sessions. Plans for local alumnae chapters were discussed, along with a consideration of this year's alumnae fund appeal.

Among the association's national officers and board members who attended this fall meeting were Miss Nell Copley, second vice-president; Miss Dorothy Hudson, director; Miss Tucker Winn, director; Mrs. Lindsey Smith, Alumnae House Committee chairman; and Mrs. C. L. Hainsworth, Snack Bar Committee chairman.

Becky White has been selected from the class of '67 to crack the whip as animal trainer for the 1964 Circus — "Animals, Klowns, 'n Gowns."

'Player' Crew Chiefs Begin Work On Technical End Of Production

Crew chiefs have been assigned for the upcoming production of William Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. The play is a cooperative effort of the Longwood Players and Hampden — Sydney

Jongleurs. Romeo and Juliet was selected in connection with the 400th anniversary of Shakespeare's death and will run through November 5, 6 and 7. The play, under the direction of Mr. David Wiley, will be held in Jarman Auditorium and will begin at 8:00 p.m. sharp all three nights.

In charge of the scenery, which will make up one of the most elaborate sets used thus far in Jarman, will be Pat Dugger. The lighting will be designed by Dr. Patton Lockwood with Lief Erickson working as crew chief under him.

Jenny Starkey is heading up the costume crew and Linda Overby will be in charge of make-up. Publicity for the play is being handled by Nancy Wolz. Properties are being collected under the direction of crew chief Judy Hendrick. Sound will be taken care of by Ellen Miller.

Dianne Bieger will be acting as advisor and supervisor to all the crews for the first time in her new position as technical director. Working closely with Mr. Wiley on the production will be the assistant director, Judy Crum.

Macon Society Holds Assembly

The Nathaniel Macon Society has two very important events coming up in the near future. The first is a political assembly, and the second is a mock election.

The assembly, which is scheduled for October 29, will feature J. Vaughan Gary, a former Democratic member of the House of Representatives, and Jack Conner, the chairman of the state Republican party. The two speakers will give short talks on their respective party's presidential candidate and platform. A social hour will follow at which time students may talk with the visitors.

On October 27 a mock election will be conducted. The society plans to make this election as much like the real thing as possible. The dormitories will be divided into precincts and the results of the election will be announced.

White Cracks Whip For '64 AKG Circus

Rebecca Clark White has been named Animal Trainer for the 1964 Alpha Kappa Gamma Circus. She is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. F. White and is a graduate of Thomas Jefferson High School in Richmond. Becky said that when she learned she was to be Animal Trainer this year, she was just too stunned for words. After the shock had left her, Becky said that she went around smiling all the time and feared she might reveal her secret.

Becky, a member of the green and white class of '67, has been quite active in campus life. In Circus last year Becky was a clown, but also served on the Freshman script committee. Her athletic inclinations have placed Becky on the varsity hockey team last year, as class tennis manager this year, and on the class hockey team this year. Her acting ability led to parts in last year's Y.W.C.A. Christmas pageant as well as the Freshman Production, "Folled Again." Becky is also a member of Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority. Becky is on the Wesley Foundation Council, of which she was also a member last year. Also last year she was the State President of the Methodist Youth Fellowship.

Frosh Elect Class Sponsor

On October 1, the Freshman Class met in Jarman and elected as their class sponsor Mr. O. J. Byrnside. Mr. Byrnside, a professor in the business department, came to Longwood last year from Danville, Virginia, where he taught vocational office training and coached football and basketball at George Washington High School.

A native of Athens, West Virginia, Mr. Byrnside received his B. S. degree from Concord College in Athens and later went to V. P. I. where he obtained his M. S. degree. He taught at V. P. I. for one year in a graduate assistantship program. He also taught in Charleston, West Virginia at the Kanawha County High School. Mr. Byrnside, just barely missing the Korean War, spent three years in the U. S. Marine Corps.

At Longwood, Mr. Byrnside teaches advanced typing and shorthand, and now he is busily working as the director of the data processing center which is being installed.

Mr. Byrnside is married and has two daughters, one eight years old and the other three years old. His hobbies include football, basketball, hunting, and Becky was commended by Chi last year at the burning of Chi and was also chosen to represent the Sophomore class on Judicial Board for this year.

Becky is studying here at Longwood to become a teacher. She is majoring in Elementary Education and Sociology, and it is her desire to go on to graduate school after a few years' teaching experience.

Political Change Subject Of Talk For Forum

The Longwood Forum will bring a guest speaker to the campus on October 19. The meeting will be held in the Student Lounge at 4.

The speaker is Dr. G. W. Spicer of the University of Virginia. Dr. Spicer is an authority on political parties and state and local governments. He will talk on the "possibilities of change in Virginia and Southern politics."

Dr. Spicer is the former President of the Southern Political Science Association and a member of the governing board of the American Political Science Association. He is one of the six men in the United States who have the greatest understanding of American Constitutional law and has written several books on the subject. His latest effort in the literary field is The Supreme Court and the Fundamental Freedoms.

Being a native of Virginia, Dr. Spicer graduated from Randolph-Macon College and received his doctorate from Johns Hopkins. For the past twenty-five years, Dr. Spicer has been a professor at the University of Virginia; however, during that time he has been a resident scholar at Harvard, Princeton, the University of Chicago, and many other schools throughout the country.

Elections, both national and the mock elections sponsored by Nathaniel Macon Society, are coming up soon. Keep abreast of the issues and vote intelligently.

Former H-SC President Speaks At Annual Fall Convocation

Longwood College's annual fall convocation was recently held in Jarman Hall. Featuring a faculty procession in academic regalia, the assembly was the first get-together of all faculty members and students in the new session.

The speaker for the occasion was Dr. Joseph C. Robert, former president of Hampden-Sydney College and currently professor of history at the University of Richmond.

Dr. Robert praised the college's 125-year record of educational leadership and suggested to a capacity audience of students and faculty that a "moral philosophy" is needed as individuals adapt to change and teachers discharge their compelling responsibilities.

The students were challenged to look for the moral values in every situation, just as great educators of the past developed a moral philosophy by which to live and teach.

Reviewing Longwood's pioneering role in the education of Virginia women, beginning with the founding of the Farmville Female Academy in 1839, Dr. Robert noted that the poor preparation of school teachers eventually caused the college to become a state teacher-training institution in 1884.

Taking note of the current observation in Virginia of "Teacher's Week," Dr. Robert spoke directly to future teachers in the audience when he declared, "Your responsibilities here are peculiarly compelling for you inherit a noble concept from your State and a grand tradition from the vocation which I hope is beckoning you. In teacherhood you must join responsibility with reverential pity for ignorant mankind. You are the hands of the great Potter as he moulds this clay we call youth."

Commenting on the power of education, Dr. Robert said, "Individuals can break through the pattern of social toughness and resistance to change. Mankind is not in the grip of inhuman, impersonal forces. Strong men are raised up. And particularly the genius of Virginia is a symphony of compassion and resilience and responsibility, of love and of strength, of perception, of knowing and boldness in acting. Witness the great men of the past. With the Virginia formula, change."

The Rev. J. Hoge Smith, Jr., pastor of Farmville Presbyterian Church, rendered the invocation, following which the Longwood College choir, directed by Dr. John W. Molnar, sang Tschann's "Let Thy Holy Presence."

ishing for bass. Mr. Byrnside enjoys working with students and feels honored on being chosen the Freshman Class sponsor. He points out this is the largest freshman class in the history of Longwood, however size is not the important thing; he and the freshmen plan to make it the best. As sponsor Mr. Byrnside says that this position means he is willing "to go to bat for the Freshman Class."

Blue 'n Whites Clobber Two Scoreless Opponents, Madison Hands Longwood First Seasonal Loss

FROM THE BOARD

The Legislative Board is looking into the ideas and suggestions listed below which were discussed at our meeting:

The possibility of obtaining a non-calorie drink machine in one of the Cummings.

A new system of assembly attendance requirements — One suggestion was to have attendance based on the honor system, making failure to attend an Honor Code offense. Another possibility might be to keep the system as it stands now but giving a specified number of days' campus for not attending assemblies.

Identification Cards and car stickers — The car stickers would be for the identification of student cars on campus. This would be helpful to the night watchmen in identifying any "strange" automobiles parked near the dormitories. The purpose of the ID cards could merely show that a girl is a student of Longwood College or they could possibly have a more connotative value.

The Intramural Council of Hampden-Sydney College, their advisor, and President of the Hampden-Sydney body will meet this week with the executive councils of the Legislative and Judicial Boards and the Dean of Longwood to discuss Hampden-Sydney and Longwood student government rules which are of a mutual concern. This meeting will consist of a discussion on drinking, proper behavior, proper attire, etc.

A question concerning the use of "riding" as a destination for day trips came before the Judicial Board. A day trip, as defined in the Student Handbook, is "any destination beyond a 15-mile radius which necessitates signing out on an in-and-out card." Laureine McGhee, who was representing the Judicial Board at our meeting, said they had concluded that it is permissible to sign-out for "riding" as a destination.

Rachael Gentry, Day Student Representative to the Legislative Board, has suggested that the announcements made in the Dining Hall that would possibly affect a day student be posted on their bulletin board. These girls are very interested in participating in activities on campus, and posting these notices keeps them informed of times, dates, etc.

Assembly Schedule—October and November

October 13—Circus (AKG)
October 20—Nathaniel Macon
October 27—Young Republicans
November 3—Open
November 10—Spiritual Speaker (YWCA)
November 17—Longwood Forum
November 24—Thanksgiving Assembly (YWCA)

Remember to take advantage of the Student Government Suggestion Box!

Johnson, Goldwater

(tion.) We have consistently sided with our enemies against our allies and have been most liberal in lending aid to countries which declare themselves "neutral" or slightly pro-communist. Pro-western countries have often found difficulty in even getting diplomatic recognition from the U. S. State Department, compare the communist coup in Zanzibar with the anti-communist coup in the Dominican Republic. Goldwater would offer the aid and support of the U. S. to those who wish to work with us in reversing the Russian challenge that someday we will live under communism with a contrary challenge that someday the Russians will live in freedom.

The term "States Rights" should never be applied to Goldwater's constitutional views because of the incorrect connotation that the federal government should have no powers and the states should have it all. Federalism would be a better term, for it accurately describes the Goldwater understanding that localities should handle local problems while the federal government will have its hands full carrying out the constitutional mandate to operate programs which are of national concern and which protect the rights of individuals guaranteed in the Constitution. He understands that unlimited governments are tyrannies while the sole purpose of a constitution is to prescribe the limits of government, which prevent tyranny. In short, Mr. Goldwater would seek the balance between federal and state authorities in opposition to the current policy of vesting all power in the executive branch of the central government. He would further attempt to restore the constitutionally intended roles of the three branches of our federal government.

The hysterical cries of "trig-ger happy," "anti-everything," and "turn-the-clock-back" have lost their force. The time has come to examine the Goldwater program as he has proposed it rather than the versions of his opponents and to realize the positive nature of his philosophy.

Longwood's varsity team met their downfall at the hands of Madison College. And a hardy blow it was.

Going into the game with an amazing winning streak of not having been scored against, the Ladies bowed to scores of 4-1 and 2-1.

Madison proved to be too much for Longwood to handle. Their strong defensive team held the Ladies to one goal for the entire game. Though the score was a little lopsided, the LC defense put up a good battle, but Madison just proved to be the better team.

Against Lynchburg, though, Longwood couldn't be stopped. When they cleared from the first game of the big "L" clash, Longwood was on top 3-0.

At the end of the first half, the limelight had fallen on Phyllis Collins and Barbara Ragland with a goal each. Most of the play was in LC's half of the field.

The Ladies, literally running circles around the Lynchburg team, displayed some of the finest stick-work in hockey.

Controlling the ball with unbelievable skill and teamwork, the Ladies granted Lynchburg the privilege of crossing the fifty-yard line so few times that the maintenance men could have been re-training it for the next game.

When the game resumed from the half-time break, Lynchburg was the bully only to lose it to a blue and white team. Barbara Ragland lined another goal to end the scoring for both teams.

In the second game of the day, the home team showed excellent stick-work and team cooperation as they blasted Lynchburg 6-0 for a third consecutive shut-out in three starts.

The Blue and White bench seat in Lynchburg at L.W. Karen Ruder, L.F. Ginny Morton, C.P. Connie Spradlin, R.R. and Connie Gallahan, R.W. on the forward line. On defense were: Rusty Stephenson, L.H. Phyllis Lasley, C.H. Jack Hendricks, R.R. Nevis Barn, L.F. Jayne Eddy, R.F. and Pat Lyddane, G. Longwood's goalie never had a chance to make a play since the Lynchburg squad never got within the scoring circle, and hardly got past the 25-yard line.

Blue and white offense pushed hard through Lynchburg's defensive line and finally grabbed the first point of the game. The first half saw the visitors collect the greater portion of penalties — and the Ladies capitalized on them with long, hard drives.

The second goal came after a struggle with Lynchburg's defense in the striking zone. A Longwood player broke free and sent the ball into the goal cage on a fast play.

About two minutes later the Ladies were on the offense again sending the hockey ball crashing through the visitors' defensive wall into the cage.

Then it was time for Lynchburg to take advantage of three consecutive free shots. This got them to the blue and white 25-yard line and that's as far as it got them.

Longwood's defense took the ball, drove it to the forward line and a fifth goal was scored as the whistle sounded to end the half.

Within two minutes after the game resumed the final goal goal was made and the score stood 6-0 — the way it eventually ended.

Although the defensive unit didn't see much action, their long hard drives kept the ball within reach of the offensive squad.

With six minutes left, the Lynchburg team was in the scoring circle when Longwood's defense rallied to keep them from getting the goal.

Spotlight Lands On Lynch Marks Fourth Active Year

by Karen Ruder

This week's sport's spotlight is on Sarah Jane Lynch, a senior Health and Physical Education major from Chesapeake, Va. She is one of those people who you always see running from one meeting to another! Sarah Jane has a long list of varied interests. Her first claim to fame was as Miss Lynch, top rate for the class of '65. She has always been active in circus, both in her class skits and as a clown for three years.

A variety of sports have taken up a great deal of Sarah Jane's time. She played class hockey her freshman, sophomore, and senior years, and varsity hockey her junior year. As a freshman and junior, Sarah Jane played class basketball. In her sophomore year, varsity basketball. One of Sarah Jane's favorite rat for the class of '65. She has been in the HBC Club for four years and has participated in the water pageant her freshman and junior years.

Sarah Jane has been on the Athletic Association council for three years. As a sophomore, she was the class hockey manager and co-historian. She was secretary in her junior year, and this year was elected President. Last spring, Sarah Jane was tapped into the honorary leadership fraternity, Alpha Kappa Gamma, of which she is treasurer this year. She was also a recipient of a blue blazer this year.

make up work missed when the absences result from either of these causes. He may, however, demand that the student supply him with an excuse signed by the College Physician or some other physician in the case of an illness. Approval of college activities will be posted on the faculty bulletin board.

The proposed attendance regulation does not necessarily mean unlimited cuts for the students. It does mean that each instructor will determine his own absence policy and will be asked to submit the policy in writing to the Dean and to communicate it to the students.

New Televisions Provide Library For Observation

The major purpose of the newly installed television equipment and studio in the Hiner Building is to provide a videotape library for observation of public school teaching methods.

Although mass instruction is not the primary aim of these facilities, says Dr. Patterson, head of the Education Department, such a program could be conveniently initiated by simply installing cables from other campus buildings to the studio.

At present, Psychology 256 and Speech 101 are the only classes being taught via television. The equipment was installed last year after the General Assembly appropriated $25,000 for each of the three state teaching colleges in Virginia.

A A NEWS

Like to play golf? If you are a golfer but do not have access to clubs, watch for notices on the AA bulletin board concerning the use of our newly acquired sets. Two complete sets of clubs were purchased. At the present time these clubs are not in use. However, as soon as the Recreation Committee rules are approved by the Council the student body will be permitted the use of these clubs. This program will probably be similar to the present bicycle program.

The Athletic Council has decided not to have a booth for Circus. The Council is considering the possibility of selling drinks at the hockey game Circus week-end, however. The names of the hockey players will be announced at this time for the benefit of student spectators and for visitors who will be here that week-end. The Longwood teams will play the Little Colonels, a Richmond team and an Alumnae team.

The Social Committee has really been busy this fall. All of the Longwood hockey games have been home games this year. The Social Committee is responsible for serving refreshments to the visiting teams as well as the home teams after the games. The committee, under the leadership of Brenda Donovan, has done a fine job thus far. I'm sure their services are greatly appreciated by all of the teams.

The Publicity Committee, under the leadership of Mary Gompi, is to be commended for its publicity for the Athletic Association demonstration also.

A Chi sign's work is never done! Reporter interviews Rufner Chi Sign on nature of his job.

Chi Sign Tells Reporter Of Average Day On Job

by Rusty Stephenson

"Wee doggies!"—It was a cold last night! Ha, ha, old Jack First and I had a merry old time. Ah, the sun is a welcome sight after eight hours of darkness. Hmmm, there uses that overgrown wrist watch again. Won't be long before the wall-rosses will be coming by on their way to the chow hall.

Well please, who is this coming? I'm getting the impression that I'm being stared at. I must be losing my mind, because I could have sworn that she said she was here to write a story about me. No, I'm still sane, she did say what I thought she said. Well, after all these years it's about time. I was beginning to develop a gross inferiority complex.

No introduction should be necessary, but if you insist, I'm the Chi sign located on the sidewalk back of Rufner. Yes, now that you mention it, I guess seeing only feet all the time is a rather unusual existence.

Well on the whole the days really aren't too bad. Things are usually pretty hopping. Take yesterday for instance, I was trampled six times in five minutes by some of those "wait until the last minute to go to class" type characters.

It's really weird, but the people with small feet usually walk around or hop over me, while you can be sure that the ace with the 9 1/2" quad E will hit ya dead center every time. No, at first I was a little ticked off about being walked on, but you learn to take the bad with the good.

You know, I'm probably the only person in the world who can tell a CHI member by his feet. Well, they kind of approach me with reverence, and there is a slight pause as they walk around me.

I keep telling myself that there are a lot of good points to the job. I get plenty of sunshine and fresh air, peace and quiet from 11 p.m. to 6 a.m. and a new paint job every year. Of course some days after you have been rained on, trampled across, and painted green, it can make you wonder if there isn't an easier way to make a living. Then you stop and think about the great group you're working for, and things don't look so bad.

Oh, oh, here comes the first of the mob for the day. Yes, I've enjoyed our talk, and if you ever feel the urge for a early morning chat, stop by anytime.

Longwood Appoints New Faculty, Staff

The Longwood College faculty and staff for the four year term includes 23 new appointments.

Dr. Richard B. Brooks is serving his first regular term as Dean of the college. He succeeded Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss who retired from the position in June. Dr. Charles H. Patterson, a specialist in educational research and development, has succeeded Dr. Brooks as chairman of the Department of Education, Psychology and Philosophy.

An "international flavor" has been added to the campus with the arrival of four new faculty members and one staff member who are natives of foreign countries. Mr. Michael Rees, a native of England, will serve as assistant librarian. Mrs. Anne Eck, a native of Germany, and Dr. Maria Silveria, from Cuba, will serve as instructors in foreign languages.

Miss Jacqueline Simone Courvoisier of Switzerland and Miss Lucilla Edith Lora Kappany, a native of Argentina, will serve as language assistants. Also in the Department of Foreign Languages is Julian B. Stern, a graduate of the University of Geneva, who has been appointed assistant professor of Foreign Languages.

Other faculty appointments are Dr. Janet L. Binger, assistant professor of Psychology; Harold L. Bird, Jr., assistant professor of Natural Sciences; Herbert R. Blackwell, assistant professor of English; and Harold F. Crist, instructor in Mathematics.

Also new to the campus this year are Mrs. Phyllis W. Harris, instructor in Physical and Health Education (returning after a year's absence); Miss K. Elizabeth Hood, instructor in Natural Sciences; Miss Anne H. Huffman, part-time instructor in Physical and Health Education, and Mrs. Anne M. Moore, instructor in English.

Mrs. Helen Liles Page, instructor in Education; Dr. Jean Swartz, assistant professor of Natural Sciences; Laymon L. Thomas, Jr., part-time instructor in Foreign Languages; and Robert J. Woodburn, instructor in English and Speech are also coming to the Longwood for the first time.

Remember to listen to the new radio program that is all about you—the students of Longwood College. Tune to WFLO every Wednesday at 3:30 for "Casing The Campus."

Academic Regalia

they way the gown is made. The kind of degree is represented by the trimming on the sleeves. For instance, a person having a master's degree would have short sleeves, while a doctor would wear long full sleeves. For the doctor's degree the gown has a velvet panel down the front with three strips across the sleeves. The velvet binding on the hood is relative to the type of degree also. The border is two, three, or five inches wide for the bachelor's, master's, and doctor's degrees respectively.

During our academic processions, we have seen some really outstanding gowns. Perhaps the most striking robe is that of Dr. Frances R. Brown, whose gown is crimson, an interesting contrast to the conventional black. Another point of interest is the cap of Dr. Alexander V. Berkis. Unlike the others, the cap does not have the square flat top nor does it have the tassels. Mrs. Helen B. Savage wears the gown that Miss Mary Clay Hiner once wore in Longwood processions.

Student Teaching Begins For Longwood Seniors

One hundred and nine Longwood college seniors who plan teaching careers have begun eight weeks of practice teaching in six Virginia communities. Two other groups—totaling 175 students—will leave the campus on similar teaching assignments during the academic year.

Twenty-three members of the first "teaching block" have been assigned to the Roanoke City and County Schools, twenty to the Richmond City Schools, and twenty to the Colonial Heights Schools, twenty to the Danville City Schools, twenty-one to the Henrico County Schools, and five to the Farmville area schools.

Teaching in Roanoke are Sue Arnold, Pam Gustafson, Marina Muir, Bonnie Ramsey, Janice Smith, Angela Stephenson, Judy Davis, Linda Carter, Charlotte Slaton, Sue Thompson, Carolyn Gowen, Elaine Mancil, Carolyn Ramsey, Susan Riddle, Mary Virginia Barnes, Joanna Otto, Carolyn Dickerson, Elizabeth Ann Graham, Brenda Raymond, Ann Garrett, Henrietta Gilliam, Kathy Puckett, and Jeanette Gursi.

At Richmond City Schools are Joyce Bartley, Jerry Ann Bullock, Anne Gordon, Mary Elizabeth Grant, Ruth Kays, Dottie Marshall, Linda Civena, Joe Hewitt, Betty Tate, Carolyn Oliver, Marty Young, Dianne Carlington, Rebecca Thomas, Judy Cox, Dorothy Lee Goodman, Virginia Groomsby, Maria Konovaleff, Lynn Scott, Martin, Nancy Ruckman, and Scott Whitehead. Joan Andrews, Kay Cobb, Judy Gordon, Lynn Hancock, Donna Kafka, Pauline Lane, Owynne Phillips, Susan Simpson, Martha Spitzer, Elizabeth Clements, Lucy Ferrell, Grace Harrison, Marcia Siegfried, Jean Harrison, Eleanor Morris, Pat Turner, Jeannette Leslie and Pauline Wheaton are in the Colonial Heights area.

Teaching this block in Danville are Mary Alice Barr, Linda Turner, Sarah Adams, Ruth Sulpepper, Mary Jones, Judy Clark, Dorothy Guthrie, Janet Gibson, Shirley Harris, Shirley Gunn, Lela King, Sue Mays, Vickie Gambill, Suzanne Cruse, Karen Shelton, Sally Taylor, Betty Bowen, Rebecca Wachmann, Shirley Snead, and Anne Marie Watkins.

In the Henrico school system is Judy Ashby, Bettie Bowles, Sandra Jarman, Nancy Kneustep, Mary Catherine Palmore, Martha Bergeron, Doris Harwell, Susanne Lovell, Nelda Shields, Marcia Catoe, Leslie House, Virginia Peitz, Mary Walker, Kay Barker, Betty Hodneut, Jane Bulman, Donna Gray, Mary Frances Hall, Judy Ivy, Sally Whitehurst, and Joanne Norman. Practice teaching in the Farmville area schools are Charlotte Vennings, Shirley Cox, Carol Farris, Martha Smith, and Norman Spencer.

Woodburn Joins Speech Staff For First College Position

By Barbara Garrison

The English department has recently added a new young speech instructor to its faculty. He is Robert J. Woodburn who is now teaching "Fundamentals of Public Speech" and "Voice and Diction" to the Longwood ladies.

Mr. Woodburn, a native of Farmville, graduated from Hargrave Military Academy in Chatham. He received his B. S. in English and Speech from Concord College, West Virginia, after which he taught for a year at Bluefield High School.

Before coming to Longwood, Mr. Woodburn spent two years in the insurance business. He is currently working for his Master's degree in Speech at Marshall University, Huntington, West Virginia.

Mr. Woodburn had extensive radio and television experience in West Virginia. He has also worked part-time as an announcer for WFLO in Farmville.

While at Concord, Mr. Woodburn showed a special interest in dramatics. He appeared in The Druid Circle and also played Marc Antony in Julius Caesar. At Marshall this past summer, Mr. Woodburn appeared in The American Dream, a play by the controversial playwright, Edward Albee. The play was presented in theatre-in-the-round. Mr. Woodburn found this central staging to be a new and interesting experience.

In addition to his work in dramatics, Mr. Woodburn has a particular interest in photography and music. He admits to being a "bug on stereo" and says that Henry Mancini is his favorite orchestra leader.

In speaking of Longwood and his first college teaching position, Mr. Woodburn said, "It is a challenge." The students of Longwood hope he will find it a pleasant one.

Mr. Woodburn joins Longwood Speech Department.

White Enters '64 'Bigtop' As AKG Circus Ringmaster

Macon Society Holds Mock Election At LC

The Nathaniel Macon Society is sponsoring a mock election which is to be held Tuesday, October 27.

The polls will be set up in each dormitory between the hours of 12:00 and 1:00, 4:00 and 6:00, and 6:30 and 7:30.

Slater Surveys LC Preferences In Dining Hall

Mr. Pennock, the dining hall manager, plans to conduct a food preference survey within the next week. The purpose of this survey, which will be taken on the dormitory halls, is to determine the students' food likes and dislikes. This will enable the dining hall to know the foods the students like best so that the menus may be planned accordingly.

It is necessary for everyone to realize the importance of this survey. It can be of great benefit to all concerned if the right attitude is taken.

It is also important that everyone turn in their survey sheet. In that an overall picture may be seen, Mr. Pennock added, "Please feel free to use the comment section on the back."

After the survey is taken here, all of the sheets are sent to the ARA Slater Food Service in Philadelphia, and the results are then sent back to Longwood.

Poetry Contest Has Cash Prizes For LC Poets

Longwood College has been selected to participate in the 1964-1965 Inter-Collegiate Poetry Contest Anthology. All entries must be in November 23, and winners will be selected on poetic merit. The contest is open to colleges and universities from all over the country.

Cash prizes will be given in the following amounts: $25.00 for first prize, $15.00 for second, and $10.00 for third. All contestants shall be notified within two weeks of the editors decision. Send all entries to:

Inter-Collegiate Poetry Congress

Longwood Plays Host For Piano Workshop

A piano workshop will be held at Longwood on November 7 under the direction of Walter Robert, Professor of Piano at Indiana University School of Music. The workshop, sponsored by the music department, will be open to all interested students.

The workshop will begin with a short program by Mr. Robert. This will be followed by a talk on piano technique and literature. The workshop will also include a Master class during which the students will perform.

Mr. Robert was born at Trieste, Italy, and was educated at the Vienna Conservatory of Mu-

The precincts will be as follows: Cox, Wheeler, South Cunningham, Main and North Cunningham, Post Office and Ruffner, Tabb and Student Building. The ballots will have space which may be used for write-in votes.

The results of the election will be announced that evening over the public address system.

The Macon Society, as an impartial body, is asking the Young Republicans and the Young Democrats to campaign for their respective candidates.

The Macon Society is striving to make the election as nearly like the real election as possible. There will be a comparison made between the two elections.

Harvill Publishes Magnolia Article In Botany Book

Dr. A. M. Harvill, Jr., has recently published an article in Botanical Society. The item discusses the unusual discovery in Princess Ann County, Virginia, of several groups of very old trees and numerous seedlings of Magnolia Grandiflora L.

After seeing prized specimens of the tree in Oxford, England; Cairo, Egypt, and the Canary Islands; Dr. Harvill states that it is of considerable interest to find such a tree growing in a region which has been settled for three centuries.

An attempt was started to count the trees, but was abandoned when it became evident that the number would run into hundreds. There are at least seven associates of the magnolia also located in the area.

The discovery has now been added to the range of Gray's Manual, which has included Virginia for 107 years. Also of note is the fact that specimens of the Magnolia, Harvill 1194, are deposited in the Longwood herbarium.

Keep abreast of the issues now before you. Only an informed electorate can vote intelligently. Many campus organizations are sponsoring events that will present the campaign to you. Take advantage of your opportunities.

He has played in concert in Austria, Italy, Poland, and Czechoslovakia. Since coming to America, he has toured throughout the United States, Canada, and Cuba.

Mr. Robert has been featured on many radio broadcasts in this country and in Europe. During the 1956-57 season, he played and lectured extensively in colleges throughout America.

While working for his doctor's degree, Longwood's Dr. Sterling Adams studied for several years under Mr. Robert at Indiana University.

JEAN WHITE '64 RINGMASTER

Students To Hear Nelson, Neal At Longwood Artist Series

Nationally acclaimed concert pianists, Nelson and Neal will be presented in concert here on October 26 as the second Artists' Series of the season to be held in Jarman at 8 p.m.

The couple has played more concerts than any other two-piano team in the world during the last ten years. Over 50 per cent of their itinerary is devoted to return engagements, and there are 137 cities in the United States where they have been called back anywhere up to nine times. They have received standing ovations in such small cities as Del Rio, Texas, and in such large ones as Los Angeles, Cleveland and Miami.

Nelson and Neal are unanimously acclaimed by critics for their interpretations of Brahms and the romantic music of the nineteenth century.

Almost every Nelson and Neal orchestral performance or recital includes an interesting product of their musical research. In the last two years their programs have included a startling array of North American and Twentieth Century premieres of lost or forgotten works by such composers as Schubert, Mendelssohn, Liszt and Brahms.

Allison Nelson (Mrs. Harry Neal) was Australia's leading child prodigy, having toured that country more extensively than any other Australian-born artist. She was brought to this country in 1944 to study with Rudolf Serkin at Philadelphia's famed Curtis Institute of Music.

Her husband, Harry Neal, is a pianist, Nelson and Neal will be presented in concert here on October 26 as the second Artists' Series of the season to be held in Jarman at 8 p.m. pedagogue, Mme. Isabelle Vengerova. They were soon engaged by the Philadelphia CBS outlet to present a series of television programs devoted to four-hand music. In Australia, they were broadcast by ABC in a weekly series of coast-to-coast recitals.

The couple has been featured on NBC's "This Is Your Life" program, and in the Ladies' Home Journal, Coronet and This Week magazines. Mr. Neal's best-selling autobiography Wave As You Pass was recently published by Lippincott.

Usherettes Aid White In Upcoming AKG Circus

"As the spirit of the 'Big top' fills every heart with glee, Come join us in this happy land, thrill to the sights you see. And now from the canvas tent, one of circus fame — The ringmaster — Miss Jean White is her name."

This well known phrase will welcome Jean White into the center ring as the 1964 ringmaster for the upcoming AKG circus — "Animals, Klowns, 'n Gowns."

Jean is a member of the junior class and is majoring in elementary education and art.

Lockwood Talks At VEA Meet In Richmond

On October 30, Dr. Patton Lockwood, Assistant Professor of speech and dramatic art at Longwood College, will address a meeting of the Virginia Education Association in Richmond, Va., on the topic of "What Americans Don't Know About Asia." He will deliver his address for the Social Studies.

Attending the annual meeting will be secondary and college teachers. Dr. Lockwood's address will be based on his experiences while living in Pakistan, Ceylon, and India.

Always active in the Young Woman's Christian Association, Jean was treasurer of the Freshman Commission her first year and has been on the "Y" cabinet for the past two years. Other church work includes membership in the Baptist Student Union.

Jean has also been busy on House Council, having been a dorm president and this year serving as secretary to the organization.

Her interest in music has prompted Jean to be a member of the concert choir.

Jean is also a member of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority. When told that, she had been chosen as the '64 ringmaster, Jean stated, "It is so difficult to believe — so thrilling and exciting."

This year the usherettes for circus were chosen on merit of activities, character, and spirit.

The senior usherettes are June and Judy Wilson. The "twins" have been active in a variety of organizations around school.

Both girls have been on the Athletic Association Council and have worked on the Virginian staff. This year Judy was photography editor.

June and Judy were also editors of the student handbook for this year. Judy, a physical education major, has been very active in all phases of sports, while June, a social science major, has found satisfaction in her work in Jarman. This year she is vice-president of the Longwood Players.

The junior usherettes are Helena Hall, Mary Lee Shoulders, and Ginny McCoy.

Helena, a physical education major, has been a member of orchestra, the Athletic Association, and the varsity hockey team.

Mary Lee Shoulders, a biology major, is this year's secretary of the Judicial board and is treasurer of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority.

Ginny McCoy, also a biology major, is a junior representative to the legislature. She and June are members of Alpha Gamma Delta.

Wilson Adds Enthusiasm, Brings Life To Campus

How does one best describe Judy Wilson? Perhaps with phrases like "We're going to catch Chi," or "Green and whites are going to win Circus," or "There is a painting tonight" added out with a slight British overtone. These are all characteristic of this little Jack Horner who seems to have her finger in almost every pie around campus.

It all began on March 13, 1943. Seven minutes decided on her being the fourth and last child. Yes, June is older.

Her freshman year marked the Genesis of her career. She earned a position on the varsity hockey team as left fullback. This she has held for her entire college years. In class sports, she added her talents to the basketball, volleyball and softball teams. These, too, turned out to be four year projects.

Judy's sophomore year found her adding tennis to her schedule. As a member of the Athletic Association, she served as co-manager of class tennis. Probably the most memorable event of her sophomore year was the night she was commended by Chi.

In her junior year, Judy again served the Athletic Association as a capable co-ordinator and co-manager of class hockey. Unknown to many people, Judy holds half the title of Miss Mediterranean Fien Queen. She was a contestant in the golf tournament here at Longwood.

Class Hockey To Be Or Not...

Time has gotten around to class hockey again, but it seems that the class members haven't gotten around to hockey as of yet. With time and practices running short, the sophomore class as of this date is the only class with enough eligible members to make up a team.

To be classified as a member a player must have a total of eight practices. If a person has a class of hockey, then she will only have to accumulate four practices. Times allotted are at 2:00 on Mondays and Wednesdays, 4:00 on Monday through Thursdays.

This year's AA managers of class hockey are Judy Wilson and Kathryn Moore.

The students are urged to participate in hockey. Or the students could just ignore it and maybe they'll do away with it. The choice is yours!

Along came senior (dignified?) Judy Wilson. She has been awarded a white blazer for her participation in athletic sports on campus. Elected co-captain of the varsity hockey team, Judy has helped the "Ladies" achieve an almost undefeated year.

If she were to have a schedule in extracurricular activities, it would consist of four year block courses in circus skills, circus clown, varsity hockey, circus clown, and waitressing in the dining room. There is a domestic side to Judy Wilson that often escapes the eye. This Physical Education major enjoys sewing and cooking. She takes special pride in the fact that she made a whole loaf of homemade bread this summer on her own.

Judy Wilson has been in the spotlight for a long time. It is the Rotunda's privilege to tell about it.

Practise for class hockey has begun. These girls are warming up for the coming Green and Red competition.

Corkettes Add Members, 'Water-Kids' Boost Roll

The H<sub>2</sub>O Club has recently elected its slate of officers for the coming year.

The newly installed president is Ann Persak, a senior biology major from Milbrook, N. Y.; vice president is Linda Spinner, a junior home economics major from Chester; secretary is Carey Howell, a junior home economics major from Waynesville, N. C.; treasurer is Eulene Lang, a senior physical education major from Walsenburg, N. C.; his to list is Karen Ruder, a junior physical education major from Washington, D. C.; Arlene Steiner, a senior biology and feminism major from Clulper; is in charge of publicity and Bobbi Allen, a junior physical education major from Roanoke will direct the swim meet.

New members of the H<sub>2</sub>O Club are Dona Brooker, Lucy Flanagan, Kathy Kolva, Mary Lash, Gail Nolan, Janice Smith, Arlene Steiner, and Sue Williams. Membership in the H<sub>2</sub>O Club has three requisites. The prospective member must have been in Corkettes for a period of one year. She must have her senior life saving and be voted into the club by the old members.

Corkettes who are to act as apprentices for the H<sub>2</sub>O Club this year are Dede Holdren, Nancy Fly, Pat Finn, Joanne Moore, Peggy Neis, Ann Lancaster, Ann Smith, Elenor Umindenston, and Ginny Turner. Corkettes are selected from those people who try out in the fall of the year.

The H<sub>2</sub>O Club and Corkettes, along with their sponsor Miss Smith, have two main events scheduled for the year. They are now in the midst of planning for their annual water pageant to be held in the end of February. They will also sponsor the swim meet to be conducted during the spring. The H<sub>2</sub>O Club is also responsible for supplying one of the life guards for the swim swims.

New corkettes begin year of apprenticeship for H<sub>2</sub>O Club. Learning synchronized swimming is one of the first steps toward the annual water pageant.

Rotunda Forms Policy

Editor's Note:

This editorial is reprinted from the March 18, 1961 Rotunda.

The start of each new publication year always brings up the question of "where will the Rotunda stand on various issues." In an effort to answer this question collectively, the following statement of policy is being submitted to the student body.

By gathering and publishing the news in all phases of college life and by striving to give fair and equal treatment to each area, the Rotunda's aims are to keep the students, faculty, administration, and alumnae informed of current campus affairs. At the same time we realize that this college is only a small part of a much larger sphere of activity. Through columns, editorials, and letters, the Rotunda will try to keep the student body informed of significant events occurring in the nation and the world.

The Rotunda will make the most sincere effort to reflect the opinions of everyone on the college campus. Two editorials are written each week by members of the staff, guest columns and feature stories are printed as often as space permits, and letters to the editor are encouraged from both student and faculty.

Concerning the editorial policy, which seems to be the issue most often under fire, it will continue much as it has the last year; however, more editorials from members of the staff will be encouraged. All unsigned editorials will be those written by the editor, and she alone will be responsible for her opinions. The right of freedom of expression in both editorials and letters will be guarded jealously by the staff of the Rotunda.

A final aim of the Rotunda will be to act as a medium for the journalistic efforts of all students. Work on a school paper can afford valuable experience in the field of journalism. The Rotunda welcomes the interest of any member of the student body.

We hope in the coming year, to provide Longwood College with an informative and challenging newspaper.

50,000,000 Too Many!

A definition of poverty should include the minimal levels of health, housing, food, and education that enables us to live by the standards now present in the United States.

When we are hit with the number 50,000,000 - this represents the number of poor in the U. S. - we overcome. Here we must remember our definition. These same Americans would not be poor in India or during the Dark Ages, but are here - today!

How often have we heard, "If he'd get out and work he wouldn't be poor or they all have big cars." These old cliches cover up a wide-gape of misconception and easily remove any sense of responsibility on the part of the affluent society.

The poor are caught like Sambo's tigers - chasing round and round the tree. They are unfortunate enough to have been born in the wrong race, area, or of poor parents. If they had the super-human strength of will and character that few of us do most of them could get out of their poverty instead of the few who do.

It is one characteristic of human behavior that man adjusts to, and is controlled by his environment; therefore, we find the poor living in a culture of poverty, which so influences their lives and thoughts, that it is difficult for them to escape.

VISTA, the domestic version of the peace corp is trying, through education and deliverance from physical needs, to break through this cultural barrier.

If you are interested in more information on this problem or VISTA, please come by the Rotunda office or see any member of the editorial staff.

Student Government History, Study Of Changing Eras At LC

By Maria Grant

"1894 was your year, Southern Belle." It was the year - for the State Normal School for Women at Farmville, Virginia. But Student Government's year was not to be until almost a quarter of a century later.

Our contemporary "Stu Gu" (to which it is fondly (?) referred) has (to us) an almost awesome, completely logical and terribly humorous history. It is with slight fascination, and great respect that the clock is turned back to the Longwood of the early 1900's - as seen through the eyes of an ageless, fictitious student.

Editor's Note:

This is the first in a series of features about Longwood's history as seen through its traditions, its students, its campus, and its contributions.

During the latter part of the school year 1909-1910 the students of the State Normal School, after having carefully considered the need for an Honor System in a school of prospective teachers, decided to adopt a system of self-government. Consequently, on May 6, 1910, a mass meeting of the students was held in the auditorium, the first president, Bessie Brooks, presiding.

The Constitution was submitted to the vote of the students. Each article was approved and accepted. Then it was suggested that an amendment be made providing for quiet during meditation hours.

Our Constitution contained six articles dealing with:

I) Name - Student Association of State Normal School
II) Purpose - to preserve the student honor and to further interests of students so far as lies within its power.

III) Members - whole student body

IV) Officers - (5 clauses)

V) Cases - (2 clauses)

VI) Amendments - (seven)

It also consisted of by-laws and rules for table monitors. On October 12, 1911, the president called the first meeting of the Executive Board and told them that L. B. had been reported for cheating in the Junior Grammar Class. C. W. first appeared before the committee and gave a detailed statement.

The Executive Board eventually decided to consult Dr. Jarman who advised -

We had many cases, even during those first few years. Just to give you an idea - one day in 1913 four girls were called in for removing a can of Wesson Oil from Annie G.'s room. And in 1914 two girls were reported for talking to a young man in the drug store, Ghazalgi!

In 1915 there was the adventuresome girl who attempted to climb to E. W.'s room on third floor by means of a blanket. We put out one of our first handbooks in 1917, and it had 13 pages. Isn't that marvelous? We were so proud. Some of the rules were rather stiff, but others weren't so bad.

1) students must stand during singing of hymns
2) the following are positively forbidden: cutting across lawn on front campus, etc.
3) students are required to come to meals unless in the infirmary or excused by the home department.

Skipping across the years I can remember the good old Roaring Twenties. They weren't too awfully roaring for us at State Normal, for we didn't have any speakeasies, or bathtub gin parties on campus.

We did have a Senate, which was under the Student Association Constitution as a branch of that organization. It consisted of all juniors and seniors, 15 per cent of the sophomores and in per cent of the freshmen. Through the Senate various committees were established:

1) the committee on meal cuts
2) the committee on library slips
3) the committee on going to the station
4) the committee on card playing

We may have gotten our voting rights in 1918, but in 1925, we girls at State Normal were still fighting for recognition in other fields. I can remember one particular petition (they did things like that even then):

"Other colleges offering degrees have many privileges, among which is the privilege of going to the station without permission. Among these colleges are R-MWC, Hollins, William & Mary, Westhampton, Agnes Scott, and Fredericksburg State Teachers College. We are very anxious to be on a plane with seniors of other schools."

The handbook for 1919-20 had progressed to 36 pages and contained more of our rules. Smoking was absolutely forbidden; girls were not permitted to use "U-Drive-Its" (I can't even remember very clearly what they were); and of course the ever-popular rule - girls must not be joined at soda fountains by young men.

Around 1930 there were among hundreds of cases) three girls who were guilty of boisterous conduct. And also during that year the Student Association Council was constituted to be on the lookout for smoking.

In 1932 our beloved State Normal became part of past history, for our school received a new name. We were now students of the State Teachers College at Farmville, Va. We were ever so proud of our new status. Also that year the handbook grew to 68 pages as the times brought more privileges and more rules. The seniors could have their lights on till 11:00 and could go to the show on week nights with dates.

Bingner Joins Faculty, Swells Education Ranks

"A score that falls one sigma above the mean..." This might be a typical phrase overheard by a student passing one of Dr. Janet L. Bingner's classes in educational measurements.

Dr. Bingner is one of the new professors who has joined the Longwood faculty as a member of the education department. Besides educational measurements, Dr. Bingner also teaches social, educational, and developmental psychology. Next semester she will teach a graduate course in guidance and counseling.

Dr. Bingner, a native of Pennsylvania, has lived and studied in many places. She received her B.S. degree from the University of Pittsburgh, her M.A. from the University of Maryland, and her Ph.D. from George Washington University.

In public schools in Henrico County, Williamsburg, and Lancaster, Pennsylvania, Dr. Bingner served as taught accounting, business education, and social science.

On the university level, Dr. Bingner served as administrator of the evening division of Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Texas. In this division which included over 3000 students, she taught psychology and dealt particularly in the fields of guidance and counseling.

During a four-year stay in Berlin, Germany, Dr. Bingner had many memorable and impressive experiences. She traveled in most of the surrounding countries where she had particular interests in the various school systems. She studied French, German, political science, and literature privately.

At this time many German students found difficulty in attending the University of Berlin because it was in the Russian sector of the city. The students themselves literally built the Free University of Berlin in another sector. Dr. Bingner taught in old, bombed-out buildings that lacked heat and furnishings. She prompted the youthful Germans to take part-time jobs. This was unusual for German students; they were not accustomed to working their way through school. Dr. Bingner said she was particularly impressed with the students' drive for knowledge.

Dr. Bingner, who has always wanted to be associated with a girls' school, finds the Longwood Honor Code to be the most impressive she has encountered here. Longwood is her first girls' school.

Faculty Summer Reveals Variety Of Activities

By Barbara Melton

For many of us the past summer was a time of leisure and fun. For various members of the Longwood faculty the summer meant something else. Questionnaires were sent to each professor from the President's office, and the results revealed a variety of activities.

Many professors were content to stay in the Farmville area for the summer, and taught at Longwood. These included Virginia Bedford, Robert T. Brumfield, Kathleen G. Cover, George P. Elliott, Foster B. Gresham, Rinaldo C. Simonini, and William J. Sowder.

A number of professors went to other colleges in order to do research and advanced studies in preparation for higher degrees. Among these were Merry L. Allen, Eleanor W. Bobbitt, Robert D. Brooks, Walter L. Carson, Joanne Curran, M. Hail, Nancy V. Letch, Paton Lockwood, David N. Wiley, and Dennis E. Williams.

There were others who served as visiting professors in other colleges throughout the country. Some of these professors included Alton M. Harvill (William & Mary), Emily K. Landrum (Un-

Wilson Adds Enthusiasm, Brings Life To Campus

How does one best describe Judy Wilson? Perhaps with phrases like "We're going to catch Chi," or "Green and whites are going to win Circus," or "There is a painting tonight" as laid out with a slight British overtone. These are all characteristics of this little Jack Horner who seems to have her finger in almost every pie around campus.

It all began on March 13, 1943. Seven minutes decided on her being the fourth and last child. Yes, June is older.

For freshman year marked the Genesis of her career. She earned a position on the varsity hockey team as left fullback. This she has held for her entire college years. In class sports, she added her talents to the basketball, volleyball and softball teams. These, too, turned out to be four year projects.

Judy's sophomore year found her adding tennis to her schedule. As a member of the Athletic Association, she served as co-manager of class tennis. Probably the most memorable event of her sophomore year was the night she was commended by Chi.

In her Junior year, Judy again served the Athletic Association as a capable co-historian and co-manager of class hockey. Unknown to many people, Judy holds half the title of Miss Mediterranean Flea Queen. She was a contestant in the golf tournament here at Longwood.

Along came senior (dignified?) Judy Wilson. She has been awarded a white blazer for her participation in athletic sports on campus. Elected captain of the varsity hockey team, Judy has helped the "Ladies" achieve an almost undefeated year.

If she were to have a schedule in extracurricular activities, it would consist of four year block courses in circus skills, circus clown, varsity hockey, and waitress in the dining room. There is a domestic side to Judy Wilson that often escapes the eye. This Physical Education major enjoys sewing and cooking. She takes special pride in the fact that she made a whole loaf of homemade bread this summer on her own.

Judy Wilson has been in the spotlight for a long time. It is the Rotunda's privilege to tell about it.

Class Hockey To Be Or Not ...

Time has gotten around to class hockey again, but it seems that the class members haven't gotten around to hockey as of yet. With time and practices running short, the sophomore class as of this date is the only class with enough eligible members to make up a team.

To be classified as a member a player must have a total of eight practices. If a person has a class of hockey, then she will only have to accumulate four practices. Times allotted are at 2:00 on Mondays and Wednesdays, 4:00 on Monday through Thursdays.

This year's AA managers of class hockey are June Wilson and Kathryn Moore.

The students are urged to participate in hockey. Or the students could just ignore it and maybe they'll do away with it. The choice is yours!

Practice for class hockey has begun. These girls are warming up for the coming Green and Red competition.

In what was probably their tightest defensive game of the year, the Varsity Hockey team held William and Mary to a scoreless game of 0-0. Not to be outdone, William and Mary kept the Ladies from entering the goal cage through the entire game.

Play was evenly divided on the field. Neither team could get the other to keep the ball within striking range for any length of time.

Fresh from a loss at the hands of Madison, the Ladies' barrel defense finally got their cleats in the ground and made a stand. Although both forward lines were driving hard, they couldn't get the ball past the human wall.

The only switch of player roster was the substitution of Ginny Morton for Phyllis Collins as center forward in the last half of the game.

The second game was an altogether different story with the score 3-1 over the Williamsburg club. An especially fast game, the defense was not as predominant as the first game.

Playing the first half of the second game, Ginny Morton made her mark on the scoreboard with two goals. Ruth Lamberick was also in the two goal column while Phyllis Collins brought in number five.

Up until the Madison bout, Longwood had not been scored against. Maybe this is what the team needed for they came back to hold William and Mary and to beat them in the second game. This makes their overall record 3-1-1. This Saturday the Ladies will play the Alumnae for Circus. Though all in fun, it will be interesting to see which combination, offense or defense, will be stronger.

Next week end the Ladies take on the third opponent of the season, Old Dominion. Then they will round out the year with ornaments.

Johnson, Goldwater Speak On Education

The 90th Congress has passed legislation for the first time in the history of the United States which provides for the federal government to make a major contribution to the education of the nation's youth. For these outstanding accomplishments, the Congress has earned our gratitude. This Congress will go down in history as "The Education Congress."

(Editor's Note: The Humphreys' article that was to have accompanied this week has been delayed until the next issue because it was felt that the following comments, found in the October issue of the NREA Journal, would be of particular interest to our students and future educators.)

But these new measures will still not meet our objective of providing educational opportunities to all who want and can benefit by them; nor will they meet the growing needs of a great society.

As the recently adopted education bill on the 1964 Democratic National Platform points out, the federal government has the responsibility of providing educational opportunities to all who want and can benefit by them; nor will they meet the growing needs of a great society.

There are those who criticize federal aid to education as a threat to individual liberty. Government aid to education does not restrict the individual. It helps liberate him from the economic forces of ignorance. Through the effective use of federal assistance state and local education can be made stronger and thus freer.

This government is committed to the fight against the poverty that keeps one-fourth of our people in bondage. And ignorance is itself the most important road block in any way on poverty.

The most effective guardian against centralization is the diffusion of responsibility throughout our land. To all our people, we say: Let us make our schools meet their liberty.

Our nation's achievements are the result of the freedom and faith we have placed in public education. We must do everything we can to maintain the local community, the county government, the state, and the federal government to make their maximum contribution in this field. The simple truth of our times is that America in this decade must enlarge, must broaden, must deepen its commitment to excellence in the classroom.

Senator Goldwater Says . . .
The American educational system strives for many goals: the broadest possible opportunity for every individual in line with his talents; the highest possible quality from elementary grades to graduate school; and the greatest possible free choice. Encouraging great diversity and preserving local and family responsibility, we have come ever closer to these goals.

I want to see us come closer still. But federal aid is not the way. It would inevitably invite bureaucratic federal control of school curriculums. It would add wasteful "freight charges" on money collected by the federal government and then parceled out to the states. It would continue to squeeze out the private school and small college, in favor of large public institutions.

Any federal aid programs cannot avoid stumbling over the complex church-state controversy. I have consistently opposed federal aid to elementary and secondary schools as unnecessary and unwise. Nevertheless, I have advocated that any such aid be chaperoned to go to the teacher or doctor, and seniors had the privilege of electing from their class a committee to act as chaperones for underclassmen to games. The two penalties listed in the handbook were campus and probation.

The Student Association always sponsored several activities during the year. We made $150 from our Circus booth in '45, and we wore our black skirts and white blouses to usher for the lyciums.

Some of the rules we enforced back then included penalties for three girls who wore feathers over the Rotunda (the 60's) and two girls who went downtown during Circus.

In 1947-48 the old drinking rule got its first amendment. The new addition stated that students must not return to Farmville under the influence of alcohol. This must have been a sign of our more mobile student body in accordance with the times. The Handbook for '48-49 had increased to 93 pages.

Homes! Two girls were caught night riding and said they'd gone into a fraternity house at Hampden-Sydney; and another girl went to a ball game at that season. I'd like to know where two unfortunate girls who received campus for a short time of fun and frolic they knew could over the Rotunda. But the most unfortunate was the girl who was camped two weeks, plus two weeks library confinement for going to the airport and taking flying lessons.

A momentous change occurred in 1949 when our name was changed to Longwood College. We had become LONGWOOD LADIES!

The possibility of creating a two-party governing council was discussed in 1950, but was not until some years later that this actually took place.

The 1953 Handbook for the first time listed a definition of terms for regulations: we now had warnings, call down, campus probation, suspension, indefinite suspension, expulsion, and honor.

The drinking rule multiplied to four and smoking was added, of course, but not in certain areas on campus. The "blanket permission" was later dropped.

Our college had recently acquired a new name. When the '55-'56 school year rolled around we had a new president — Dr. Francis G. Lanford arrived at Longwood.

1965 was a busy year. The SIASG Convention was held in Mississippi; Student Government weren't many places we could go other than Longwood.

We used to have a Campus League back then. They helped student government and the house council. "The duties of the League are to maintain the support and cooperation of all students in regard to the following: cutting across front campus; breaking shrubbery; throwing trash or hanging clothes out of the windows; smoking in the halls, etc.

Even as late as 1945 students had to be chaperoned to go to the dentist or doctor, and seniors had the privilege of electing from their class a committee to act as chaperones for underclassmen to games. The two penalties listed in the handbook were campus and probation.

1965 was a busy year. The SIASG Convention was held in Mississippi; Student Government ment still sponsored "street" dances; study cuts and strict campus were introduced in the handbook.

Even up to 1959 the council played Pi Delta Epsilon in a football game. That year Pi Delta decided not to wear shoulder pads. There was even an "Ole Miss" committee — Mrs. Bobbitt was asked to be Head Cheerleader!

A first time came in '59 when a Chairman of Orientation was appointed. From the handbook: "The student body is happily awaiting your arrival. You will be the largest class since 1926!"

Entering the Sixties, Longwood's Student Government kept up with the times. A report from the evaluation committee read:

1) LC needs a point system
2) the cut system needs improvement
3) a division of the council is considered

1961: A committee on thefts was begun; Town Girl Representative was changed to Day Student Representative; the SIASG Convention was in New Orleans, and Ann Hardy and Jo Savage were the LC delegates. In 1961 Jo Savage took over the chairmanship.

Another major change came in 1962: for the first time since 1911 the Student Government Association of Longwood College was split into two boards — Legislative (rulemaking body) and Judicial (rule-enforcing body). Sandy Phlegar assumed the responsibility of the Judicial chairmanship, Annie Bailey, that of chairman of Legislative.

'63-'64: A year of Honor Code searches . . . Under the chairmanship of Mary Anne Lipford the first thing the new Legislative Board did was to draw up a new, more appropriate and adequate Constitution. Lois Overstreet took the reins of the Judicial Board, which drew up the first case procedure in Longwood's history. The Board also tried to get permission for seniors to have cars on campus all year among other changes.

Spring 1964: For the first time the SIASG Convention was held here on our campus. It was a most successful endeavor and did much to increase Longwood's prestige among other colleges.

It was also decided last spring that House Council would be in charge of simple cases of slapping in and out, and latenesses up to five minutes.

And this year, Anne Cordie, Judicial chairman, and M. Woodward (Legislative chairman) add their names to a long line of predecessors. Revisions are being made on the case procedure after its year of trial. There is emphasis on a closer union between Legislative, House Council, and Judicial.

It's been quite some time since that day in May 1910. Many students have come and gone; many rules have been added and subtracted; the college name has been changed twice; several eras have come and gone. But the principles and ideals behind our Honor Code and Student Government live on.

Library Shows Paintings From Northern India

By Susan Woltz

From now through October 28, the Art Department is sponsoring an exhibit in the library, entitled "Rajput Painting." The exhibit is from the Committee on Eastern Studies of the University Center in Virginia, who obtained it from the Smithsonian Institution.

The art work (seen in the exhibit as replicas) was done by local artists in the Rajput Hills in Northern India. Most are miniature depicting the times, and are often of a religious nature. Rajput art started in the Middle East, and rapidly spread with the growth of Islam. It hit its height during the 18th century.

With this movement, many local touches were added, and the feeling for mood increased. Although it was painted for royal patronage, it tends to convey sophisticated ideas in a simplified and symbolic manner. Love and longing, the main themes, are not allowed to be smothered by a lot of overall detail. The most often portrayed characters are Krishna, the blue god, and his wife, Radha. They are normally shown heavily jeweled, and in vibrant hues.

A quote directly from the exhibit demonstrates the theme and quality of the pictures: "In a western sense of the word, these pictures are always well-designed. Their power lies more in their overall quality as paintings, and less in their minute perfection of detail."

Janice S. Lemen, of the Art Department, had this to say concerning the exhibit: "I think it's more educational than aesthetic, mainly in the fact that they are large pictures, instead of the originals. The main function is to prepare the student to see the original in a museum. It meant to be a background for the enjoyment of the real thing."

THE ROTUNDA

Longwood College, Farmville, Va., October 28, 1964

No. 4

THIS WEEK'S EDITORS

'Rotunda' Editor Pat Wallace attended a publications convention in Chicago this week and in her absence Desk Editor Sandy Jamison and Feature Editor Maria Grant acted as co-editors. Assistant Editor Sharon Williams and Assistant Feature Editor Karen Ruder lent much assistance.

Group To Attend Various English Conferences

On October 30 five people associated with the Longwood College Department of English will attend the meeting of the Virginia Education Association of Teachers of English in Richmond as past presidents of the association. They include: Mr. James M. Grainger, retired professor of English and founder of VATE; Miss Mary Clay Hiner, retired professor of English; Mr. Foster B. Gresham, associate professor of English and VATE executive secretary; Mrs. Mildred D. Davis, associate professor of English; and Dr. R. C. Simonini, Jr., chairman of the English Department and editor of the Virginia English Bulletin.

VATE was founded 50 years ago. The program for the annual meeting this year will celebrate the anniversary. The luncheon meeting of the association will honor Mr. Grainger.

College English Association
The College English Association of North Carolina and Virginia will hold its annual meeting at the College of William and Mary on October 31. Miss Mary P. Nichols, Dr. John Pastore, Dr. Rosemary Sprague, and Dr. R. C. Simonini, Jr. will represent Longwood's English Department.

Miss Nichols is a past secretary-treasurer of the association, and Dr. Simonini is a past president.

LC Newman Club Offers Course In Scripture

Maintaining its chief purpose of furthering the religious education of all Catholic students on the secular campus, the Longwood Newman Club is again offering a course in theology. This year the course is in sacred scripture. Taught by Rev. Carl B. Reikowsky, C. PP. S., the course meets each Monday night at 6:45 p.m. in the Y-Lounge.

This particular course was chosen because of the many new ideas which have developed in the field of Biblical research during the past decade. The text being used is Searching the Scriptures by John J. Dougherty, president of Seton Hall University. These books were donated to the Newman Club by St. Theresa's parish, Farmville.

In order to augment their study, the Newman Club plans to bring special guest lecturers to the campus. The first of these guests will be Rev. Shaun McCarty, M. SS. T., an instructor at Father Judge Mission Seminary in Monroe, Virginia. He will be on campus December 8, and will speak at a supper to be held by the club that night.

LC Jumps Aboard Campaign Wagon; Goldwater Wins In Campus Election

Demo Rally

Members of Young Democrats lead other pro-Johnson fans in rally behind Jaraman. A few Goldwater signs appeared in the crowd to add some competition.

By Pat Wallace

Mock elections here on campus resulted in a Goldwater victory. Estatic Young Republicans were rewarded for weeks of hard campaigning.

The election which was sponsored yesterday by the Nathaniel Macon Society was the end of several weeks of rallies, speeches, sings, and speakers by both the Young Democrats and Young Republicans.

Cox, Wheeler, South Cunningham, Post Office, Main Cunningham, Ruffner, North Cunningham, Student, and Tabb dormitories were the scene of yesterday's frenzied activity. Protests were set up in each of the dorms with voting officials from the Macon Society on duty to ensure correct voting procedures. Student voters cast their ballots between the hours of 12:00 and 1:00, 4:00 and 6:00, and 7:30 and 9:00. After tabulation by members of the society, the election results were announced to the students over the public address system. The mock election was coordinated by Jeanette Fallon, a sophomore.

The mock election was the climax of several long, hard weeks of campaigning by both political parties on campus.

Early in September, the Young Republicans brought Derwood Chase, Chairman of the State Conservatives for Goldwater, to the campus to speak. He was accompanied by the Young Girls. Mr. Vieira recently spoke on conservative and liberal views at a meeting that was open to the students. The YRs also had a radio spot on Casing the Campus which dealt with Goldwater's foreign affairs. Their most recent effort was assembly speaker Bob Stone. Mr. Stone is the state chairman of the Young Republicans and treasurer of the national YRs. He spoke on Goldwater and the Conservative movement and after his talk led a discussion on campaign techniques and election day.

The Young Democrats have had several open meetings at which Dr. Schlegel has presented the liberal point of view. Perhaps one of the most spectacular aspects of the campaigning was the Democratic rally they staged on Monday night. An address system was set up behind Jaraman with the major participants dressed in western garb. There was noise, singing, and rally speeches by representatives of the freshman and senior classes. Circling through the crowd and gathering comments from the spectators brought remarks such as these:

"Yes, I think the rally is effective. As long as the students can demonstrate it is a good thing. It shows they have spirit."

"We are seeing the democratic spirit and hearing the position of the President."

"The rally has greatly boosted the morale of the Democrats around campus."

"It has greatly stimulated public interest."

"I am glad to see the girls interested in something besides themselves."

"Magnificent!"

"Well produced."

"A good experience in democratic action."

Scattered among the crowd were several Goldwater people who demonstrated throughout the rally. In general, they felt that most of the people present at the rally were already for Johnson but that it was very effective in stirring up spirit among the Democrats. On their part, they felt their presence showed that the conservatives were not afraid to come out and favor the liberals.

Both groups have carried on extensive door-to-door campaigning throughout the dorms.

Longwood girls really jumped aboard the campaign bandwagon on October 20, as they welcomed Robert J. Corwin (Arlington) and J. Vaughan Gary (Richmond) to the campus.

Mr. Corbin, State Chairman of the Republican Party, and Mr. Gary of the House of Representatives were greeted by Young Republicans and Democrats on campus who talked politics with the guest at lunch. Following lunch, they spoke on the Republican and Democratic platforms and the presidential candidates to the students at an assembly. A reception was held afterwards for a further questioning session.

Don't forget the S. G. A. assembly for upperclassmen tonight at 6:15 and for Freshmen tomorrow at 5:00. This will be your opportunity to find out more about Student Government, so that you can be a better informed member of the association.

Missionary Visits Campus For Japan Talk

Mac Huslander, who has just returned from Japan, is visiting campuses during the academic year 1964-65 to talk with students about the relationship of the church to the situation in Japan today, especially in regard to the challenge it represents to the Student Christian Movement.

He will be meeting students who are interested in discovering the many and varied opportunities for service with the Church in areas of concern in the United States and overseas on November 4 and 5 at the Wesley Foundation.

Mac was a special-term missionary in Nagasaki for three years in education and youth work, where he has been deeply involved in the life of the people.

He has formed lasting relationships with the people of Japan, and especially the closeness he shared with the youth there has given him tremendous insights and sensitivity towards understanding the tensions and changes within Japan today, and towards understanding the culture and character of Japan.

Born in Waverly, New York, Mac attended Wyoming Seminary in Pennsylvania, Drew University, and was an exchange student to Howard University. His fields were Psychology and Sociology. In college Mac participated in the choir, Student Council, was chairman of the Honor System Committee and the Judicial Board.

He was also in the Methodist Student Movement and various committees of both the school and church. On his thoughts of the church and its mission, he writes: "The power of love is great and many. God has given me the mind and body and faith to sense these needs and desire to serve others. . . I believe that the power of love as exemplified by Christ, is the strongest force in the world. . ."

Longwood Education Courses Offer Closed Circuit Television

By Barbara Garrison

Closed circuit television is being offered for the first time at Longwood this semester. The courses which are taught "on the air" are speech 101 and psychology 256. The program, called "purely experimental" by Dr. Patterson, appears to have been accepted by the students.

The major advantage of television for a lecture course is that more students can be assigned to a professor. This frees other faculty members to concentrate on the more advanced courses.

The television studio is on the third floor of the Hiner Building. Students are placed in classrooms on the second floor. There is a "talk-back" provision so that students can ask questions. Their questions are heard by both the instructor and the students in the other classrooms.

Trouble Spots
According to Dr. Patterson, the major use of the closed circuit television in the future will probably be to build-up and use a video-tape library. Action teaching situations will be filmed and brought back here to be used in teacher training courses.

Although there seem to be no problems as far as students are concerned with the program, there are some technical difficulties that must be resolved. There are improvements that will be made with the equipment. One of the major problems deals with the presentation of the lectures. Dr. Robert Woodburn commented that action on the screen is most important for holding the attention of the students for fifty minutes. To overcome this, the cameramen make frequent and unusual shots with the camera. This creates the illusion of action, although there is actually a minimum of motion on the set.

Video Tapes

The speech department will continue to use television because video tapes can be made, and when shown back to the student, she can see herself in action and discover for herself where her faults lie.

There are several other possibilities for the classroom television. If more cables could be installed, classroom television could accommodate the overflow from Jaraman. Also, perhaps in the future, video tapes can be exchanged with other colleges which use classroom television.

VEA Luncheon Includes Talk On Pakistan

Mr. Harold K. Magnusson, Mr. Earl A. Rubley, and Dr. Charles P. Lane will attend the geography section of the Virginia Educational Association luncheon meeting in Richmond on October 30.

Dr. Lane and Mr. Magnusson are past presidents of the association, and Mr. Rubley is now Editor of the two publications put out by this society: The Bulletin and The Geogram.

The program this year will consist of a talk by Gary S. Dunbar, formerly a professor at Longwood and now chairman of the Department of Geography at the University of Virginia, on his year in Pakistan. Also, Col. and Mrs. E. G. von Orman will discuss their experiment of team teaching in geography at George Washington High School in Alexandria.

GOP Speaker

State Chairman of the Young Republicans, Robert Stone, spoke at assembly yesterday, giving students more information concerning presidential candidate Barry Goldwater. JoAnn Held and Kay Cullison are the YR girls.

How Much Do We Know?

Probably the most important election in this country will be held next Tuesday, November 3. This is for the election of the highest office in the land - that of the President of the United States.

The candidates are Barry Goldwater and Lyndon Johnson. In this as far as our knowledge should go? Of course, our quick response is a very definite NO. But do we know much more than the candidates' names?

In this time of rapid change, it is of vital importance that we keep ourselves constantly informed of the history-making events that are occurring and how each candidate is reacting to them.

Do we know how Goldwater feels about the U. N.? Do we know how Johnson will handle our foreign policy? There are many other similar questions that could be asked concerning the stands of the Presidential hopefuls.

Now we ask ourselves just how are we going to keep up with current events? How are we going to know the facts?

The key word to answer these questions is READ. Don't look just at the comic strips and the society page in the morning paper; peruse the first and second pages and of course, the editorial page. It only takes about fifteen minutes for a newspaper session, and will probably be one of the most beneficial quarter-hours spent during the day.

Morning and evening papers are easily obtained and if we find that we are not financially able to afford a subscription, the library provides newspapers that can be read free of charge. Speaking of the library, here we are able to find papers from all over the state and the large eastern cities. By glancing at a variety of papers, we may see an even broader view of current events and opinions.

Not only are we able to gain a great deal from newspapers, but there is also much information to be found in weekly news magazines. These are available at student rates and also may be found in the library.

How much do we know about the Presidential candidates - or many other important events for that matter? Let us answer "a great deal" because we keep informed by READING.

On Circus

Although I've only seen two Circuses, I can say this year's was the better. All the skits were first place material.

On the whole, there seemed to be more enthusiasm over the skits themselves than all of last year's put together.

I must admit that a week before Circus, with the exception of the freshman class, the upperclassmen were hiding their spirit. The majority of the classes just didn't seem to have the feeling of "Circus in the air."

But all that stockpile of hoo-ray and hoo-rah cut loose in the crucial moment and the backing was excellent.

Tension always builds up around this time of year, but it hit a new stratosphere with the coming of the 1964-65 Circus.

Perhaps it was because the moon was out, or maybe because it wasn't, but Circus always makes one feel closer to their classmates and even prouder, if possible, of their sister class. I for one was glad to be a part of it.

Identity Of Women Seen In 'Feminine Mystique'

The following passages are selections from The Feminine Mystique, by Mrs. Betty Friedan (New York: W. W. Norton and Company, 1963). Your thoughts and comments are welcome; however, the Editor urges a complete reading of the book, rather than basing one's opinion on these brief excerpts.

"The problem lay buried, unspoken for many years in the minds of American women. It was a strange stirring, a sense of dissatisfaction, a yearning that women suffered in the middle of the twentieth century. Each suburban wife struggled with it alone as she made the beds, shopped for the groceries, matched slipcover material, ate peanut butter sandwiches, chauffeured for the Cub Scouts and Brownies, lay beside her husband at night - she was afraid to ask even of herself - 'Is this all?'"

"... It is no longer possible to ignore that voice, to dismiss the desperation of so many American women. This is not what being a woman means, no matter what the experts say. And women who think it will be solved by more money, a bigger house, a second car, moving to a better suburb, often discover that it gets worse.

"... Are the women who finish college, the ones who once had dreams beyond housewifery, the ones who suffer the most? According to the experts, they are; yet one of these women holds a Ph.D., the other is a high school graduate.

"My days are all busy, and dull. All I ever do is mess around. I get up at eight - I make breakfast, do the dishes, have lunch, clean house, laundry and shop. Then it's supper dishes and I get to sit down a few minutes before the children go to bed... That's all there is to my day. It's just like any other housewife's day: hum-drum."

"I wash the dishes, rush the children off to school, dash out in the yard to cultivate the chrysanthemums, run back in to make a phone call about a committee meeting, help the youngest child build a blockhouse, spend 15 minutes skimming the newspaper so I can be well-informed. By noon I'm ready for a period rest. Very little of what I've done has been necessary or important. Yet, I look upon myself as one of the more relaxed housewives in my neighborhood. Most of my friends are even more frantic. In the past 40 years, we've come the full circle and the American wife is once again in a squirrel cage."

"... the problem that has no name is not a matter of loss of femininity or too much education or the demands of domesticity. It is far more important than anyone recognizes. It may well be the key to our future as a nation and a culture. We can no longer ignore that voice within women which says: 'I want something more than a husband and children and a home.'"

"... A subtle and almost unnoticed change has taken place in the academic culture for American women in the last 15 years. Under the influence of the feminine mystique, some college presidents and professors charged with the education of women have become more concerned about their students' future capacity for a happy married life than with their future use of trained intelligence. In fact, some leading educators of women concern themselves, conscientiously, with protecting students from the temptation to use their training. Students not to be creative or critical."

"... Instead of opening new horizons and wider worlds to able women, educators moved in the world of home and children. Instead of teaching truths to counter the popular prejudices of

Long History Of Clubs Shows Imagination On Part Of Coeds

By Maria Grant

It is rather ironic and a little hard to believe that the larger the student body at Longwood, the lesser the number of clubs. One thing is certain - the students "way back then" did not lack imagination and humor. See for yourself as our fictitious friend (we'll call her "AGE-LESS") turns back 76 olde clock again. It's 1888: Heavens! We had ever so many clubs started that year - the German Club was one of the first.

There was the Sea-Side Club whose colors were sea-green and lobster red (obviously) and had the motto: "sink or swim, live or die." The yell: "Remember the Maine, and our favorite pastime was gambling (?) Ye Selecte Members of Ye Olde Dominion had colors of stone blue and iron gray (from the mountains near which we live) and our favorite drink was The Thing (?) I can remember a few of the officers: Elsie Pierce was Chief Distiller (of wit); Mary Sparks - Chief Imaginator (of knowledge); and Helen Jones - Keeper of the Secret. And each member had an "odd" middle name like Mary Steved-Up Mofet, Emma "Ta-ger" Greer, Matilda "Mooer" Jones. A rather happy bunch, don't you think?

Composed of 18 girls named Mary, Ye Garden of Marys had as its motto: "Mary, Mary quite contrary..." In 1899 the Professional Hall was begun. Their motto: (mottoes were rather a novelty for some time) "To vanish in nonsense with the charms of sound."

They had a cute little yell (quite morbid, but cute): "Had a little dog named Jack Put him on the railroad track. Long came a engine, choo, choo, choo."

Cut e' little doggie right in two." The Mountain Club's colors were green, their flower the peach blossom. The members claimed as their favorite drink: apple jack, and the motto: "Study hard, sure to fail." They had rather interesting middle names, also, such as "Jigger," "Sin," and "Scrimp."

"We call a spade a spade" was the characteristic of the Tuxedo Club, which met in Jones' tobacco field. "Mary Black from Heckaback" Daniel, "Madge Wildfire" Goode, and "Sally in Our Alley" Spenser were some of the girls I remember who belonged.

Perhaps some of the later organizations on the campus were influenced by the Head Lights of 1899, whose colors were sun burn and red. Motto: "Forever we shine." Their members were classed as Beacon Lights, Lesser Lights, Outside Lights, and Lights Gone Out Mrs. Gulgley was Chief Light then.

Our first Glee Club was started around 1888 - forerunner of the choir, Madrigals, and chorus. It was a beginning, you know.

In 1900 many of our regional clubs came into being. The Hall-fax Club had three officers and three members with a motto: "Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow you think." (Seems to have been a prevalence of pessimism around that time.) They had a song, too: "O dat water-melon! Dat's de land de people tell on!"

Requirements for admission into "We Six": must be from Loudoun county. Must have intelligence and ability to speak on all subjects. Motto: "Six of one, and half a dozen of the other."

For the "mountain folk" there was the Pulaski Club whose members were classified as ordinary, extraordinary, and honorary. And there were seven members of the Tea Club which had the most frustrating of mottos:

One a zip, two a zip, Zipple, Zipple, zee; Rah, rah zip! Rah, rah ree!

What are we, what are we? We're the T, the T, the T. (Egad.) Would you believe that we had a Huyler-Lowrey Club? We did. Our yell: H.L.C. H.L.C. H.L.C. Huyler-Lowrey, Rah! Rah! Rei! We had a Chief of Commissary Department, a Box-Opener and a Sampler. Yes, Huyler-Lowrey's was candy. Yum.

Silveira Adds Flavor To Language Staff

By Diana Upshur

"It is a big experience to know different people," said a new professor in her hesitant but good English, "and I shall never forget the United States because Americans have tried to help us live free."

Dr. Maria Silveira is from Cuba, and she has recently joined the faculty of Longwood College as assistant professor in the Foreign Language department.

Teaching classes in beginning, intermediate, and advanced Spanish keeps her weekdays "mucho full," she says, but on weekends Dr. Silveira puts her college work aside and goes to Hopewell, Va., to be with her family. She has three daughters - two 12-year-old twins, and one 6-year-old. Her husband is a technician for a light chemical factory in Hopewell.

Before coming to Longwood, she taught Spanish courses in a Brooklyn, N.Y. high school. "The school system in Cuba differs a little from that of the U. S.," said Dr. Silveira. In Cuba one attends the lower grade levels for only eight to ten years, instead of our usual twelve. Then you must pass a test to get in Normal School.

During Normal School (which would be comparable to our 4-year college system), students do practice teaching in experimental schools just as we do. "But," Dr. Silveira remarked, "you have to pass an aptitude and maturity test in order to teach."

Cuba has four big Universities, and Dr. Silveira attended the newest one, Oriente University, where she received her M.A. and Ph.D. degrees. The Normal School from which she was graduated was built with the help of the Americans, she said.

Asked if she ever planned to return to Cuba she replied that she hoped only to visit the island occasionally on a vacation, adding that her daughters were adjusting quickly to life in the United States and liked it there "muchissimo!"

Green 'n Whites, Red 'n Whites Celebrate 'Plaid' Circus

Juniors Win Circus Honors, Sophs Capture Second Place

For the second year in a row, the red and white class of 1966 took first place in Circus. The skit "The One That Got Away" was led by co-chairmen Kaye Catron and Pat Burdette.

Opening to an air of mystery, the skit centered around two Russians, Comrade Tonsil played by Rusty Stephenson, and Comrade Chubbs, played by Pat Burdette. These two descended to the bottom of the sea to conquer Pearl City.

Upon reaching the city, though, they were met by staunch opposition which forced them to observe the Pearlarian way of life for two days instead of "sharing now" as Tonsil put it.

The Pearlarian life, based on the tie of family bonds, good entertainment, and democracy opened the eyes of both Russians: Tonsil, realizing its parallel to the American way of life, leaves, while Chubbs finally sees the truth and finds happiness in a new life.

Led by chairman Sue Goodes, the sophomore class of 1967 took second place in Circus this year. Their skit was a political satire on President Johnson's war on poverty.

The setting was a small farm where lives a farmer, Mr. M. I. Needy, played by Edwin Miles, and his many children. Although he and his family are perfectly happy, he is considered poverty-stricken. The government sends Mr. G. O. P. Helper, played by Sharon Williams, to help them rise above their poverty-stricken conditions." His help turns out to be a hindrance as machines and starched clothes turn happy-ness to misery. Order and happiness finally return to the farm as Mr. Helper finds that "you can't judge poverty by money alone, that it's what you do with what you have that really matters."

Blurp! Blurp!

The Juniors of '66 take first place in Circus with their story about Pearl City and its invasion by Comrades Tonsil and Chubbs. Inhabitants of the city give them a rough, but educational time.

"Blow It Up"

The class of 1965 brought an air of humorous mystery to the Circus stage. Their co-chairmen were Judy Spangler and Ann Hutchinson.

A convention was held on the moon with representatives from all the planets present. The meeting concerned problem was that the earth was in the way. A debate was held to decide the fate of earth with half in favor of blowing it up and the other half saving it.

A decision to compromise was made when a sudden interruption came: an astronaut from earth. The earth, too, was building a skyway but found the moon was in its way. The final decision—blow it up!

Let's Compromise

"The road will run over and under the earth..." Senior class of '65 debates new interplanetary skyway at convention on the moon. After much arguing, all agree to compromise. Two heads are better than one any old day, true?

Frosh Go Polynesian

The freshman class of 1968 portrayed a marriage — Polynesian style. Their co-chairmen were Judy Hall and Bernadette Schwartz.

Woozon marriages were decided by a foot race. The men chased the women and the one caught would be the mate, but most of the marriages were prearranged — every girl knew by whom she would be caught.

The chief's daughter, however, was supposed to marry someone she did not love.

She finally eloped with her true love and they snuck into the marriage ceremony. When her father discovered the deceit, he was at first irate, but finally realized the true meaning of marriage.

War On Poverty

The Sophs complain to Mr. GOP Helper that they're better off with what they started out with. Who needs a Super Duper Manure Scooper anyhow?

Drum Dance

Members of the Woozon Tribe do a dance prior to the marriage ceremony. The class of '68 shows that true love usually wins in the end—even in the Woozon way of life.

History Of LC Clubs Shows Coed Humor

There were the Witches Five from Salem Town, the "We Six" of 1960 joined with Fauquier and Clarke counties and became the L.F.C. Club, and there were also Our Eastern Shore Girls.

The Collision Club, started way back in '62 (and composed of 55 members), turned out to be one of the longest lasting — all the way up to the '60's.

Faculty members dearly loved the Dummy Club, for they were honorary dummies. Motto: "Not quality, but quantity." The pass-word: "Wisdom withers when we withdraw." And students dearly loved the Spooners of 1962. They never feared a lag in membership. Some vital (perhaps humorous) statistics:

Motto: "We prefer darkness rather than light."

Flower: tulips (two lips)

Alm in Life: To make two hearts beat as one

Members: Most desperate case J. Seagans and G. James etc. etc.

Another forerunner to some of the more musically inclined organizations was the Mendelssohn Society. A talented group. Quite. Not to be outdone by those "commoners" by the name of Mary, a new group with the query: "What line is as essential to the Normal School as the straight line is to geometry?" Answer: "Caroline, of course!"

So the Caroline Club, with eight members, was formed in 1962.

I'm not sure what their purpose was, but we had a Rain Crow Club which met at Buzzard Roost Hall (?) and its motto being (naturally): "Birds of a feather flock together."

We Normal School girls must have gone club crazy in 1962, for not less than 11 groups were begun, some of which were my favorites. The Matrimonial Club had a number of characteristics which were ever so nice.

- 1) Mission: to love
  - 2) Ambition: to wed
  - 3) Occupation: hoping against hope
  - 4) Prospects: everything awaits us but a man
  - 5) Flower: Bachelors' buttons
- With quite a humorous flavor, the Jolly Jollies were formed in '62. Their greeting: "ha! ha! ha!"
- Motto: "Live easy." Favorite expression: "Great man, I'm hungry!" Favorite occupation: bunning my, that word does get around.

The Non-Sleepers Club would apply quite well even today, and perhaps especially for freshmen.

Motto: "Late to bed and early to rise makes a student unhealthy, but exceedingly wise."

Colors: candle white and blue

Favorite dish: owl soup

Time of first retiring: when we hear the Matron coming.

Time of rising: as soon as she has said "good night."

Time of second rising: when she has caught us

Chief occupation: listening for the Matron's footsteps

Some of the more notorious members were given special titles, such as Main Transom Coverer, Chief Chair Knockover, Grand Candle Blower, etc.

"Do others or they'll do you" was the motto of the Theta Gamma Club of 1962. I don't recall exactly what they did. The Nohay Nine, on the other hand, did do something. Their favorite toast:

So as good as you are,
And as bad as I am,
As bad as I am,
As far as I am concerned, one of the most original clubs was the Koi Kat Kat Club of 1963. Their colors: Brown (ling), Gray

Favorite Flower: Hawthorne

Favorite occupation: reading

Favorite exclamation: Dickens

Favorite weapon: Caine

Favorite sport: Tennis

A Long and Short Club was begun in 1965. The funniest thing about it was the picture in the annual that year. It looked like a health manual showing the effects of gland trouble.

We might have rock and roll today, but in 1966 we had something better — a Mandolin and Guitar Club. Of course I believe they might have frowned upon the Beatles. Beasty of them.

One of the earliest area clubs was the one from Lynchburg—1967. Also in that year was the Kodak Club (a very professional looking group they were).

If one were inclined, one could be an I.M.P. Some probably had no problem getting in, but I dare say I know nothing about it. I feel sure there would be no need of a Tam O' Shanter Club today.

The Republique Francaise of the Le Circle Français in 1912.

Between 1912 and 1925 there was an epidemic of regional clubs. There seemed to be no end. A total of 25 or more groups sprang up from every corner of the state. I suppose it made one feel rather at home in a way.

Sprinkled in between all these area organizations were a few more interesting clubs. For example, in 1912 there was the Saints Club, whose motto was, "Live while you live," a Hunt Club in 1913 (a rough and ready looking group with their guns and odd looking hats), and the Camp Fire Girls in 1914 (I'm not sure that they bore any relation to the Girl Scouts because they were Indian squaw outfits).

Not to be outdone by the French enthusiasts, El Circulo Espanol was begun in 1921. Along about 1925 a Travelers Club was organized and in 1929 a Red Headed Club (even though gentlemen prefer blondes).

Between 1928 and 1930 there was, in complete contrast to the previous years, a sharp decline or disappearance of all but the home-town clubs. It was obvious that most of the early clubs were of short duration. But never fear — there were more to come still.

In the late 20's the "14 Club" appeared (something to do with Valentine's Day presumably). 1930 welcomed the still-present Granddaughters' Club, plus the Palette and Laitin Club. In the early 30's there was a Math Club, and a most successful Debate society.

Probably the oldest religious organization on campus is the BSU, begun in 1940. The others followed shortly at its heels.

In keeping with the times, a War Council to guide, direct and coordinate the war and defense activities on our campus was begun in 1943.

The year 1944 brought a rash the past, or critical ways of thinking against which prejudice cannot survive, educators handed girls a sophisticated woup of prescriptions and presentiments. "... A young man learns soon enough that he must decide who he wants to be. If he does not decide in junior high or high school or college, he must somehow come to grips with it by the time he is 25 or 30, or he is lost. The tragedy is, no one ever looks young American women in the eye and says, 'You have to decide what you want to do with your life, besides being your husband's wife and your children's mother.' The mystique answers the question, 'Who am I?' by saying, 'Tom's wife ...'

By choosing "eminence over painful growth to full identity, by never achieving that hard core of self that comes not from fantasy but from mastering reality, girls educated in this manner who accept this surreal choice are doomed to suffer ultimately that bored, diffuse feeling of purposelessness, non-existence, non-involvement with the world that can be called anomie, or lack of identity, or merely felt as the problem that has no name.

"I think this is the crisis of women growing up — a turning point from immaturity which has been called femininity to full human identity. For the first time in their history, women are becoming aware of an identity crisis, which began many generations ago and which will not end until they, or their daughters, turn an unknown corner and make of their intellect and their lives the new image that women so desperately need."

After that there was a great slackening off, until the present organizations are all that remain of what was quite a long line of forerunners. Our latest additions have been expressive of the present era — Nathaniel Macon Society, Young Republicans and Young Democrats.

As I look back I cannot help but feel that as our college matured so did its clubs.

FROM THE BOARD

What do you think about:

● the new sign-in time for Freshmen—12:00 on Friday and Sunday nights and 12:30 on Saturday nights?

● the revision of the marriage rule as passed by the Legislative Board—"If a student is married during the period from the opening of school until the end of the school year with the exception of scheduled holidays, she must have permission from her parents prior to the event, and this permission must be reported in writing to the Dean of Women before the marriage takes place. In a case of marriage during the scheduled holidays, the student must notify the Dean of Women within 24 hours upon her return to the college. In all cases in which the parents have not notified the Dean of Women, a letter will be sent home. Any student who violates this rule is also violating the Honor Code, as she is falsifying records with the intent to give untrue identification; therefore, she is liable to suspension."

● a revision of the Assembly Regulations?

● dates coming to pick up Longwood girls dressed with no socks, no shoes, shirt-tails hanging out, bermudas, and dungarees? How does this affect our school? How could we encourage our dates to dress properly? Remember that each girl is responsible for the behavior of her guests!

Please use the Student Government Suggestion Box or inform your class representatives of your reactions to the above. Through your interest and participation we can better serve the student body.

Freshmen, start thinking now about the two girls that you would like to represent your class on the Legislative Board. You will elect them some time before November 15.

The Legislative and Judicial Boards and House Council have been asked to remind a girl when seen sitting in a parked car around the campus if she has forgotten that this is an infraction of our rule. Students "must not sit in parked cars with a date at night within the city limits of Farmville."

Mr. Wells will attend the Legislative Board meeting tonight to discuss the actions of the Evaluations Committee. If you are interested in their decisions, you are welcome to attend this meeting at 7:00 p. m. in the Student Government Room.

Who's Who Names Twenty For Membership

Dr. Richard B. Brooks, Dean of Longwood College, announced in assembly today the newly elected members of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges. The criteria for consideration of possible members includes: 1) the student's scholarship (at least a 2.50 on the four point system), 2) her participation and leadership in academic and extra-curricular activities, and 3) her citizenship and service to the school and her promise of future usefulness. A senior may be nominated by any senior member of AKG by a nominating committee that consists of members of the administration and faculty department heads, and a third committee elects members to Who's Who from the list submitted by the two nominating groups. This third committee consists of: 1) the President of the College, 2) the Dean of the College, 3) the Dean of Women, and 4) the Registrar.

This year twenty girls were elected to members of this honorary organization, and they are the following: Anne Cordle, Sandra Craig, Milly Woodward, Melody Saunders, Kathy Dodge, Sarah Jane Lynch, Martha Garrett, Laraine McGhee, Bonnie Ramey, Wanda Old, Betty Shepherd, Lurline Robertson, Pat Wallace, Marcie Hynes, Kay Abernathy, Joyce Powell, Angel Stephenson, Sandra Jamison, Tom Sykes, and Martha Bergeron.

YWCA Service Plans Program, Newman Speaks

The Longwood YWCA Cabinet wishes to announce forthcoming plans for its Fall Spiritual Life Services, November 10-11, 1964. ## Judicial Board Presents Plans For '64-'65 Case Procedures

The judicial board of the Student Government Association has recently drawn up its case procedure for the 1964-1965 year. Each year the procedures are revised to fit the newly organized board.

Procedures for Investigation
Any known or possible violations should be reported IMMEDIATELY to the Chairman of the Judicial Board (or any other member) who then notifies the Vice-Chairman. The Vice-Chairman and a member of the Board, on the basis of the report, check confidentially those details needing verification before talking with the possible offender (e.g., sign-out cards, pink slips, late slips, etc.). If the investigation warrants a search, a special meeting is held, and permission for the search is granted by the Dean of Women. A girl is entitled to remain in her own room while it is being searched.

When a possible Judicial Board problem is brought to the Chairman, she and the Vice-Chairman exercise judgment as to the urgency of the investigation or trial. For instance, if it is plagiarism of a paper which was written several weeks earlier and collected by a professor; there is not the urgency that there would be in cases of stealing, classroom cheating, or questionable sobriety. The less urgent cases are handled by the Board at a time which does not put the members under great pressure relative to their academic work. Such cases may even wait until regular meeting time (which is Tuesday at 7:00 P.M.).

The Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and/or the member of the Board to whom the case was reported talk with the possible offender informing her of the investigation. She is allowed adequate time, if she desires, to obtain counsel within the student association.

If the violation should be one which, on examination, does not call for a formal Judicial Board trial, the issue is reported to and discussed at a regular meeting of the Board. If, however, after examination there is sufficient evidence to warrant a trial of the case, the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman so inform the possible violator, who may request that the charges made against her be reduced to writing. The accused is informed of the time of the trial, usually within 24 hours, and again is allowed time, if she desires, to seek counsel within the student association.

Some investigations arise from a misunderstanding of rules or from the fact that it may be a generally suspicious situation. If the report is of this kind, in order to clear the issue, the Vice-Chairman and/or a Board member talks with the person or

Johnson "Slides" Home, "Demos" Carry Virginia

Lyndon Baines Johnson has been elected to a four-year term as the 36th President of the United States.

Virginia's twelve electoral votes went back in the Democratic column for the first time since 1948.

Late last night, Mr. Johnson had piled up 456 electoral votes with only 270 needed to win. Besides his already won 38 states, Goldwater had won five states and 47 electoral votes.

On popular votes Mr. Johnson had 30,837,335; Goldwater 18,965,577. This gave Mr. Johnson more than 61 per cent of the major party vote.

Virginia results after 86 per cent of precincts were in showed only two Republican victories. Johnson carried the state 436,041 to 373,698. Senator Byrd was re-elected to the Senate. Satterfield, Downing, Hardy, Abbitt, Tuck, Marsh, Smith, Jennings, God Poff and Brownell were elected to the House.

In the national races the Democrats claimed 54 seats in the Senate. The Republicans 25, with 16 in doubt. The House had 148 elected Democrats, 21 Republicans, with 179 seats in doubt. In the contest for Governor, the Democrats had won six elections, the Republicans one, and 15 were in doubt.

National key races found Robert Kennedy defeating Senator Keating; Senator Edward Kennedy re-elected; Robert A. Taft, Jr. is leading Senator Stephen Young; and Miss Genevieve Blatt is leading Senator Scott in Pennsylvania.

Georgia went Republican for the first time and Vermont which has never voted anything but Republican since the first GOP candidate in 1856 went Democratic. Maine had voted Democratic only once before in a century.

Only deep in Dixie where Goldwater conservatism and vote against the civil rights law had appeal, did the Senator make any impressive showing

Board Of Visitors Of LC Meet Today On Campus, Make Plans For College

Today the Board of Visitors met on campus in regular quarterly session. The Board received and discussed reports from its committees and from President Lankford.

The meeting today was the second session of Longwood's new Board that from now on will control the expenditure of college funds, the making of rules and regulations, appointments, rates and the conferring of degrees.

Officially entitled "The Board of Visitors of Longwood College," the Board is composed of 12 members, 11 appointed by the Governor, and one ex-officio member, the Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Members of Board
Douglas A. Robertson, of Lynchburg, is Rector of the Board. Vice-rector is John Whitehead, of Radford. Mrs. Mosby Phlegar, of Norfolk, a Longwood alumna and former Assistant Dean of Women here, is Secretary.

Other members of the Board are B. Calvin Bass, of Rice; Ralph A. Beeton, of Arlington; Ernest P. Gates, of Chester; Dr. Duvahl Ridgway-Hull, of Roanoke, a Longwood alumna.

Also on the Board are W. H. King, of Burkeville; Mrs. John O. Marsh, Jr., of Strasburg, a Longwood alumna; E. Angus Powell, of Richmond; Hugh V. White, of Holland; and Dr. Woodrow W. Wilkerson, State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Need of Board
The Board is a relatively new group. Legislation authorizing the Board was passed by the General Assembly last spring. Previously, the responsibilities now held by the Board were in the hands of the State Board of Education. It was felt, however, that the public school system required its full time and that the needs and interests of Longwood College could best be served by placing it under a separate board of control.

Terms of Members
These new Board members are serving terms of two or four years. All future members will be appointed to four-year terms. No member other than the ex-officio member will be eligible to serve more than two successive terms. Although the Governor appoints all Board members, the Alumnae Association is authorized to recommend names for appointment.

So far two Board committees have been appointed—the Development Committee and the Executive Committee. The Executive committee is composed of the Rector, Vice-rector, and Mr. Bass. Those serving on the Development Committee are Mr. King, chairman, Dr. Ridgway-Hull, and Mr. Powell.

Shakespearean Tragedy Opens Season In Jarman

The Longwood Players in co-operation with the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs will present William Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet for their opening play of the season. The play will run through the 5, 6 and 7 of November, starting at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Romeo and Juliet was selected in connection with the 400th anniversary of Shakespearean drama and is one of the best known works of Shakespeare. Most theatrical audiences are familiar with this tragic tale of two star-crossed lovers who find death the only answer to their dilemma which is the result of a conflict with the adult generation. In the version to be presented here at Longwood, the director, Mr. David Wiley of the Speech and Drama Department, is attempting to lessen the romanticism of the play and to play-up its comical and tragic aspects.

Working closely with Mr. Wiley on the production will be the assistant director, Miss Judith Ann Crum, senior; technical director, Miss Glenda Diane Bigger, senior; and stage manager, Miss Patricia Lee Wallace, senior.

Lights for the play will be designed by Dr. Patton Lockwood. The crew chief, Miss Patricia Lynne Erickson, is in charge of the actual production. Sound will come under the direction of Miss Ellen Miller sophomore, and Miss Patricia Ann Dugan, junior, will be in charge of building the scenery which will involve one of the most elaborate sets used thus far in Jarman.

House Manager for Romeo and Juliet will be Miss Sarah

Frances Partridge, sophomore, and publicity is being handled by Miss Nancy Sovall Woltz, junior. Miss Virginia Lee Sharkey, senior, is to be the costume mistress and the collection of properties will come under the supervision of Miss Judith Anne Hedrick, sophomore.

Romeo will be played by Larry Garst, freshman; Juliet by Miss Mary Ann Chinn, freshman; the Nurse by Miss Mildred Gwaltney, sophomore; Tybalt by Joe Whitted, sophomore, Benvolio by Dave Rejvey, junior; Friar Laurence by Marshall Jones, sophomore; Mercutio by Clyde Clements, professor of English at Longwood; Escalus and the apothecary by Gerald Haslam, senior; Paris and Gregory by John Martin, freshman; Capulet by J. Patterson Rogers, junior; Lady Capulet by Miss Shirley Thimberlake, sophomore; Montague by Tom Bradley, sophomore, and Lady Montague by Miss Courtney Fox, sophomore.

Other members of the cast include Miss Linda Butler, sophomore, as the first watch; Miss Change Arendall, sophomore, as the first servant; Miss Barbara Agee, senior, as the first citizen; Miss Susanne Crisp, freshman, as the second citizen; Miss Ruth Mae Cruseberry, freshman, as the second servant; Miss Patricia Stryker, freshman, as the third watch; Miss Horatius Mitchell, freshman, as the second watch; Tom Walsher, as Peter; William Weiss, Jr., freshman, as the officer; Johnny Hunt, sophomore, as Abraham; Frlar John; and Ed Zimmerman, freshman, as Sampson and Balthezar.

Student vs Citizen

The case procedure of the 1964-65 judicial board should be read carefully and evaluated (see story on page 1). Although the present board has attempted to correct many of the faults of previous years, there are still several serious grievances in the procedure of investigation and trial.

What first brought a question to our minds was a statement by the executive members of the board concerning the need for new case procedure for each new board. The reason given for the new procedure was that the rules needed revision in order to fit the personality of the incoming boards. There seems to be a fallacy in this statement. If the procedure were a valid one, there would be no need for new procedure. It seems reasonable that there should be a standard set of rules for procedure that would be stable year after year. In this way the defendant would be completely familiar with the process. Judicial systems outside the school do not find it necessary to change their procedure to fit the personality of each new judge or jury.

We feel, however, that the real need for revision lies in the area of our guaranteed civil liberties. There seems to be a feeling that once you become a student of Longwood College, that you are no longer a citizen of the United States who by constitutional law is entitled to certain protections and rights.

It is our feeling that there should be a definite, unvarying amount of time between the defendants' notice of the upcoming trial and the trial itself. For example, the customary 48 to 72 hours for our national judicial system. We also strongly feel that the accused should have the right to counsel during the trial. Because of the circumstances, the defendant may be unusually nervous and have difficulty in answering the questions clearly. If she had counsel (a member of the student association), who would be in the room during the trial, this person could help her to understand precisely the information asked for and to know what answers she is required to give. Also of great importance, the defendants right to be faced with her accuser. She should be present during the testimony of all witnesses, both pro and con, so that she will be able to defend herself against the charges brought forth.

Another area of the procedure that directly denies our civil rights, deals with the searches conducted by the judicial board. The board has, in no legal respect, the right to search any student's room without her permission. If her permission is not granted, the only course open to the board is to obtain a search warrant from the proper police authorities. Under the United States Constitution, the permission of the Dean of Women is not sufficient to allow the board to conduct a search. When we rent a room from the school, it is the same as renting a room from any landlord, and no landlord has the right to grant permission for a search. This point has been contested in several other schools and upheld by the courts of law.

Once again, we would emphasize that we are not condemning the board. Thus far this year the present judicial board has made every effort to be just in its procedures. We do feel, however, that these basic civil liberties should be guaranteed to every student of Longwood College - for unless we are gravely mistaken, Farmville, Virginia is still a part of the United States.

A Politic Maneuver

The issue that has given rise to the most discussion this week on campus was the movement by the Young Democrats to make the assembly sponsored by the Young Republicans non-compulsory.

It is perfectly evident the spirit of this election year has taken root on this campus. There has been more political action on the part of the students than ever before in the history of this college.

We all have the fundamental rights to use the campaigning devices traditional in a political democracy. Among these devices are polls, slogans, letters-to-the-editor, rallies, songs and forums. Therefore, we commend the petitioning maneuver used by the Young Democrats because this was traditional and acceptable within the democratic spirit of a political campaign.

It has been in other elections that the shrewd use of political devices can possibly change the outcome of an election. Although the election results were not favorable to the Young Democrats, we still acknowledge the clever use of the devices of political machinery on the part of the Young Democrats.

LC Editors Hit Chicago, Tours, Talks Fill Time

Amid suitcases, hatboxes, books, coats, a guitar that unfortunately had to be left behind, general confusion, and many well wishes, Marcia Hayes, Donna Weatherly, and I (the I being Pat Wallace) set off for Chicago! Chicago! That wonderful town! The first leg of our long-awaited trip had finally begun.

We arrived in Washington after a hectic bus trip only to find that my luggage had been misplaced. Thus started a frantic search with my only consolation being that at least if it had left with the bus, it was headed for Chicago. With the help of several of the station personnel, the misplaced luggage was finally found among the cargo headed north.

After a good night's sleep (the last we were to have for the next three days), we made an early morning start for the airport. Marcia and I having had previous flying experience were supreme in our confidence and comforting to our novice, Donna.

It was a bumpy ride and near the terminal, my confidence began to fade. It hit rock bottom when the discussion of insurance began. The minute I opened the pamphlet the only two words that I saw on the page were "fatal" and "maimed." Only the encouragement of my two companions and reminders of "after all this is your seventh teeth flight," got me aboard the plane. Once aboard, however, some of my nervousness left, and then too there were two other delegates aboard the plane sitting right in front of us—the editor and managing editor of the UVA paper. The minute we started down the runway, however, there I was, gripping the seat arms and pulling with the pilot all the way until we were airborne. Thus I remained in a trance - like position until we reached O'Hare field in Chicago.

Once I had my feet on the ground, however, I was back to my old self. The trip into the hotel was crowded but exciting. Finally, dinner was served at the "Chicago Conrad Hilton," the world's "largest and friendliest" hotel. Inside the lobby was a mass of teeming delegates and seemingly endless lines of people waiting for registration. Here we began our four days of meeting countless journalism students from all over the United States and Canada.

We decided to skip the tour of the "Chicago Daily News" in favor of getting unpacked and organized. We dined that evening in the hotel coffee shop, accompanied by our two new friends from Virginia. Later there was the opening Convocation for the Associated Collegiate Press delegates and then we adjourned to the eighteenth floor for a get-together which ended in our putting on a series of musical productions. Right in the middle of "My Fair Lady," we were interrupted by a knock at the door and the announcement that "this is the hotel management, and we've had several complaints." Much to our relief, upon opening the door, we were confronted by "Frank from Maine" (the best we could do during the convention).

Two Week Lectures On "Abstract Art"

Recently a discussion of "Abstract Art—A Western Development" was delivered in the student lounge by Mr. Jack Two Week. Mr. Two Week came to Longwood under the visiting scholars program out of the University of Virginia.

Mr. Two Week is presently the Chairman of the Art Department at Yale and is one of the foremost international contemporary artists. Born in Berlin, Germany, Mr. Two Week came to America to attend Columbia University and the National Academy of Design. He was a member of the Art Student's League.

An abstract - expressionist painter, he has won first prize in the Biennial Exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery. Mr. Two Week has had twelve one-man shows since 1947, his latest being his "on at the Whitney Museum of Modern Art."

Mr. Two Week has been on exhibit in the Seattle World's Fair in 1962, the Guggenheim Museum in 1961, the U.S. Yugoslavia exhibition in Belgrade, and his paintings are in the permanent collections of the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

Mr. Two Week has taught at Queens College, Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, the Universities of Mississippi, Indiana, and Illinois, and completed a special art apprenticeship at the American University in Washington, D. C.

Along with his lecture of abstract art, Mr. Two Week brought several samples of his work for the students to view.

Simonini Speaks At Meeting On Usage

On November 3 Dr. Rinaldo C. Simonini, Jr. will speak to the teachers of Prince William County. This will be a teachers' meeting being held at Gar-Field High School. Dr. Simonini has been working in the northern Virginia counties of Arlington, Fairfax, and Prince William for the past several years as a speaker and consultant to the English teachers in developing a new curriculum.

Dr. Simonini's speech will show that there are some items of usage, mainly idioms, that should be of concern to teachers and speech of their students. In addition he will discuss other items of usage that should be reserved for study in an English classroom where students should be made aware of the facts of usage, the linguistic principles influencing usage, and the cultural levels, and media of communication involved.

Politics Changes South

By Barbara Melton

Longwood College recently presented its first Forum of the season.

On Tuesday, October 19, speaking to the mixed group of students and professors was Dr. George W. Spicer, professor of Constitutional Law at the University of Virginia. The topic of his lecture was "The Future of Politics in the South."

Dr. Spicer received his A.B. degree from Randolph - Macon College and his Ph.D. degree from Johns Hopkins University. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and the University of Virginia's Raven Society.

One of the major points that Dr. Spicer emphasized was that every Supreme Court decision is a political decision. By that he meant that every decision affects public policy in this country.

New Theory

The heart of Dr. Spicer's speech concerned reapportionment and the Supreme Court's role in reapportionment that certain states are currently undergoing. It is his opinion that if the states of the South were reapportioned, a new party system could develop. He believes that the new Republicans are now becoming concentrated in the cities of the South, and their power could be greatly increased by reapportionment. The Republicans are usually associated with industrial urban areas.

Furthermore, Dr. Spicer believes that this shift in Southern politics could help the Negro in his drive for equality in the South. It could increase the Negro and labor vote because there would be more competition in the South. It is this competition that would be a moderating influence in Congress.

Dr. Spicer emphasized many times that these theories are purely speculative on his part; however, his theories could have tremendous repercussions on the future of Southern politics.

Longwood Ends '64 Season

With Double Victory In Hockey

On October 29, the Longwood Varsity met Old Dominion College and led them to a smooth defeat of 5-1. In this game the Varsity's roughest this season, endurance and team work proved to be a big deciding factor for their win.

Early in the first half, Old Dominion was first to push through a score. It took the Ladies a while, but they tied the score 1-1 by the skillful hands of Barbara Ragland.

Old Dominion was an extremely fast team, but the close-knit team work of Longwood's blue 'n whites proved to be too much for speed to conquer.

It wasn't until the second half that the varsity began to shine. After ODC got the starting bluff and worked it into Longwood's circle, the defensive line decided to call a halt. Finally getting the ball out to the right wing, L.C.'s Lurline Robertson outran her opponent and passed to the center forward. All alone in an open field, she went straight in for the goal and Longwood was a notch higher by 2-1.

This was just the beginning of some very flashing scoring by the Ladies. Gaining the ball in the bully, Phyllis Collins scored with a straight, hard drive from the right side of the cage. The Ladies had more in store, though. Before this writer had time to make note of the score, Phyllis Collins had done it again. The fast OD team had begun to slow down and the Ladies took full advantage of it. Another bluff, another score. As if Old Dominion was standing still the Ladies put Carolyn Cline in charge of another goal to wind up the score column.

The Ladies' scoring had been a nice way to use up time in the half and it did just that. With only a few minutes left, Old Dominion's last attempts were futile.

The Ladies played a very impressive game even though the "casualties" were enough to dismay anyone. The grass had just been cut before the game and players on both teams found it hard to hold their footing. In the second half, Nancy Moorefield suffered a reassurance of knee trouble, which forced her to leave the game. Phyllis Collins and an opponent ran head-on into the end wall of the field. A bit stunned for only a while, they both returned to the game.

The second game proved to be no less rigid. With their win of 1-0 over OD's second team, these Ladies, too, felt the tension of injury. Colliding into an opponent, Ruth Lemberick carried off the field with a cut over her right eye - eleven stitches.

The Ladies were seemingly unaffected, as their game with Westhampton proved.

Second Game

In the second game of the week, the L. C. Blue and White Varsity Hockey Team made it four in a row, sweeping triumphant victories over Westhampton, 4-0 and 5-0. The Longwood Team played host to the opposing team last Saturday.

In the first game, the Longwood girls worked well together as a team, both offensively and defensively. The first half was highlighted by two goals scored by center forward Barbara Ragland. The forward line with good stickwork and fast playing backed by the defense tallied two more goals in the second half which were scored by Barbara Ragland and Carolyn Cline respectively, giving the Longwood girls a 4-0 victory.

In a well-played second game, the L. C. girls showed good teamwork in downing their opponents 5-0. In the first half of the game, center forward Ginny Morton pushed forward scoring two goals for the team. The second half was highlighted by a penalty goal made by inner Pat Brown. Ginny Morton and Connie Gallahan each added another goal.

The Longwood - Westhampton game marked the last home game of the season. Those playing for the blue and white team this year were: Nevis Born, Pat Brown, Carolyn Cline, Phyllis Collins, Diane Davis, Jayne Eddy, Cheramy Howe, Earlene Lang, and Phyllis Lasley. Other members of the team are Nancy Moorefield, Ruth Lemberick, Oz Parker, Barbara Ragland, Lurline Robertson, Pat Lydane, Ginny Morton, Nancy Maxey, Frances Stewart, Peggy Watkins, Karen Rider, Connie Sordelin, Rusty Stephenson, and Judy Wilson.

Co-Captains

Earlene Lang and Judy Wilson co-captained the 1964-1965 varsity squad. Other senior members playing in their last home game were goalie Cheramy Howe and right wing Lurline Robertson.

The Longwood team travels to Richmond on November 6 for the tournament games to be played at Westhampton.

Calendar Sale

Members of the Varsity Hockey Team are selling cloth calendars at $1.00 apiece. The profit will go towards sending Longwood girls to hockey camp. Those selling calendars are Nevis Born, Phyllis Lasley, Rose Lunsford, and Pat Lydane.

Dr. Lankford Speaks At Meet

Dr. Francis G. Lankford, Jr., president of Longwood College, recently spoke to alumni of the University of Virginia's School of Education at a breakfast meeting in Richmond.

The group, consisting of some 150 teachers and educational administrators attending the convention of the Virginia Education Association, heard Dr. Lankford discuss the "Need for In Service Education of Teachers and Other School Personnel in Virginia."

Dr. and Mrs. Lankford were guests at a reception in Richmond honoring Longwood College alumni attending the VEA convention.

Dr. Lankford spent three days this week in Laurinburg, N. C., as one of six prominent educators representing the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in a major evaluation of St. Andrews Presbyterian College, founded in 1961.

Huffman Combines Role Of Student, Professor

We all know what it is like to be a student here on the Longwood Campus, but how would you like the added challenge of also being a teacher? Miss Anne Hunter Huffman is assuring when she states that such a combination is a "delightful opportunity." This is her first year at Longwood as a student and as a teacher.

Miss Huffman came to Longwood to do graduate work in her major field which is art. Then she was offered a position as a part time physical education instructor. Miss Huffman's background certainly supports her ability to maintain the status of both a graduate student and a member of the teaching staff.

Miss Huffman is from Brownsburg, Va., and attended Eagle Rock High School near Roanoke. Then she chose William and Mary College in Williamsburg to be her alma mater and graduated with a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Art. In Physical Education she has done Extension work from William and Mary College at Camp Parra in Virginia Beach, and also Extension class work in Roanoke in connection with U. Va.

When Miss Huffman compares the Longwood Art Department with other schools she has studied at, she says, "It is one of the best qualified staffs I have come in contact with." She is also very impressed with the caliber of ability she has found in the students here. She enjoys her work in the Physical Education Department and holds a very high opinion of the girls she teaches. She teaches freshman physical education and also a sophomore physical education techniques class. She has enjoyed helping and working with the student assistants in her physical education classes.

Teaching is not a strange field for Miss Huffman, and the combination of Physical Education and Art is not a new one. She has taught for twelve years on a secondary level at Lord Botetourt High School in Daleville, Va. During this time she taught art and physical education, so her degree in art and her extension work in physical education has been put into practice 100 per cent.

Miss Huffman is a member of Chi Omega Social Sorority, the Roanoke Fine Arts Center, the VEA and the VAHPER. She enjoys week-end trips to the Homestead in Hot Springs to get in a little skiing. She drives a Buick Skylark and is living at the alumni quarters at Longwood Estate.

Miss Huffman is indeed a fine addition to our faculty and to our graduate program.

Longwood finishes up home hockey season with 5-1 and 1-0 win over Old Dominion and a 4-0 and 5-0 win over Westhampton.

Judicial Board Plans Procedures For Year

persons involved and report the issued closed.

Procedure for Trial Cases—Offenses warranting an appearance before the Board are as follows:

1. Major cases involving violations of the Honor Code, university conduct, and social regulations such as the drinking rule.

2. All other cases wherein the facts are not clear.

In such instances, it is to the girl's advantage that she have this opportunity to clarify any uncertainties in the case.

Person or persons involved are brought to first floor Student Building and asked to stay in a designated room until called to appear.

The proceedings are always confidential. The Vice-Chairman first presents to the Board all relevant facts. The accused, upon entering the government room, is formally charged, after which she will be in violation of the Honor Code should she lie.

The accused has the privilege of requesting witnesses to testify in her behalf. Witnesses may also be called by the Board and questioned. Any witness is subject to all of the provisions of the Honor Code. Therefore, any witness who gives false testimony may be subject to trial herself at a later time. The witness is always informed of the reason for her appearance at the trial.

The Board members may direct such questions as are relevant to the case to those appearing before them. After questioning, the person is asked to return to the designated room if the Board feels it may be necessary to talk with her again. If not, she is told that she may return to her dormitory.

After questioning and testimony are given, the Board takes time to weigh carefully and thoughtfully all evidence before passing judgment. THE ACCUSED IS ALWAYS CONSIDERED INNOCENT UNTIL PROVEN GUILTY.

If a specific case DOES NOT WARRANT AN APPEARANCE before the Board, the facts are given to the Vice-Chairman, who relates them to the entire Board. The case is discussed, a decision is made, and the Chairman informs the Board who the accused person is.

Involvement of Penalties—Any penalty given is approved by a majority vote of the Board. Penalties given by the Judicial Board may involve plain or strict campus, social probation, special probation, general probation, and recommendations for suspension or expulsion. In any event, the purpose of the penalty is to educate the student to the values of the Honor Tradition and the value of student self-government, which she has violated.

In those instances herein there is a recommendation for suspension or expulsion of a student or students, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Board consult directly with the Administrative Committee of the College (President of the College, Academic Dean, Dean of Women, and Present Advisor of the Judicial Board), after which the recommendations of the Judicial Board are either confirmed or returned to the Board for modification on the basis of suggestions from the Administrative Committee. The final responsibility in matters of suspension or expulsion will rest with the administration. Suspension or expulsion will rest with the administration.

The President of the College informs the accused student of her penalty in cases of suspension or expulsion. Her parents are notified by the Dean of Women. The girl always has the privilege of taking with her parents before the Dean of Women notifies them. In all other decisions, a member of the Board may not if a girl of her penalty, or else the accusation is brought before the Board and is told her penalty by the Chairman.

Probations and/or minor infractions will be posted on the bulletin board outside the office of the Dean of Women with the girl's name omitted and the rule infraction noted. The name omission is for the girl's benefit and gives the student body an opportunity to profit by seeing penalties for rule infractions. The names and facts involved in cases of suspension and expulsion will be reported to the student body at the discretion of the Judicial Board.

In the event that the accused withdraws from Longwood College while her case is being tried, the Board may, in its discretion, complete the investigation and assign a penalty.

A girl may request a review of her case through the Chairman of the Board if she can provide sufficient reasons warranting a review. Such reasons should be presented in writing.

BETTY WRIGHT

"Green" Senior Active In Campus Sports

If you are looking for a "true-blue" green and white, look no further than Betty Wright. Sometime just drop by and see her green and white bedspread or her green and white pajamas. In fact, just about anything you ask her about would be green and white.

Betty is a senior physical education major from Virginia Beach, Va. She is going to do her student teaching next block (three more days) in Roanoke. Betty has a wide variety of interests which she has shown in the many contributions she has made here. Since her freshman year, she has participated in the class sports of hockey, basketball, volleyball, and softball. Also in her four years she has helped with Christmas Pageant, Easter Pageant, May Day, and been a member of the Wesley Foundation.

In her freshman year, Betty was vice-president of her class and also hall president. She took part in Circus, frosh production, and the H2O Club Water Pageant. She also pledged Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority.

Betty was class president in her sophomore year. She was the Recreation Chairman for the Athletic Association Council and a member of the H2O Club.

As a junior, Betty was in charge of publicity and was the historian for the H2O Club. She was again the Recreation Chairman for the A.A. Council. Quite a feather in her cap was being elected Editor of the State VAHPER magazine.

Betty has already begun what looks to be a promising senior year. She was the recipient of a blue blazer, is the vice-president of Zeta Tau Alpha, was the Chairman of the A.A. Demonstration, is working on the Rotunda, and is the senior representative to the A.A. Council. And just think - this is only the first block!

Miss Huffman joins Physical Education Department as instructor and student body as graduate art student.

Spiritual Life Services Sponsored By YWCA

College, Duke Divinity School, Mr. Newman also holds a Master of Sacred Theology degree from Yale University. While at Duke and Yale, his studies were primarily centered in the areas of Philosophy and Historical Theology. In his earlier school days, Mr. Newman participated in all three "major" sports—football, basketball, and baseball. Also, he was once a Fort Worth city champion in tennis. During his undergraduate days at Wake Forest, he played basketball under Coach Horace "Bones" McKinney. However, he now confines his sporting activity to an occasional round of golf. Mr. Newman also served three years active duty as a commissioned officer in the United States Naval Reserve and retains his commission as a Lieutenant Junior Grade. While on active duty, he was stationed in Washington, D. C., Pensacola, Florida, and to his regret he was a sailor who did not get his feet wet—having had shore duty for the entire period of his active service.

Mr. Newman considers the college years "a most important yet most difficult" period for the development of attitudes and patterns of involvement in religious activities. He hopes to remind Longwood students in the forthcoming sessions that ultimately the purpose of education and the purpose of dynamic religious faith are precisely coincidental—the one purpose being the development and the realization of a full humanity within oneself.

Services will begin with the Tuesday assembly program at which time Mr. Newman will speak on the topic "Knowledge and the Knowledge of God." Following the assembly, an informal discussion group will be held in the Alumnae House. Another discussion group is planned for Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the "Y" Lounge. Services will also be held on Tuesday and Wednesday nights in Jarman Auditorium at 7 P.M. At these times, the topics "The Way to the Knowledge of and Response to the Knowledge of God" will be considered. In addition, Mr. Newman will be available for personal conferences while on campus. Services will be concluded with a short worship service and evaluation breakfast for members of the YWCA Cabinet on Thursday morning, November 12.

Such sessions have been set forth by the YWCA Cabinet for the Fall Spiritual Life Services. Further plans are also being made for additional services with another speaker in February. This reflects a change from the traditional Religious Emphasis Week since it was felt that more students would benefit by shorter sessions being held each semester. Nevertheless, both sessions will be centered upon the YWCA theme for the year, LEARNING AND LIVING. Among the concepts adopted by the "Y" are those of providing opportunities for each student to evaluate and strengthen her own faith and thus to become a better person for having experienced the Spiritual Life Services. Student participation is thus highly invited and encouraged for these forthcoming activities.

Lines pile up outside college bank before weekend.

Well that was the last straw. Boy, it took all the self-control I had not to turn her into a block of salt right on the spot.

Dr. Swertfeger Presides Over Philosophy Meet

The South Atlantic Philosophy of Education Society held its William and Mary recently. Dr. Floyd F. Swertfeger, of Longwood's Education Department, presided at the dinner meeting. Dean Earl Boggs, former Dean and Chairman of the Education Department at Longwood, but now Dean of the School of Education at the University of West Virginia, spoke on the "Philosophical Perspectives in Education."

Five papers in all were read to the members attending the society. Among these were one by a Catholic on education and the other by an existentialist on the same subject. At the meeting next year Dean Howard K. Holland of the College of William and Mary will head the society as its President.

Cut Slips

Effective October 31, all slips for excused absences issued by the office of the Dean or the College Physician must be turned in to the registrar's office within one week of the date on which they are issued. Failure to comply with this regulation will mean that the absences will not be considered as excused absences.

You would think that the wretched intruders could at least stay in their own air lanes on Halloween. Geez, was I ever relieved to get back into the safety of my own little cave. No, I think next year I'll just stay in my broom. I guess I'm not cut out for the ground work.

Besterman Lectures, Compares Writers

By Barbara Melton

study.

The first in the University Series lectures was presented at Longwood College, Tuesday, October 27. Speaking on the subject of Voltaire and Shakespeare was Theodore Besterman, director of the Institute et Musée Voltaire.

Mr. Besterman discussed one of the papers that Voltaire had written concerning Shakespeare's plays. Although the French were not ones to read English literature and appreciate English thought, they did attempt to recognize Shakespeare for the genius he was. Voltaire was quick to reprimand the French for showing their appreciation of an Englishman.

Criticize "Hamlet"

In another work Voltaire condemned Hamlet by describing it as "vulgar and barbarous." Voltaire called the play an "inspiration of a drunken savage."

The final part of Mr. Besterman's lecture compared Shakespeare to Racine. He said that Racine analyzes a situation, whereas Shakespeare simply tells a story. Shakespeare presents events that lead up to a climax; Racine only briefly exposes events, and the rest of the play deals with the repercussions of these events on the hero.

In spite of Mr. Besterman's reputation as a Voltaire scholar, he did not meet the expectations of the students and faculty of Longwood College. Although his lecture has some interesting points, it lacked a central thesis. Therefore, it seemed to consist of loosely connected parts rather than a well organized

Lacked Development

There were several points that could possibly have been more adequately developed. For instance, Mr. Besterman stated that Voltaire was responsible for introducing bardolatry into France. This could have been worked into a fuller discussion.

Another aspect that was briefly mentioned but could have been developed was the fact that Voltaire represented neo-classical criticism of Shakespeare's essential romanticism.

After the lecture, Mr. Besterman's reaction to questions was superficial and supercilious. He acted as though he resented being approached with questions by the faculty members, and this attitude would naturally inhibit any student response in the way of questions.

Nevertheless, the lecture did have its amusing moments. In the last of the questioning session when Mr. Besterman was at the height of haughtiness, the audience suddenly discovered that the mistress of ceremonies had fallen asleep.

Frosh Choose Class Officers; Spigle, President

Recently the Freshman Class held elections for their class officers and representatives. Those elected as class officers are: Pamela Ann Spigle, president; Arnee Sowell, vice - president; Jeannine Overman, secretary; and Margaret Bridges, treasurer.

Representatives were also elected: Mary Franklin Green and Nancy Britton, Judicial Board; Kay Boykin and Dean Newton, Legislative Board; and Ellen McClenden, Athletic Association.

Pam Spigle, from Richmond, is a French major. Along with being frosh president, Pam is in the Granddaughters Club and is a top rat for next year. Music is Arnee Sowell's main interest, especially voice. She hails from Virginia Beach, is majoring in Music, and she is in the choir. She has pledged Kappa Delta sorority. Jeannine Overman, from Colonial Heights, has varied interests - flowers, sewing, music. She plays the piano and organ, and has pledged Zeta Tau Alpha. Elementary Education is her major. Head Top Rat for the Class of '68, Margaret Bridges, from Richmond, has chosen English for her major. Interests include Kappa Delta sorority, folk music and reading.

Mechanicsville is home to Mary Franklin Green, a Biology major. She says she has no outstanding hobbies, but likes cheering. She has pledged Zeta Tau Alpha sorority. Nancy Britton, the other Judicial Board Representative, from Roanoke, is majoring in Sociology. She likes to knit, and is a member of the Granddaughter's Club and the B.S.U. Kay Boykin and Dean Newton, Legislative Board members, come from Chesapeake and Fredericksburg, respectively. Kay, who has pledged Sigma Kappa, is majoring in Elementary Education.

RPI Professors Visits Longwood English Group

Longwood's Department of English, Speech, and Dramatic Art will be visited on November 13 by professors from Richmond Professional Institute interested in developing a teacher education program.

Mrs. Jeanne S. Lynch, a Longwood graduate and assistant professor of English Education at R.P.I., is in charge of arrangements for the group including Mr. James Bailey, director of the School of Education; Mr. Vincent L. Sexton, instructor of History Education; and Mr. Glenn Murphy, assistant professor of Science Education.

The R.P.I. group will visit Mr. Gresham's class in "The Teaching of English" and will consult with Dr. Simonini and other members of the English staff during the morning.

Longwood Board Estimates 65% Student Increase By '72

A projected student enrollment increase of 65 per cent by 1972 has been approved by the Longwood College Board of Visitors. Meeting Wednesday on the college campus, in its first quarterly session, the board authorized the college's administration to proceed with plans that call for an increase in the number of students from a current enrollment of 1438 to a student body of some 2400 during the next eight years.

Emphasizing that the anticipated enrollment increase would be gradual and orderly, W. H. King, of Burkeville, chairman of the board's committee on development, pointed out that the increase to 2400 is based upon a conservative estimate of the demands for higher education that the young women of Virginia will make upon the state's colleges between now and 1972.

Noting that only five per cent of Longwood's present enrollment is composed of out-of-state students, President Francis G. Lankford, Jr., indicated the rapidly increasing enrollment pressure upon the college by stating that as of October 21, some 861 applications for admission had been received, as compared with 200 similar applications on the same date a year ago.

He further noted that at the present rate more than 2000 applications for admission next fall will have been received by the February 1 deadline and that of this number present facilities will permit the enrollment of only 430 new students in 1965-66.

Dr. Lankford estimated that an increased enrollment to as many as 2400 students could be accomplished with a capital outlay of approximately $5 1/2 million on development, are being prepared in response to a request from Governor Harrison to all state colleges that they submit by December 1 tentative plans outlining their contemplated developmental needs for the period 1964-72.

Walter Robert Delivers Recital

Walter Robert, an outstanding pianist from Indiana University and a former teacher of Dr. Sterling C. Adams, visited Longwood's campus on Saturday, November 7, as guest of the Music Department. He gave a recital concentrating on selections by Brahms, Schumann, and Chopin. This was followed by a master class; the following eight girls participated: Nola Ryan, Sharon Powell, Gail Milstead, Sue Ramsey, Diane Cross, Ruth Morehead, Phyllis Utz, and Christine Mannina. Mr. Robert gave helpful criticisms and showed the students different technique skills.

Newman Speaks

Rev. Newman will speak tonight in Jarman Auditorium at 7 p.m.

AKG Taps Twelve Into Membership

Longwood's leadership fraternity, Alpha Kappa Gamma, tapped twelve new members into its organization during assembly in Jarman Auditorium Tuesday, November 3. These were: seniors, Ann Cardie, Barbara Jo Crumley, Kathy Dodge, Maria Grant, Sandra Jamison, Pauline Perrow, Joyce Powell, Angel Stephenson, and Judy Wilson; and juniors, Harriet Anderson, Mary Lee Shoulders, and Linda Bassford. These girls were chosen on the basis of strength shown in at least one of the following in at least one of the following collegiate activities: scholarship, athletics, campus leadership, and social leadership.

Longwood is proud in being a co-founder of Alpha Kappa Gamma. Originally called Alpha Delta Rho at Longwood, the aims and qualifications for membership were similar to those of the leadership fraternity of the University of South Carolina so the two united in 1928 and became a national organization called Alpha Kappa Gamma. At this time Alpha Delta Rho became the Joan Circle. It like the five other circles is named after a famous woman who set the precedent for qualifications or an AKG member. The six circles, all of which are in the south, have as their patron saint, Jane Addams.

Alpha Kappa Gamma holds two conventions each year: the Spring Council meeting for planning, and the Fall Convention at which time they elect national officers. This organization also publishes an annual magazine in the spring, The Torch Bearer.

Alpha Kappa Gamma has four main purposes which are: 1) "to foster high ideals and set up high standards for those women who have proven themselves most eminent in constructive leadership among their fellow students, 2) "to promote desirable coordination of various college activities and organizations; 3) "to preserve the ideals and traditions of the institutions, and 4) "to bring together the students."

Douglas A. Robertson, of Lynchburg, rector of Longwood's independent board of control, explained that the projections now undertaken by the college administration, in close cooperation with the board's committee

Longwood Hosts High School Girls This Weekend

On November 14th Longwood will play host to about 150 high school students from various schools throughout Virginia. Members of the Granddaughters Club will act as hostesses.

The guests will register in the Rotunda from 9:00 a.m. until noon. From 9:00 a.m. until 11:00 a.m. the high school students will have an opportunity to attend actual college classes. At 11:00 a.m. there will be a general meeting at which time the department heads will be introduced. Conferences with these heads will follow the general meeting. All high school guests will be the guests of Longwood College for lunch at 12:05 in the main dining hall. At 1:00 p.m. the visitors will see pictures of various college activities on film. This film was made by Dr. Brumfield. After the film, members of the Granddaughters Club will conduct campus tours for the interested high school guests.

Leonhardt Performs On Harpsichord; Holds Master Class For Students

Gustav Leonhardt, noted organist-harpsichordist of international fame, will be visiting Longwood on Thursday, November 12. After holding a master class for all interested students on the new Schlicker organ, Professor Leonhardt will perform on the college harpsichord for the student body at 8 p.m.

Born in Holland, Professor Leonhardt became a student of Edward Muller in Basel, Switzerland. He graduated in 1950 as Soloist Diploma cum laude, and was appointed professor at the State Academy of Music in Vienna. Later, he performed as organist of the French Reformed Church in Amsterdam and as Professor of the Amsterdam Conservatory.

The famous performer has appeared on television in Holland and Sweden, and has made several recordings and publications. He is leader of the Leonhardt Consort and a member of the Quadre Amsterdian Ensemble. In recent years Professor Leonhardt has held concert tours in the United States and Canada. Currently, he performed in Washington, D. C., and plans to visit Cornell and the University of California.

Professor Leonhardt comes to Longwood by the invitation of Dr. Joanne Curmish who had the privilege of studying with him at The International Summer School for Organists in Haarlem.

Holland. Being very popular in this country, he has numerous admirers some of whom will attend the concert Thursday night from Mary Washington, The University of Richmond, and Washington, D. C.

It is indeed an honor to have Gustav Leonhardt as a guest at Longwood, and it is hoped that all students will appreciate this valuable opportunity to listen to a brilliant and enjoyable performance.

MR. LEONHARDT

Campus Civil Liberties

The chairman of the Judicial board has written a response to last week's editorial, "Student vs. Citizen," which has cleared up some of the confusion surrounding the recently published case procedure.

There are, however, some points on which we still differ. First, we would like to make clear that in the last editorial, we intended in no way to parallel with the national Judicial system, but merely used it as an example that would be familiar to a majority of the present board. The Rotunda feels that the board members have done everything in their power to ensure fair and just treatment to student offenders. The fault lies not in the board, but in the system itself. We are not thinking of the present. We feel that if certain basic freedoms are not guaranteed in the future, we will have no relation to national or state laws which we realize the board has no authority over, but to the constitutional liberties of every person — their right to human dignity.

We have compiled seven points that have proved very successful in numerous other schools. Through knowledge of the Judicial systems of such campuses as the University of North Carolina, Vassar, Holyoke, Ames Scott, and Sweetbrier, we have incorporated some features that might be used to improve our own system.

1) The right of counsel. We are aware that the student is considered innocent by the board, but she is being charged, if not by the board by another student, and we feel that the knowledge of this is a definite psychological strain. Although it is agreed that the student, herself, best knows the facts of the case, we also know that the emotional strain of the knowledge that someone has charged her with committing an offense causes extreme nervousness on the part of the accused and can cause difficulty in answering questions. We also realize that there will be times when the counsel will cause extra time and work because of objections to questions or the way questions are framed, but we feel that the student has the right to come away from a trial with the feeling that she has been given every opportunity and that there has been someone in there fighting for her.

A question by the board might, unexpectedly, be framed in a manner that would require an answer from the student that would tend to add to the accused's appearance of guilt. The counsel could ask that the question be asked in another manner that would reveal the same information but in a different light. It is difficult for any group, no matter how conscientious, to remain completely objective toward a person who refuses to answer questions or constantly asks that a question be rephrased. Here, too, would be an area in which counsel would be beneficial.

2) The right to hear a testimony. There is no argument against this right that we feel is in anyway valid. A person has every right to know what is being said both for and against her. If the student does not know what the witnesses have said, she has no way of knowing that she can say or present to clear up any misconception that may develop around what a witness may have seen in relation to a case. There may be "hard feelings" that develop during a case in this manner, but we feel that hard feelings do not excuse this neglect of basic rights of the individual.

3) A separation of powers. We feel that there should be an attorney general's staff (or some similar group — this name was used on other campuses and is not intended as a carry-over from the national judiciary) to conduct the investigation and to present the facts to the board. The members of this group should be in no way connected with the board. We all know from personal experience that there is no possible way that we can investigate the facts of the case and remain completely objective. This is, unfortunately, a flaw of human nature.

4) A time interval. We still feel that the student, in many cases, needs more than twenty-four hours between notice and the trial itself. She would have time to seek counsel, go over the case with her, and think about the facts.

We feel that this is particularly necessary in the cases dealing with questionable sobriety. Students accused of this offense have, in the past, been tried at late hours while still under the influence of alcohol. In this state they have not been able to answer questions clearly. There may be extenuating circumstances to the case which she would not be able to convey at the time. It has been stated that in these cases, the only way to prove her innocence or guilt is to try the case right then. We feel that witnesses to her condition would be as effective. Here, again, we are told that many times a roommate will not testify against the student. But, we feel that if we are to have a working honor code, trust must be placed in the student body. We are not naive enough to suggest that the student would, in all cases, uphold their responsibility, but we feel that it would be better to lose the code than to infringe on the individuals' rights. In this manner the Judicial board would have unscheduled trials only if the student waived her time interval which is her right and hers alone and would need time to be served for the board.

5) Average records. We would also suggest that a tape recorder, instead of a member keeping notes, be used to keep accurate records of the proceedings.

6) Illegal searches. We not only feel, but know, that there is no valid argument against this point. We have not, nor do we suggest that the police be called in for arrestation which, we agree, would bring unnecessary publicity to the campus and the student. If the board, when they felt a search was necessary, would call the members of the dorm together, and explain the need for the search in the case, we do not feel that there would be a great deal of opposition from the students. If some students refused, after consultation to allow their room to be searched, then the board could advise a search warrant from the proper authorities and have every legal right to conduct the search. Again we cannot see that the student would, in all cases, uphold their responsibility, but we feel that it would be better to lose the code than to infringe on the individuals' rights. In this manner the Judicial board would have unscheduled trials only if the student waived her time interval which is her right and hers alone and would need time to be served for the board.

7) Newspaper coverage of the trials. We feel that a monthly report in the newspaper of the trials, which would be a monthly course would be beneficial to both the students and the Judicial board. It would make student members of the often flimsy job performed by the board and create interest in the honor system of the school.

The Rotunda feels that it is able to have really effective judicial system there must be the existence of trust between the students and their elected officers and these must cherish rights must be guaranteed.

Judicial Reviews Case Revisions, Answers Queries

Dear Editor:

In accordance with Article III, Section VII of the Constitution of the Student Government Association, the Judicial Board has recently established and published the rules of its procedures. The board would like to take this opportunity to further explain its procedures and to attempt to answer a number of questions which were raised in last week's editorial, "Student vs. Citizen," as many such questions were considered and discussed by the board at great length in preparing the current procedures.

First of all, may we say that this is the first revision of the Judicial case procedures to be drawn up. During the 1963-64 session, the board completed the first such written procedure to be distributed to the student body. This was in an attempt to have such a procedure to guide the board and to guarantee the students a consistent policy in the handling of cases.

Indeed it is difficult to sit down and draft a perfectly functioning case procedure to fit all occasions and circumstances. Although the current board did not feel the need for radical changes, based upon its actual experience, it did see the need for revision, improvements, and clarification which would be for the benefit of all.

The need for change also comes about when new ideas and improvements are suggested by the student body. These changes are not so much to the "personality" of the board but rather the "personality" of the student body, which changes from year to year, and is reflected in the persons whom the students elect as their representatives. As the rules change due to changes in the basic personality of the students and in accordance with the times, the procedures may be modified. The goal for which we are striving in the evolution of a successful case procedure is one flexible enough to allow for the incorporation of constructive ideas for change while remaining stable enough to assure the students of maximum protection.

Secondly, in connection with all that is to follow in this letter, we must clear up the misconception that it is the Judicial Board as a type of legal body which can be exactly paralleled by a similarly functioning judicial system outside the school. Life in the college community is a unique experience, for here student conduct is regulated by rules which, for the most part, are totally unrelated to any state or national laws. And the students themselves accept these rules as necessary for the maintenance of proper college standards where so many girls live in such close association. Similarly the board which deals with the violation of these rules must also be a type of legal body in its structure and operation. The Judicial Board is not designed to exactly parallel the legal structure of our state and national judiciaries. It does not claim to have such legal authority. The board does not concern itself with the interpretation or enforcement of state or national law. Its purpose is simply to provide a structure for the students to uphold the standards of Longwood College through the principle of government by one's peers. This distinction having been made, one sees why it is difficult — if not impossible — to make parallels between the operation of the state and/or national judiciary and the judicial system which functions within the college community.

When one realizes that all of the persons involved in any of the Judicial Board hearings are students with classes and other responsibilities to which to attend and also considers that student self-government is not intended to be as rigid and formal as its proceedings as judicial systems outside the school, one perceives the practical problems which confronts attempting to set up a "definite, unvarying amount of time" or "twenty notice of the trial and the trial itself. When a student is informed that an investigation is being made, she is allowed adequate time to obtain counsel within the student association. If the investigation results in sufficient evidence to warrant a trial, the possible offender is so informed and the time of the trial is set. Again the student is allowed time to seek counsel within the association and to arrange for her witnesses. The board attempts to establish the time of the trial when it will be convenient for all parties concerned. Usually this is within twenty-four hours, for to leave the case pending for a greater length of time leaves everyone in a state of grave uncertainty and concern. Furthermore, in such cases in which a girl's honor is in question, it is to her advantage to have the situation cleared up as quickly as possible.

One of the reasons that the possible offender does not have to conduct to assist her in the actual presentation of her case to the board is directly related to the fact we have previously discussed, the Judicial Board does not claim the authority to function as a formal court of law. The board wants to avoid such a legalistic atmosphere which would put the students under great strain; we prefer to conduct matters on the more informal level of student interaction and cooperation. In addition, the girl at the outset of the trial is considered innocent by the board. She does not have to prove herself innocent and thus does not need a defense counsel since she does not have to be on the defensive. It is felt that she should a student have this type of counsel to assist her within the government room during the trial, it might not only lead to an atmosphere too legalistic in nature, but might also result in the unfortunate situation of undue emphasis on the part of the board in defending itself rather than the student whose welfare should be and is its chief concern. Furthermore, we might add that it is to the student's own advantage that she be allowed to present her case herself, since she best knows the facts involved and can best clarify any questions which might arise.

Concerning the student's right to face her accusers, we must only state this procedure always followed in all Honor Code cases, but other cases are generally handled in the same manner. The student is always informed of the investigation and why it is taking place. Should a trial be necessary, the student is in each case informed of the charges against her, which she may request be read aloud in writing. It is only on these specifically stated charges that the trial can be conducted. The student has the right to lay witnesses (within the student association) whom she requests. For the benefit of all concerned, to provide more freedom of response, and to avoid any possible confusion, the student is not present during the testimony of the witnesses in the case.

In the area of search procedures, again it is difficult in the college community to set up exact parallels. The Judicial Board has been elected by the students to do a job for them. In the case of widespread stealing on the campus, the student body expresses concern that something be done to check this dishonesty and to restore to the property of each individual, as well as the good name of the college. The Judicial Board complies with the wishes of the student body in conducting searches when they feel that these may be vital in order to rectify the dishonesty of the campus community and the necessity of the job which the board performs, perhaps he would rather that the police be called in on all such cases, that they handle all investigations and searches, and that violators be prosecuted in a court of law. However, the board feels that this would place the students at a greater disadvantage and inconvenience, as well as giving due a bit of unfavorable publicity to the school's reputation. In the college community where every honest and responsible student should be genuinely concerned that such things be put to an end, permission from the Dean of Women for the board to conduct a search should be recognized as sufficient. In addition this method of receiving permission for a search does not involve as much time-consuming red tape and allows the board to go directly to work when time may be a most crucial factor. As an added advantage and protection to the student, any student is allowed to remain in her own room while it is being searched.

The board appreciates your questions and this opportunity to further clarify its case procedures. It is through such exchange of ideas that we may have a closer understanding between the student body and the board, a goal which is foremost to our minds. In keeping with this idea, we would urge any member of the student body to please feel free to discuss any questions they may have concerning the board's procedures with any member of the group.

McClung Fears Loose Morality, Vice Increase

Dear Editor:

Does Longwood College need to change its rules and regulations to reflect a loose morality, and decaying civilization? I prefer to think Longwood College should continue to stand for high standards among which is a respect for law, order, and tradition.

I am sure that many parents sent their daughters to Longwood College because of the no drinking policy on campus and at Hampden-Sydney social functions. You have implied that what parents think matters not in the school where they put their daughters and where they are paying their way. I think you are very wrong.

As to maturity, one of the marks of an emotionally mature person is a reasonable amount of respect for law and tradition. Since this is true, it seems that a part of the maturing process for students is to learn and tradition.

For the best welfare of students at Longwood and also the welfare of the community, I hope the administration will not be swayed by the recent editorial appearing in the Rotunda.

Sincerely yours,
W. O. McClung

Simkins Article Reveals South, Defends Dogmas

By Barbara Melton

The reputation of the region of the U. S. below the Potomac today suffers from the same forces from which the Middle Ages suffered at the hands of historians during the Enlightenment. This is the thesis of Dr. Francis Butler Simkins' article, "Tolerating the South's Past," which was recently published in the Perspectives of Southern History. Dr. Simkins maintains that the Old South is judged by the terms of 20th Century America rather than by its own terms.

America today governs prevalent in the Old South. Some of these dogmas are: separation of Church and State, compulsory school attendance, nationalism over provincialism, and freedom of slavery. Nevertheless, Dr. Simkins believes, these are the criteria on which historians base their criticism of the South. To do this is to violate the code of the historian: "... to appraise the past by standards other than those of the present."

Dr. Simkins devotes the rest of the article to an explanation and defense of the dogmas of the South, and an attempt to have his readers tolerate the South's past.

Although Dr. Simkins recognizes that the white man has "sharpened the color line and took business and residential opportunities away from the black man," he writes that the Negro in the Old South was never enthusiastic in his demand for social equality. For example, the Negro "in withdrawing from the white churches... surrendered the element of social intimacy with the white man which he had experienced under slavery."

Dr. Simkins defends Southern creativity by explaining what he calls the creative areas of the Southern agriculture and literature. It is the Southern gentleman who attempts to re-

Longwood 'Ladies' Down Two Teams; Make Good Showing At Tourney

The LC Blue and Whites once to win, downing Mary Washington 9-0 and then the Richmond Club 3-2 in the Tidewater Tournament. The tournament was held at Westhampton College this past weekend.

In the first game, the Longwood Ladies definitely outplayed their MW opponents, both defensively and offensively. The Longwood forward line, with quick pass plays and fast maneuvering, scored four goals in the first half. In a well-played second half, the Ladies added five more goals, slaughtering their opponents 9-0. In the scoring column, Carolyn Cline led the way with five goals; Barbara Ragland, three goals; and Phyllis Collins with one goal. The LC defense was able to halt the Mary Washington team from scoring numerous times.

In the second game, the Longwood team edged the Richmond Club 3-2, defeating them for the second time in the history of Longwood College. The LC girls started off with a bang when Carolyn Cline scored the first goal in the first two minutes of the game. The Richmond Club (composed mainly of high school coaches and college coaches) quickly added another goal, making it a 1-1 deadlock. Before the end of the first half, the Longwood girls, with good teamwork and fast playing, added another goal and pulled out in front of the Richmond Club 2-1. The strong aggressive Richmond team bounced back adding another goal which was hot enough to tie the Ladies. In a closely knit game, the Longwood girls played one of their best games in defeating the strongest opposition that they have met this year.

Summer Session Set For Change In Coming Year

At its November 4 meeting the faculty approved several actions taken by the Academic Policies Committee and voted to change the summer school calendar. Since these several actions taken by the faculty will affect many students who plan to attend summer sessions at Longwood or elsewhere, this means is taken to inform Longwood students of these decisions. Further, if you plan to attend the 1965 Summer Session at Longwood, you are asked to complete the questionnaire at the bottom of this page and return it to the above office by Saturday, November 14.

Four motions were passed by the Academic Policies Committee at its October 27 meeting and approved by the faculty. These motions are:

1. Students on academic probation may not transfer to Longwood College credit earned at other institutions.
2. The policy of accepting all grades earned in other colleges on an equal basis with grades earned at Longwood College is discontinued. Grades earned at other institutions will, in the future, be transferred to Longwood College as "C-".
3. A grade of "Incomplete" (I) will revert automatically to a grade of "F" after one semester if the necessary make-up work has not been completed.
4. Permission to take off-campus work in other institutions which will be transferred as credit to Longwood College must be obtained from the Dean prior to the taking on such work.

The summer school calendar for the 1965 Summer Session at Longwood will consist of two six-week terms during which a student may take as much as fourteen semester hours of work. This calendar was adopted to provide a more practicable and meaningful way whereby a student may accelerate his program and graduate within three calendar years. In effect, Longwood College is embarking upon a year-round academic calendar.

A NEWS

The class hockey games are well under way. The sister class games were played November 2. The Freshman team was victorious over the Junior team, 5-1. The Sophomores were also victorious, with a 3-0 shut-out over the Senior team. November 3 proved to be another victory day for the Freshmen. In an exciting game, especially the second half, they topped the Seniors, 3-2.

Just before this game Color Rush was run. The Green and Whites took the lead with four wins and three losses.

The talks concerning the use of the Athletic Association golf clubs were postponed November 5. There's still lots of favorable golf weather left so take advantage of this equipment.

Work begins for the next Jarman Production, "Electro" this week. If you are interested in working on a crew, watch the Longwood Players bulletin board for the list of crew chiefs, or see Dannie Bieger, Libby Sutpin, or Marcia Sigfried.

Hockey Season Proves Success For LC Team

by Sharon Williams

The varsity hockey team ended their season last week with their game against Westhampton College. It's been quite a season for the Ladies who finished with a 4-1-1 record.

Starting the season off against the semi-professional club, the Polyannas of Richmond, the Ladies hit with the force of holy moly. The prominent factors of their 6-0 win was their stand-by endurance in the last half and their teamwork throughout the whole game. A very impressive way to start the season, the Ladies looked like a team that had been playing together for years, but that still had the freshness and vitality of a kid with a new toy on Christmas morning.

In their second game against Lynchburg, the Ladies put on an exhibition of stick-work and ball control. In a hardly believable fashion, the varsity outplayed the game with such skill that Lynchburg barely had a chance. The defensive unit came through in grand style to help the offense blank Lynchburg 3-0.

The Ladies had gone up so high that there was practically no place to go but down. And down they went at the hands of Madison College.

Backed against a wall of 4-1, the Ladies just couldn't come through. Try as they might, they couldn't get the teamwork nor skillful handling working for them as they had in the first two games.

Against the Little Colonels of Richmond, another private club, the Ladies were to try to redeem themselves. All they could muster, though, was a 2-2 tie. In the second half of the game, it seemed that some of the old spirit used against Lynchburg and the Polyannas was beginning to return. But a lucky grandstand play by the Colonels shook loose the 3-1 lead and tied the final score.

Along came Old Dominion and the Ladies were back in business. With a romp of 5-1 the varsity put on a display of lightning fast scoring in the second half. This game was the most intensive the team had played. Several of the players were injured and fouling was difficult due to the freshly mowed grass. Seemingly best under stress the Ladies pulled through and were pit face-to-face with Westhampton.

A beautiful day for hockey and a beautiful team playing hockey. The Ladies went all out and added another shut-out score of 4-0 to their list. Playing perfect hockey, they made the first and last games of their regular season book ends to the rest of the games.

In the tournaments at Westhampton the varsity defeated a Richmond Club 3-2 and landed a baseball score of 9-0 on Mary Washington College.

All-in-all it was a very successful season for the Ladies and future teams will find it difficult to match their record.

'College In Three Years' Motto Of Active Senior

Nancy Moorefield is probably one of the most extraordinary students on this campus. A mathematics major, Nancy is graduating in three years instead of the usual eight semesters.

This alone, though, is not the amazing fact. Except for the first semester of her freshman year, Nancy has maintained a Dean's List status academically. One would think that this would leave very little time, if interest. As a tentative recipient of a certificate in history and social science, Nancy has made the Nathaniel Macon Society a more effective organization.

An ardent sports enthusiast, Nancy also enjoys horseback riding, bowling, and golf.

For those who have ever been singles, and varsity hockey as the first string's center halfback. In the combined years, Nancy served the legislative board as her class's representative. She was a participant in her Class's Circus skill.

Nancy as one of the two representatives from Longwood attended the Eastern tennis tournaments last year.

This year has not allowed Nancy to slow down more likely, Nancy has decided not to slow down because of this year.

Nancy as a vital part of varsity hockey, was selected to the second string of the Tidewater Team in the recent tournament games. She was elected president of the Nathaniel Macon Society for which she has a deep interest. ## 'Reds' Get Unofficial Victory In Tennis Class tennis matches have gotten down to the semi-finals. Running neck and neck for the singles championship are two freshmen, Liz Brooks and Lisa Dunn. They will play for the top honors today.

Either way, the class tennis points will go to the red and whites. With the only green and white eliminated in the third round the field was wide open for the reds. This win will give the red and whites five points toward the color cup.

This year's tennis games were well represented by all classes. Some of the contestants found it hard to work their games into their schedules due to time conflicts. This situation produced some interesting factors into tennis. One such was playing tennis at six o'clock in the morning. It's quite an experience for those who haven't as of yet tried it.

The next class tennis will be the doubles matches in the spring. Now is your chance to practice and make it a Longwood style Wimbledon Championship in the spring.

With Brooks and Dunn vying for top honors in class tennis, the Red and Whites have unofficially gained 5 points toward the color cup.

Swartz Joins Science Faculty As Sole Femme Longwood Players, Class Productions Satisfy Yen For Dramatics, Student Creativity Through Years

by Phyllis Hammer

This year the science department at Longwood has acquired a new science staff. Dr. Joan H. Swartz, the sole femme recently joining the staff, is teaching organic and physical chemistry to our future scientists.

Dr. Swartz, a native of Staunton, attended Madison College and Mary Washington College, where she received her B. A. degree. She earned her M. A. in Biochemistry at V. P. I. and her Doctorate in Neuro-Chemistry at the University of Colorado School of Medicine.

DR. SWARTZ

Dr. Swartz has taught as a student assistant at V. P. I. and the University of Colorado. She has also taught in Virginia public schools and at the Virginia School for the Deaf in Staunton.

Prior to coming to Longwood this fall, Dr. Swartz attended the National Institutes of Health, working in the Neurological Research Department. She hopes to resume her research in late spring or when school is out.

In addition to being a devoted chemist, Dr. Swartz is an amateur musician, golfer, and enjoys the "armchair sport" of playing bridge.

This year at Longwood, chemistry is being offered as a major for the first time. Dr. Swartz is extremely pleased since all our "sister colleges" have offered it one time.

Dr. Swartz is chairman of the newly formed program of chemistry. In addition, another new course, physical chemistry, is being offered this year. The department plans to offer more courses to the curriculum next year.

In speaking of Longwood, Dr. Swartz said, "I'm delighted to be back in the classroom again and to have the stimulus of new students and the challenge of new ideas. I'm enjoying it very much."

by Maria Grant

"All the world's a stage . . . but Longwood Ladies and the Farmville State Teacher's College Ladies have confined their stage to the LC campus and the surrounding area for many years."

Longwood Ladies and the Farmville State Teacher's College Ladies have provided many outstanding opportunities to encourage the yen for drama. Claimed by two students, don't believe it. Well, our first yearless stands ready to march backward in time.

I get so terribly inhibited when I think about the Dramatic Club we had in 1963. There were 42 members and the officers were the president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, director, and manager of decorations.

You know I was a general manager and in 1967 we finally joined the ranks of so many other clubs—we had a motto: "Don't shoot the players; they are doing their best." How sweet. Oh, and we had such nice colors: green, greener, and greenest (?) And a flower: the sunflower. Also that year there was an orchestra, a quartet, the members, and a peanut gallery. Lovely people. And the setup of officers changed. There was a manager, assistant manager, and stage manager.

Miss Leola Wheeler was our director for quite a number of years, and she later was an officer member of the Club. On February 14, 1962 the Dramatic Club presented a colonial costume play, "Mice and Men." The first picture we had in the VIRGINIAN was awfully nice. It showed off our wonderful costumes.

"Adventure of Lady Ursula" by Anthony Hope had a cast of 12 and so did "The Rivals" by Richard Brindley. We did them in 1963. The next year we had a most expressive picture in the annual with our over-enthusiastic colonial costumes. By 1964, the club members were divided into the Dramatic Folk and Non-Theatrical Folk. We put on "Trelawney of the Wells" that year also.

A costume mistress, assistant costume mistress, and property manager were added to the officers in 1968. In the 1921 annual we still had our colonial costumes.

et Her movements and walk showed much understanding of the role. It is theorized that Shakespeare had to "kill off" Mercutio before he stole the play and, indeed, Mr. Clements' interpretation of the talkative dreamer, plus his marvelous tone quality and stage pose, made him the center of attraction everytime he appeared.

Not to be soon forgotten were John Marshall Jones who adequately fulfilled the demanding role of Prince Laurence, "The Wicked" as Tybalt, "The King of Cats" Shirley Timberlake and J. P. Rogers as Juliet's parents, although the latter was difficult to understand.

This is to mention only a few of the actors who appeared to forget even to breathe as they performed their duty and forbidden joys of their life. Larry Garske's lovely, willing-to-please, Romeo was a most effective portrayal.

The other outstanding performance was that of Mr. Clements. Mildred was very convincing as the rather befuddled and bewildered nurse to Juliet.

times (after all, we were just starting).

"Captain Lettarbiar" was our production for the year 1924. Up to this point there has been no mention of any class productions. This is because I don't recall any until years later, but I know we had them.

Praise Allah! The cast of "Yellow Jacket" had Japanese costumes (no more colonial for us!) By the way, we had 35 members in the club that year.

Unbelievably, the very next year we had even more costumes in "Prunella." They were old English country folk type. In 1927 a musical director was added to the list of officers, and we did "The Prince Chap" for our play.

Shipping to 1925 I remember one rather odd thing. It seems we had 23 members and 14 officers. I suppose it was the rash of mottoes we were famous for. Oh, well. The new list included: president, vice-president, business manager, heads of acting, make-up, costumes, properties, music, ushering, staging, lights, and manager of the room.

In the annual instead of our usual picture of a scene from one of the plays, we began having individual photos of everyone. It wasn't nearly as interesting. By 1925 membership had swelled to 130 members including the officers.

Perhaps you're wondering if we ever did anything more than count our officers and members and put on a few plays. Going on to 1936 I think there was something in the VIRGINIAN under the Dramatic Club picture which might be interesting. At that time we were doing a play each fall and spring plus sponsoring the Southside Virginia Dramatic Tournament. On November 22, 1935, the combined clubs of State Teachers' College and Hampden - Sydney College produced "A Night in August."

On April 3, 1936 just the STC girls staged Shakespeare's lightest comedy, "Taming of the Shrew." The role of the shrew was played by Virginia Agee, and that of the tamer by "Chubb" Gray.

By the way, this year, also, that the officers were split into two groups: officers and heads of departments. In '37 we had 176 members altogether.

The three outstanding purposes of our organization back then (and today, too) were:

1) to develop in its members and in the college community an appreciation for the best in drama.

2) to give an opportunity to its members for the development of special talent in any phase of play production.

3) to serve the college by aiding in various entertainments held by classes and organizations.

A "mysterious production" was put on in 1930 by the STC club and H-S-C's. It was called "Outward Bound." I don't remember the play too well, so I can't honestly say why it was so mysterious. Heavens.

The year 1942 brought more additions to the officers: chairman of the play contest, scrapbook chairman, social chairman, and parliamentary. Hampden-Sydney became the H-S Jongleurs then, and together we did "The Little Minister" (precious) and "Death Takes a Holiday."

My word! Didn't we do the "Admirable Crichton" in 1947? Oh, it was well done. Heavens, yes. But in 1952 it was done again, and I must say it was an awfully nice job.

Longwood Players

In spite of no auditorium because of the fire the previous year, the club had its apprentices put on several apprentice plays in 1950. Jolly good group.

One of the big moments in our history came in 1952 when the Longwood College Dramatic Club became the Longwood Players! That was in September. We added a technical director, a designer, program head, and set manager. We put on "Light Up the Sky," a sophisticated farce concerning the atom people.

"The Glass Menagerie" was terribly nice. That was in 1953. During the Thanksgiving holidays we played sponsored our second trip to New York to attend several Broadway productions. Oh, it was so exciting! In October our organization sponsored the Barter Theater's production of "The Curious Savage" of which Longwood's "first lady of the stage," Cleo Holladay, had a leading role.

Another veteran of the Longwood stage, Robert Porterfield, founder of the nationally famous Barter Theater, came to the campus in February to play the leading role in Owen Wister's play, "The Virginian."

Around 1954 I remember we did a Victorian melodrama called "Annel Street." Exactly ten years ago (from today), our group put on "Romeo and Juliet." It was an interesting comparison to say the least. Also that year we sponsored the Barter Theater's production of Eugene O'Neill's "Ah Wilderness!"

The sponsoring of the Theater's productions was one of our annual projects by the way. Silver cups for the best actor and actress of the year were presented, too. In 1955 we did "Mark of the Moon" you look backstage in Jarman you might see where we wrote the Longwood Players have become such a specialized group of people. The number of members has been reduced to the minimum from the "old" days, but those members are well-trained and do a marvelous job.

I think I've gone on long enough about the inhibitions of the stage. But it's been so nice having an outlet for dramatic and backstage talent during all these years. I must remember to donate some money to the organization sometime — to make sure they'll never have to have colonial costumes for 20 years in a row ever again.

Although many students may be unaware, Alpha Kappa Gamma sponsors a number of campus activities. Among them are Circus, Faculty Follies and the AKG Action Field alternate years. Also the Christmas door decoration contest, and Faculty Firesides. Last year this organization held the leadership conference for all four college organizations. They have bought a spotlight for Jarman Auditorium, and plaques for several of the dormitories. Alpha Kappa Gamma has a sister child, and has been awarded an annual scholarship. # Simkins To Speak At Institute Of Southern Culture

The first lecture of Longwood College's Institute of Southern Culture is scheduled for Friday, November 20th. Dr. Francis Butler Simkins will speak on the topic, "The Changing South: Is Still the South," at 1 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

Dr. Simkins maintains that although there may be attempts to change the South, the South basically will never change because at the heart of every Southerner is the belief in "white supremacy, the maintenance of the colored man in a subordinate position."

The first large-scale attempt to change the South, of course, started with the Civil War. The South's defeat had ironic results: instead of remaking the South and stamping out its attitude of regionalism, the South became more united than ever before, and Jefferson Davis achieved new heights as a martyr.

No Basic Changes
Neither socially nor economically were there any noticeable changes as a result of the Northern victory. Liberals have come to stand for universal education, but after the Civil War there was no attempt on the part of the North to remake the mind of the South with a forced universal education.

Certain superficial changes were made to make it appear as though the status of the Negro was improved. He could go to school, own property, and have his own church, but basically his "restrictions of caste" were not totally relieved. As a matter of fact, Dr. Simkins will discuss how the North was not anxious to end racial discrimination, a policy the North itself sanctioned.

Furthermore, Dr. Simkins plans to show how attempts on the part of the army and Congress to tear down racial barriers have had no effect on the South. Although the white man and the black man may sit side by side, there is no fraternal relationship between them.

The Negro, Dr. Simkins holds, is as socially distant as he ever was. In addition, "the black man is still thought of as a creature less than a full man, a Sambo, a cowering Uncle Tom, a figure out of the minstrel show."

Institute Speakers
These are just a few of the ideas that Dr. Simkins will present during his lecture for the Institute of Southern Culture. And his is one of a series of lectures that will be spaced throughout the rest of the academic year. Previously, the lectures were delivered on one day in the Spring. However, this created problems because many students had classes to attend and were not free to attend the lectures.

Institute Speakers
The next two lectures are scheduled for February 3th, when Dr. James McBride Dabbs of Mayesville, South Carolina, will speak on "The Negro as a Southerner" and Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss of Longwood College will speak on "The South Searches Its Conscience."

Dr. Joe Gray Taylor, Professor of History at McNeese College, Lake Charles, Louisiana, will deliver his lecture on "Family Loyalties in the South" on March 12th.

The final two lectures will be presented on April 30th. Speaking on "Changing Patterns of Migration in the South" will be Dr. Horace Hamilton, Professor of Rural Sociology, North Carolina State University, Raleigh, North Carolina, and Dr. Charles Roland, Head of the Department of History, Tulane University, New Orleans, Louisiana, will lecture on "The South, America's Will-O-the-Wisp Ethic." Established at Longwood in 1955, the institute endeavors to "promote the study of traditional aspects of Southern civilization through academic course work, special lectures, and through the publication of research in the field."

THE ROTUNDA

VOL. XLIII

Longwood College, Farmville, Va., November 18, 1964

No. 7

Freshmen Elect Twelve Of Class To Commission

Recently twelve members of the freshman class were elected to the Freshman Commission. The Commission is responsible for decorating the Christmas tree in the Rotunda, planning the Christmas banquet, and many other similar activities on campus.

Members are Ginny Daughtrey from Chesapeake, a Sigma Kappa pledge, Top Rat, and English and elementary education major; Dean Newton from Fredericksburg, assistant hall president, member of the Wesley Foundation, representative to the Legislative Board, and a history, social sciences, and elementary education major; Jackie Deane from Richmond, a Kappa Delta pledge and an elementary education major; Kathy Kamps from Virginia Beach, fire warden for her hall, an animal in Circus, an Alpha Sigma Tau pledge, and a home economics major; Nancy Robinson from Norfolk, an elementary education major; Nancy Young from Richmond, co-chairman of Freshman program; Terri Wells from Hopewell, a Phi Mu pledge and a business education major; and Patsey Dier from Richmond, an elementary education major.

Also elected were Pam Spigle from Richmond, president of the freshman class, Delta Zeta pledge, and "orchestra-top" top rat; Betty Browder from Lawrenceville, an elementary education major; Ella McBride from Baltimore, president of Phi Mu pledge class, animal in Circus, and an elementary education major; and Sara Wright from Norfolk, Sigma Kappa pledge and a math major.

Catholics Plan Bible Service; Honor Kennedy

This Sunday, November 22, marks the first anniversary of the death of the late President John F. Kennedy. In remembrance of this day a Bible memorial service will be held in St. Theresa's Catholic Church on Sunday at 4:30 p.m.

The service will be conducted by Rev. Carl B. Reikowsky, pastor of St. Theresa's, and Rev. Carl J. Naro, a special guest from Danville, Virginia. Rev. Naro is pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Danville.

Following the service, the Newman Club invites everyone to meet and talk with Rev. Naro in the trailer behind the church. Coffee and doughnuts will be served.

Giradoux' "Electric" Begins Rehearsals

Rehearsal is now underway for Jean Giradoux's Electric which will be presented December 10, 11, and 12 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Dr. Patton Lockwood is director, and Mr. David Wiley is light and scene designer. Assistant director is Maria Siegfried and technical director is Dianne Bigger.

Electric will be portrayed by Mary Lynn Lander, a veteran of the Longwood stage. First, second, and third Bunsenides will be played by Karolyi McAdoo, Freda Richards, and Mariam Mowbray respectively.

Dual roles will be played by David Reives as the gardener and second guard and John Hutt as the first guard and messenger. Oresos or the stranger will be portrayed by Joe Whitted; Agatha by Shelly Ryan, President by John Marshall Jones; Angusthus by J. P. Rogers, servant by John Martin, beggar by Gerald Ragland, Clytemnestra by Kelli Loftis, Narses' wife by Ina Crouch and youngman, page and captain, by John Martin.

In charge of backstage as the stage manager is Maria Konovoff, assisted by Marsha Spitzer.

Sally Pottage, Talented Junior, Presents Recital

On November 22, Sally Tod Pottage, a junior organ major from Crewe, will give an organ recital here at Longwood. This will be the first of several recitals to be given by music majors throughout the year.

The major piece on the program will be Franck's "Choral" in B minor. Sally will also play compositions by Bach and Beethoven.

Sally has studied organ for two years with Dr. Curmish. During the summer of 1963 she studied in Denmark with Grete Christensen, who gave a recital at Longwood last fall.

Sally is a member of Sigma Alpha Iota, the National Professional Music Fraternity for women. She is also organist for the Farmville Methodist Church.

Webster, Theatrical Producer, Speaks At Longwood Assembly

By Kay Young

Margaret Webster, theatrical producer, director, and actress, will be on our campus Tuesday, November 24, for the assembly hour.

Miss Webster, daughter of the late Ben Webster and the late Dame May Webster, comes from an old theatre family. She has been schooled in Burlington School, London; Queen Anne's School, Caversham; and the London University.

Miss Webster, as a child, made her first appearance on the stage in 1917. Her adult debut came in 1924 with Sybil Thorndike in The Trojan Women. Miss Webster was a member of Elgar's Oxford Repertory Company; she toured with the Ben Greet Players in 1928 and she was with the Old Vic Company from 1929 until 1930.

Miss Webster has played in many London productions, notably with John Gielgud in Musical Chairs. She came to America in 1936 and made an outstanding reputation as a producer, especially of Shakespearean drama. Her first production was Richard II in which she was aided by Maurice Evans. Miss Webster and Evans remained in New York to do a successful series of Shakespearean plays including Hamlet, Henry IV, Twelfth Night, Macbeth, etc. Miss Webster initiated the Margaret Webster Shakespeare Company in 1940 through which she played Shakespearean repertoires through schools and colleges of the United States.

Miss Webster made two visits to South Africa in 1961 and 1962 at which time she represented

Student Activities Building In Preliminary Planning Stage

Longwood's proposed Student Activities Building is now in the preliminary planning stage.

Tentative plans have been drawn up by the architect, Ben R. Johns, Jr. These plans must now be submitted to several committees for approval.

It is hoped that actual construction can begin in late spring. The building is scheduled for completion in September, 1966.

Planning for the Student Activities Building began last year with a questionnaire which was given to all students. Those facilities which aroused the greatest interest among students have been included in the plans for the building.

The H-shaped building will be located next to South Cunningham directly across from the new gym. It will consist of two levels and will be completely air-conditioned.

The lower level will house a bookstore, a large snack bar, and a games room. Adjoining the games room will be four bowling lanes. This level will also include storage room for athletic equipment, several storage space, and a post office.

The upper level will have its main entrance on Pine Street. This floor will contain a large central lounge area with several adjacent smaller lounges. It will also include three television rooms and a student publications wing. On this level will also be rooms for student meetings, including a formal conference room, and a day student area. The day student facilities will consist of a lounge, a small kitchen area, and a locker room. The estimated cost of the Student Activities Building is 700 thousand dollars. The legislature is providing 500 thousand dollars of the total amount. The rest of the cost will be secured by the college through loans to be paid back by additional student fees over a period of years.

Turkey Day

Turkey Day is almost here. Students will evacuate the dorms and classes. Ready at 11:00 a.m. Wednesday, November 25th. Reluctantly classes will begin again at 8:00 a.m. Monday, November 29th.

Clarify Misunderstanding

Concerning the letter from the Reverend W. O. McClung: The question of changing social regulations at Longwood College has nothing to do with whether or not we are living in a morally decadent civilization. It is simply a matter of taking under consideration a Southern Association observation that our rules and regulations may be "too protective" and may inhibit development of maturity and responsibility in students.

It is doubtful that "the non-drinking policy on campus and at Hampden-Sydney social functions" is significant to many parents who send their daughters to Longwood. If this were of real concern, they would make a more thorough investigation of this particular regulation. Besides, it is usually the student, not the parent, who determines where she wants to go to college.

No aspersions have been cast on Longwood for lack of "respect for law, order, and tradition." The same cannot be said of the churches and community of Farmville if we are to notice at all their bad image in the national press.

An Existential Reasoning

One of the major news events of the past two weeks has been Jean-Paul Sartre's refusal to accept the Nobel Prize for Literature. Although this act is consistent with Sartre's character, magazines and newspapers have taken the opportunity to give their readers a brief lesson in existentialism.

Existential philosophy is based on the idea that existence comes before essence. One of the problems of Romeo and Juliet, which was just staged here on campus, involves the principle of existence before essence. The reason that the family feud was continued generation after generation was because each family considered the other's essence as a Montague or a Capulet first rather than each's existence as a person. Each family's prejudices toward the other was determined by the cover-symbol of the other's family name rather than their existence as people. As we all know, the outcome of such prejudices is bloodshed and a waste of life.

The Montague's and the Capulet's are not the only ones guilty of such prejudices. We are guilty of considering essence before existence every time we discriminate against a person on the basis of his color. When we discriminate against the Negro, we are not judging him by his cover-symbol as a Negro? Have we not seen that the results of prejudices based on essence before existence only led to riots, bloodshed, and death?

Congress may pass one bill after another in an attempt to erase racial discrimination, but there is only one way that we can overcome this. That way is an existential way — by considering existence before essence. That is, we must stop letting cover-symbols control our reasoning, and start allowing the Negro to have his rights on the basis of his existence as a Human being, rather than denying them because of his essence as a Negro.

Interest In Guitars Proves Latest Fad

by Susan Woltz
Strum, strum, strum — how many times have you walked down the hall of your dorm and heard the strains of a guitar through the hallowed wooden doors? Probably many — for did you know Longwood has a large number of girls who participate for fun and/or profit in the mystery of this stringed instrument. Each class of LC has had their particular instrument and song-type, and we've progressed from harmonica and piccolo, with Charleston and boogie-woogie, to our present age. This, indeed, is the age of the guitar and the folk song.

Guitar playing has become a favorite pastime of the girls here, and even a few of the professors. Mr. Lockwood, for example, who plays the guitar, banjo, and uke, enjoys the hobby. Each class is also well represented, from Gail Ray, a senior, to Mary Ann Chinn, a freshman. In fact, there are so many musicians that we find it impossible to list them all. But we will go in for a few particulars. Take Barbara Ann Moore and Nancy Jo Taylor, both sophomores, for example. Both have practiced guitar playing for one year, and both have played in public. Barbara is a biology major, and prefers folk and semi-classical music. Nancy likes all kinds of music, but especially likes Josh White. She is an English major. Two juniors, Betty Neal and Elizabeth Spicer, both play, but have no professional aspirations. Betty, an English major, has played since August, and likes folk music best. Her particular favorite is Lead Belly. Elizabeth, along with playing the guitar for two years, also plays the piano, and likes all kinds of music. She is (Continued on Page 5)

New French Instructor Gives Impression Of LC

"I LIKE Longwood very much. I find that the girls polite, conscientious, hard-working and conscientious. I'm also finding a high degree of intelligence among the Longwood Ladies — a quality not so common as most people believe." This is the comment given by Mr. Julian B. Stern, a new language professor, when asked for his impression of Longwood.

Dr. Stern is from Washington, joined the language department of Longwood College as a French instructor. He teaches Intermediate French, Conversation and Composition, and Survey of French Literature.

Dr. Stern is also advisor of "Les Francophiles," the French club. "Les Francophiles" was organized for the purpose of giving all students studying the French language, an opportunity to learn more about French culture and to improve oral fluency. Programs consist of panel discussions, dramatic presentations, songs, and lectures by visiting French scholars.

The University of Geneva in Switzerland was the institution from which Dr. Stern received his "Licence et lettres." He also took course work for his Ph. D. at Duke University on a grant.

Previous teaching experience for Dr. Stern includes jobs at Waynesburg College in Pennsylvania, University of North Dakota, Clemson College and secondary school teaching at the Instituto Justo Arosemena Republica de Panama.

Much of Dr. Stern's leisure is spent reading, walking, and listening to classical music — Mozart being his favorite composer.

After a very interesting hour of conversation, Dr. Stern concluded by saying, "I like my colleagues and students at Longwood very much."

Students Talk, Tell Of Times With Teaching

By Linda Turner

Should I take a notebook? Should I wear three inch heels? What will happen if I'm late the first day? Will the eight weeks pass quickly? Will I make it? Many such questions have swept through the minds of all student teachers. First block student teachers of the class of 1965 were no exception.

Questions soon met with experiences. Experiences were so varied, fantastic and unexpected. A business education major had a student in first year typing who declared he had typing fin-

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Student Makes Counter Charge

Dear Editor:

This is in reference to the letter from W. O. McClung appearing in the Nov. 11 issue of the Rotunda.

The crux of Rev. McClung's letter was that he, as a Baptist minister was opposed to Longwood students making revisions in their drinking rules because this would encourage "immorality in a decaying civilization," and that for "the best welfare of students at Longwood the administration" should not "be swayed by the recent editorial appearing in the Rotunda." However, the tone of the letter told us much more. This tone, correlated with my knowledge of Mr. McClung's "activities" for the past four years in Prince Edward county, brings many questions to my mind.

First, I would like to question Mr. McClung's conception of "immorality in a decaying civilization." If this is a decaying generation, Mr. McClung, perhaps it is due in some part to the examples that adults set for the youth. For example, I have neither seen nor heard of one positive action that you have taken in the social revolution which is taking place in the South. Have you in any way presented this reality to your congregation so that they can come to accept and understand why this revolution is taking place? Or do you know that the reason behind the revolution is a "moral" reason? Was it a "moral" reason that allowed you and your congregation to turn Negroes away when they tried to worship in your church?

I also question what is in "the best welfare of students at Longwood." This college is supposedly an institute of higher learning. One of the things a student should learn is responsibility, responsibility for her school and for herself. Thus it should be left up to the student to decide what is best for them, since they are responsible for a solution to an existing problem in the community in which they live. The administration may help solve a problem (and at Longwood the administration often solves problems for students by telling them what to do), but this role is one of assistance, not dictating a policy.

Therefore, Mr. McClung, I question your concept of "morality," and I question your knowledge of the "alcoholic problem" on our campus. Especially, I question the "thou shalt not" tone of your letter. Perhaps it is the "thou shalt not" attitude which let you sit back complacent and timorous while 1600 Negro students were without public education in Prince Edward county for five years.

Respectfully yours,

Gayle Ray

College Freedom Rules, Tradition Discussed Again

Dear Editor:

In reference to the Reverend McClung's letter of last week I would like to say that respect for tradition is an integral part of each Longwood student. Traditions are not a set of written rules but are customs which encourage us to live honestly and honestly to traditions, however, results not in honorable living but in stagnancy.

I do not understand how "a respect for law, order, and tradition" has any relation to the current Longwood policy of non-drinking at Hampden - Sydney functions or in Farmville. According to tradition, a Longwood student acts in a ladylike manner at all times. Should the non-drinking rule be revised a girl would be able to drink moderately while still upholding tradition and posing no threat to law and order.

The Reverend McClung's belief that many parents sent their daughters to Longwood because of the non-drinking rules appears rather far-fetched. Many parents agree that the complicated tangle of drinking regulations are not only contradictory, but are also outdated. Would revision of the drinking rules imply that the school has no respect for the opinions of parents? It is impossible for Longwood to maintain a separate set of rules for each girl, based on her parents' mode of conduct. Why not leave it up to the individual student to respect the values which her parents have instilled in her?

Rules such as the drinking regulations, for which many students find no moral or ethical basis, should be revised in order that Longwood girls may, within reason, make their own decisions. Is this not a major aspect of college life?

Sincerely,

Sally P. Groome

McClung Letter Prompts Reply

Dear Editor:

This letter is in reply to the Reverend W. O. McClung's letter which appeared in the November 11th issue of the Rotunda. While I respect his concern for the welfare of the college, I feel that he has misunderstood the purpose of the editorial concerning student civil liberties and freedom. Miss Melton was in no way advocating an amoral society but one of maturity. I, too, feel that we should stand for high standards among which are respect for law, order, and tradition."

It is for this reason that I cannot understand why Reverend McClung contributed to a breakdown in law and order in Farmville by closing the doors of his church to a large segment of this community. I consider this to be a grave moral question.

Very Sincerely,

Connie Birch

Sprague Letter Receives Reply In Protestation

To the Editor of The Rotunda:

I once thought that the South had a monopoly on proper and delicate ladies and that the fulminations about the proper New England ladies was a myth. But now in the person of Dr. Rosemary Sprague we have here in "bookish" Prince Edward a proper and delicate lady from the outcroppings of New England called the Western Reserve. This lady thinks it improper and indecent for certain semi-wicked students at Longwood College to protest against being compelled to attend a partisan meeting. Don't these insurrectionary students have the right to believe that there was a trick out of which they had the right to trick themselves?

Big Controversy Keeps Growing

Dear Editor:

In each of the last two editions of THE ROTUNDA there has appeared a letter from a faculty member pertaining to the recent noncompulsory assembly. Each of the letters has criticized the students for demanding that attendance at a political rally be voluntary.

This discussion raises the question of whether attendance at any assembly should be required. But the immediate issue is what kind of programs should be scheduled at compulsory assemblies. I feel that compulsory assemblies of a religious or partisan political nature are not proper and I would hope that the Assembly Program Committee would be more discerning in the selection of programs in the future.

Fall Of '59

Editor's note: This is the first of a three part series on the Prince Edward County schools. The next issue will deal with how the county has met the problem left by this educational gap when re-opening the public schools this fall. The facts presented in this editorial were obtained from a report by Terry Ferrer, the education editor of the New York Herald Tribune, in the October 18 issue of the publication. His report is based on a 290-page study by a research team from Michigan State University for the United States Office of Education.

The fall of 1959 found Prince Edward with no public schools in the county (see story on page three). The white students started school in the newly built Prince Edward Academy on September 14 and the Negro students were left with no educational facilities.

Prior to the shutdown, the Negro children had been attending school under the most primitive conditions, but at least they were in school. The seven white schools in the system were all of sound brick construction with indoor, flush toilets, lavatories, steam or hot-water heat, and a property value of 1.2 million dollars. Until the construction of R. R. Moton High School, there were only two brick constructions in the Negro system with the others built of wood or clapboard and frequently covered with tar paper. They had outdoor privies, wood stoves, manual water pumps, and a total property value of $329,000. The per capita school property value for white students was an estimated $817.00, while for each Negro student it was $194.00. There were approximately 1,400 elementary students throughout the county who up until 1951 were still using the defective equipment and facilities given them prior to World War II. Even in the new Moton school, there existed such conditions as 650 pupils with only one microscope for the study of biology.

We find, however, that even tar paper shacks are better than no schools at all. What happened to these students during the period that the schools were closed? This provides a brutal tale of human deprivation.

For the vast majority of Negro students, there was no education at all. During the four years, just 575 of the 1,756 Negro school population made it to school, with only 35 attending full time. The IQ of Negroes with no schooling plummeted as much as 30 points.

Ten-year-old children literally "were unable to hold or adequately manipulate a pencil, sixteen-to-ten-year-olds could not turn a page, fourteen-year-olds couldn't read - they had known how once, but had lost the ability."

Comparing seven-year-olds with schooling to those without, there was a gap of 17 points in the IQ scale. At nine, the gap widened to 32 points. Such a margin at the other end of the scale would be the difference between "normal" and "very superior." These students suffered a complete retardation of all the traditional academic skills.

What did these students do with their idle hours? Some of them got jobs - 45% of the boys and 30% of the girls. Some spent as much as five hours a day watching television. Three special summer school sessions in 1961, 1962, and 1963 were attended by 40% of the children. Less than 28% attended the winter training programs. This was attributed to difficulty in getting teachers and supplies, plus the declining motivation due to the prolonged closing of schools.

In interviewing more than 1,000 Negro parents, it was found that 28% of the mothers and 60% of the older brothers and sisters had tried to teach the young children at home.

We feel that the concluding statement of the article from which most of these facts are taken, very adequately sums up the condition. "The Prince Edward public schools have opened again this fall. But for hundreds and hundreds of Negro children, the educational famine wreaked by their closing may never be assuaged. They will probably always carry with them the empty waste of their 'unopened school years'."

When examining these facts, we would hope that the reader would not close his mind and receive them merely as accusations that the Negro is inferior, but realize that these are problems and difficulties that would develop in any system where children were denied formal education for four years. Of course, we expect that some people out of fear and prejudice, will try to employ these facts to uphold segregation, but we employ that the reader be more objective in his examination.

Prince Edward County Forms Subject For Review Of Judicial Action On Segregation

Editor's note: The following remarks are taken from a report on the closing of public schools in Prince Edward by J. Rupert Picott (executive secretary of the Virginia Teachers Association) and Edward H. Peeples, Jr. (instructor in sociology at the Medical College of Virginia). Anyone interested in reading the complete work see the May, 1964, issue of the "Phi Delta Kappan."

The school conflict has its dramatic beginning in 1951. Of course the real root of the problem goes back to 1919 when the first Negro landed in Virginia. Schools were not the Negroes' only complaint, but education became the first battleground for the Negroes' assault on a more than 300-year-old caste system founded on white supremacy and paternalism.

The initial outbreak occurred on April 23, 1951. Four hundred and fifty-six Negro students walked out of the R. R. Moton High School on a strike protesting against educational conditions in the county's Negro schools. That same day the students called the office of the NAACP attorneys in Richmond and requested aid. The following meetings with adults and students was the prelude for what was to become one of the five cases which resulted in the 1954 U. S. Supreme Court school desegregation decision.

On May 23, 1951 the attorneys filed a petition with the U. S. District Court naming the county school board and superintendent of schools as defendants.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond filed a notice of intervention in the case and put the weight of the state behind the white defendants.

Some months after the petition had been filed by NAACP attorneys, the county board of supervisors began to make plans to secure land for a new high school for Negroes in order to support their argument in support of "separate but equal" schools. On May 7, 1952, the U. S. District Court sustained segregation but ordered equalization of facilities. Counsel for the plaintiffs appealed this decision all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court. Early in 1953, the board began building a new $940,000 high school for Negroes just outside the town of Farmville. This high school became one of the three brick structures for Negroes.

Hearings on the Prince Edward case, as well as the four other now famous appeals from Kansas, Delaware, South Carolina and the District of Columbia, were begun in December of 1952. On May 17, 1954, Chief Justice Earl Warren delivered the court's decision declaring segregation unconstitutional. The Virginia State Board of Education responded by promptly advising all of the state's school boards to maintain the customary separation of races during the 1954-55 school session.

Within two months of the 1954 decision, the county Board of Supervisors, the county's governing body, passed a resolution asserting their opposition to desegregation.

segregation; their view that desegregation was impossible in Virginia; that they would resist compliance with the order with all of their "powers" and ignored the state to take immediate steps to preserve segregation.

In April of 1955, during a hearing before the county board of supervisors on the annual budget for 1955-56, a white county delegation insisted that they finance an "integrated" system of public schools. However, the supervisors made no decision on this budget, pending the outcome of the U. S. Supreme Court's final decree.

That mandate came on May 31, 1955 a few hours later after hearing the May 31 order, the board of supervisors met and accepted a county budget which included only the state legal minimum of $150,000 for school maintenance and debt amortization.

Shortly thereafter, 1500 whites met on the campus of Longwood College and formed the Prince Edward School Corporation, the forerunner of the current Prince Edward School Foundation.

By July, 1955, the U. S. Supreme Court had remanded the Prince Edward case to a special three-judge federal court for the execution of the court order. This three-judge court ruled that the county should begin "adjustment and rearrangement" required for desegregation but failed to order mixing of the races for the 1955-56

Tom Turkey Learns Thanksgiving Lesson

by KAREN RUDER

It was the night before Thanksgiving. My seven brothers and sisters and I had gone over to see Grampa because we knew that with enough coaxing we could get him to tell his story of Thanksgiving.

As we neared his place we could see him standing there waiting for us. "I was expecting you," he said with a laugh. "I can practically tell time by you."

Soon we were all settled around him. He preened his feathers a little and began his story.

"Many years ago when I was just a young cubbler, my mother told me to beware of the time when my master started to be very kind to me. But before a year's knowledge, I soon turned my warnings. As time went on, I grew into a fine turkey. My feathers were sleek and shined with health, and I strutted around as if I were the prize of the group."

"It was about that time that I began to notice how much better the turkey was eating. In fact, I was much sicker with my sickness. But I served special meals. My swelled head got bigger every day. I soon noticed, and so did my stomach. In fact, I was so full that I was developing quite a pot."

"The next day I decided to go on a diet. I quit eating those rich meals and started exercising. Much to my surprise, instead of being praised for my efforts, I was punished. This really ruffled my feathers and I sank into a depressed state drowning my sorrows in food."

"To my confusion, though, this brought me out of the dog house with my master. Later that night, I was out strutting around feeling important again, and making myself generally obnoxious when I heard voices. Listening at the window, I could catch snatches of conversation, turkey dinner tomorrow. . . pluck and stuff . . . in the morning. . . so fat he won't even be able to run."

"At first my swelled head refuted the idea that they were talking about me. But then I remembered my mother's wise words and took off running like a chicken with its head cut off. My ego was deflated and I had learned a lesson."

"Thankfully by morning I had reached the woods and safety, and ironically enough, I was Thanksgiving morning."

"So you see, grandchildren, I know the true meaning of Thanksgiving, for I learned it the hard way."

'Sigma Phi Nothing' Takes Reader On Time-Tour

By Maria Grant

Sororities have always been a part of Longwood since the very earliest beginnings of the college. Over the years, as is true with most other organizations, they have been many colored and interesting highlights which have made them also a part of Longwood.

We turn to AGELESS, who, as usual, will attempt to relive the sometimes humorous but all ways varied history of another of the college's parts. It's way back in 1898:

Being a member of Sigma Phi Nothing myself, I do hope I can do justice to all those who have been such wonderful sorority girls (and good friends of mine).

Did you know that Phi Mu is the oldest of our nine sororities, yet it was the last to become part of our campus? It was founded in 1852 at Wesleyan College in Macon, Georgia. And the next oldest is our present Sigma Kappa, founded in 1874 at Colby College in Waterville, Maine. But setting back to Farmville Normal - back in 1897 Kappa Delta was founded - on October 23 to be exact, and later on in 1902 it was made national. There were eight members then.

The next year Sigma Sigma Sigma joined KD. But in October of that same year another sorority came along to make it three - it was Zeta Tau Alpha. Both these groups were started right on our campus. KD had 14 members in 1899 and their colors were olive green and silver gray. Tri Sig also had 14 members, with colors of moss green and violet purple. They even had a chant four school has always been famous for chants and mottoes:

Rah, rah, rah; re, re, re. We're the Sigma Sigma Sigma. See! Who are we? Who are we? Girls of the Sigma sorority.

In 1899 Alpha Sigma Tau was founded at Michigan State College, but it was not until years later that it made its way to Farmville.

I forgot to mention that Zeta Tau Alpha had turquoise blue and steel as their colors and the white violet as their flower. In 1899 they had a membership of 12.

If I remember correctly it was the Tri Sigma group that went wild over yells and chants and things of that sort. Once, in 1909, when CHI was first organized I nearly lost my mind. Some girls came up behind me and they started this yell. Yet the last sentence, I thought for sure I was being condemned right there on the spot. Oh it was ever so awful.

Skull and cross bones, rah, rah, rah!

Death and destruction to things that are wrong; Strength and protection; we were the strongest!

Skulls and cross bones, rah, rah, rah! Sigma Sigma Sigma, ha, ha, ha!

These Sigma's and their chants. Scared me to death. Whew!

The KD's however, at least those were slightly milder. Zippa, boomer, Vooma-lu-zella zella, Zippa boomer.

Alpha Kappa Delta! They also had a song to the tune of "Maryland, My Maryland."

Our third sorority had its own yell, too, plus a song to the tune of "Aunt Sarah's Quilting Party" (lovely name).

Miss Kiva! Sleekum razzle dapple. Here we are here we are. Zeta Tau Alpha! On March 18, 1902 the Zetas were chartered by the Legislature of Virginia. Also about that time, another sisterhood was est-

Around Other Campi

Does this complaint from an editorial in the campus newspaper of Mary Baldwin College sound familiar?

"In order to attract a larger number of couples at the dances and thus to increase participation in college-sponsored social functions, why not plan next year to replace ONE of the formal dances with two or three inexpensive combo parties?"

Or this complaint from a letter to the editor, also at Mary Baldwin College: "The student body as a whole wishes 'the few' to do the work of 'the many'."

Or this request from an editorial in the College of William and Mary Flat Hat: "We urge that concerted efforts be made towards the hiring of a full-time psychologist who would make this crucial aspect of student welfare his sole concern."

But this request from the same newspaper is a little unusual: "Our tuition is now ridiculously low in comparison to some schools in the country. Raise the tuition and pump the extra money into faculty salaries."

The blue ribbon for creative writing goes to a student at Mary Washington College who jokingly expresses her typical college woes, as seen in these excerpts from her article: "You say you love college and you're already getting D's in all your subjects? . . . You say you had a blind date and his seeing-eye dog bit you? . . . You say the cooling of your room fell in and all the rouches kept dropping in on you unexpectedly? . . . You say your boy friend traveled 350 miles to F-burg last night for a blind date?"

"You say you were planning to get your first full-night's sleep in weeks and your dorm president decided that it was time for an 11:00 p.m. house meeting? . . . You say this is the tenth straight week you've been to the P. O. and found your box empty and the spiders are making themselves at home? . . . You say you were in the shower with suds in your hair when the fire alarm sounded?"

"You say you finally got a car for your Senior year . . . with no Friday or Saturday classes, and now you're on strict clamp-up? . . . You say you were just dying to learn to play bridge and now you're so good at it that you're flunking every thing else? . . . You say your dear old parents are paying for all this? (Well, what they don't know won't hurt them — an anyway, ain't life grand?)"

On Eve Of Thanksgiving

In keeping with the Thanksgiving theme, the assembly yesterday was planned by Jimmy Turner, chairman of the Public Affairs Committee of the YWCA. Speaker for the event was the Reverend Baldwin Lloyd, the assistant chaplain at VPI in Blacksburg. Following his inspirational message, plans were announced for the annual YWCA

Thanksgiving Service Project through which food is collected to be distributed to needy families by the Prince Edward County Welfare Department.

Boxes have been placed on each hall and in the Rotunda so that each girl may share her blessings by contributing canned foods and any other nonperishables to make Thanksgiving brighter for many families.

New Sororities Founded At LC Over Changing Years Of Growth

tablished and chartered at the State Female Normal School in Farmville. It was Alpha Sigma Delta. The group was composed of crisscross and silver. Not being a slow group, they quickly got in the swing of things and added their own personal yell of 11 members, whose colors Chickalaca! Chickalaca! Razzle! Dazzle! Daph! Boomalaca! Boomalaca! Alpha Sigma Alpha! Alpha Sigma Alpha! Alpha! Rah! Rah!

Also that year up at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, the Delta Zeta sorority was formed. It, too, did not become part of our school until later but it did seem significant to mention its origin. Some things are rather interesting as I think about them.

Up at Syracuse University in 1904 the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority was founded. That, too, did not come to our campus until later on.

Did I mention the annual KD convention held in Richmond in 1963? Three of my best friends went that year—Frances Lovell, Ruth Schmelz, and Frankie McKinney. They had such a sweet time.

They were Pi Alpha which had 25 members, Delta Sigma with 14 members, Zeta Tau with 31 members, and Delta Kappa with 17 members.

Around 1927 the Gamma Theta published "The Lamp." They had 15 members and 10 new pledges.

On the official roll of the Pan-Hellenic Association were these groups: Sigma Sigma Sigma, Gamma Theta, Delta Sigma Chi, Mu Omega, Delta Kappa, Zeta Tau. This was in 1927. And the following was the Code of Ethics of the Pan-Hellenic Association:

"This association desires to go on record as believing that membership in the association obligates every sorority on its roll and every initiate thereof: To cooperate with college authorities

To respect and obey the letter and the spirit of any agreement made by the college and the association

To refrain from the discussion of sorority disagreements

To refrain from the speaking disparagingly of any sorority or non-sorority girl

To regulate personal conduct so that it shall at all times conform in spirit and appearance with the accepted standards of good breeding ma Theta. Such a nice looking bunch. Some of my dearest friends . . .

While I seem to be on the subject of pictures in the annual, I must mention the dear ones that appeared about 1945. They were quite informal and lovely, especially the Pi Kappa in the back of the truck, and the Zetas toasting with cokes in their chapter room. Clever group. They had a little song I can remember that was rather good. It started out: Our memories will cling And years after college days, its praises we'll sing . . .

By 1947 membership in the sisterhoods had increased somewhat. The Tri Sigmas and ASA's had most with 38, then there was Alpha Sigma Tau with 30, Theta Sigma - 24, Phi Zeta - 24, Mu Kappa - 22, Mu Omega - 15, and Gamma Theta. The others I can't seem to recall, but were about the same.

In 1948 I think it was, the Tri Sigmas had some trouble with the lock on their door. Oh — and simply marvelous — they celebrated their 50th birthday! The Gamma Thetas pledged 8 "baby Gammies" that year and got a new, dreary vie (better known in present circles as a record player). My it was nice.

The ASA group redecorated their chapter room and it looked wonderful. Some of my Mu Omega friends could never forget the Christmas party that year. Dr. Moss played Santa Claus. The Pi Kappas had a most hilarious cabin party at Longwood Estate.

Bill Sydnor was chosen "Sweetheart of AST" and Jean Watts became "Queen of the Week." The Theta Sigmas were planning for the big house party at Virginia Beach (seems as though that's not out with age). The Phi Zetas had a most exciting 9th birthday and Founder's Day that year — '48.

The year 1949 held many moments of importance. There was the day that Dr. Lancaster made the official announcement that the local sorority of Gamma Theta was to become the re-activated Alpha chapter of Kappa Delta — Gamma Theta was (Continued on Page 5)

My goodness! I forgot to say that Sigma Sigma Sigma got its national charter in 1903. Ad by 1905 they had six chapters. Their colors were purple and white. At the same time the Zetas had nine chapters, and in 1905 the Eta chapter was established at Mary Baldwin Seminary (an awfully wild place). The official organ was the "Theta." KD's organ was the "Angeles."

Alpha Sigma Alpha sent a delegate to a convention in 1906 in Richmond. She was one of my very best friends — Psychonias Rolfe Tinsley. Good old Poca-bonitas, Oh, ASA's official organ was the "Hellenic News."

By 1907 KD had 15 chapters. In the other three had 10. Also that year ASA sent representatives to a convention in Charleston, S. C. Their organ was "The Angel."

Between 1911 and 1913 three new organizations popped up. They were not called by their present names, but were known as Gamma Theta whose colors were azure and white and whose motto was the Lily of the valley. They had 16 members.

Mu Omega, which I'm not so sure is still in existence by another name, had blue and white as its colors, 13 members and a funeral wreath for its flower (?) Then there was Delta. Zeta Delta. And it had 15 members.

Around 1915 the Tri Sigmas put out a publication called "The Triangle." It was ever so nice.

Up until this point the sorority pictures in the VIRGINIAN were quite cute. Then they did something different. They became quite clever, you know. About the pictures, I mean.

The Phoenix was published by ASA in 1915 and I think it was the next year that the Pan-Hellenic Association began its work. Margaret Woynocott of Tri Sigma was president, Mary Swain of ASA was secretary, and Dorothea Ward of Gamma Theta was treasurer. Representatives from each of the aforementioned sororities were members of the association also. The Pan-Hellenic picture in the 1917 annual was quite good. The great fact that year was the head band that crossed the forehead. I was never quite sold on them myself.

Between 1919 and 1926 several other organizations joined the already growing list on campus.

To conduct all rushing as inconspicuously as possible and to make the lines of demarcation between sorority and non-sorority girls as slight as possible

To remember that of those to whom much is given, much is required

To remember that sorority badge is not a mark of superiority, but a pledge to high endeavor

To remember that the unity of sororities in the teacher's field means mutual improvement, protection, and to maintain the high standards for which the teacher must strive

To remember that a girl who smokes, drinks, or who breaks college rules is not conforming to the letter or to the spirit of Pan-Hellenic standards.

Pi Kappa Sigma, founded in 1894, chartered in 1897, came to State as the Alpha Epsilon chapter in 1928. There were 22 members and their publication was "The Laurel."

By 1931 Tri Sigma had gained a total of 24 chapters and 19 alumnae chapters. Pi Kappa Sigma had 22 chapters and nine alumnae groups.

Remember the sorority that was founded back in 1899 at Michigan State College? Well, in 1935 Alpha Sigma Tau came to State Teachers College in Farmville. Their publication was called "The Anchor" and their membership included 15 members and 10 pledges. There were 14 active chapters.

More organizations were added as the years went on. In 1939 Theta Sigma Upsilon arrived. It was founded in 1921 at Kansas State College and established here in '39. There were 11 members and 11 pledges. There was one particular group that I never knew much about. It was Phi Zeta Sigma. I do know they had a mascot — Miss London's dog named Tommy. This was about 1943 I believe. The pictures in the annual were getting more interesting all the time (heaven's sakes).

For instance, there was the Gamma Theta picture in the 1944 yearbook — the members paraded on overalls, bloomers-type pants and long-sleeved white blouses. On the overall straps were the Greek letters for Gam-

NCTE Meet

Two Longwood English professors, Dr. Ramsey Sprague and Dr. R. C. Simolini, Jr., will attend the annual meeting of the National Council of Teachers of English in Cleveland during the Thanksgiving holidays.

Following the Council's Children's Literature luncheon, the book department of Hiebee's Department Store in Cleveland will give an autograph party featuring Miss Sprague's two latest books, The Jade Pagoda and The Poems of Robert Browning. Dr. Simolini will attend also meetings of the NCTE Commission on the English Language prior to the convention.

school session. It was not until November, 1957, that the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed this decision and ordered the abolition of racial discrimination of schools "without further delay."

At this time Almond ruled that localities could adopt "Heretofore" operation of public schools (30 days at a time). On January 9, 1956, Virginia voters approved, two to one, a convention to amend the constitution to make tuition grants possible in Virginia.

On May 3, 1956, at a meeting of the county board of supervisors, a petition of intent signed by 4,184 persons was read, as follows: "We, the undersigned citizens of Prince Edward County, Virginia, hereby affirm our conviction that the separation of the races in the public schools of this county is absolutely necessary and to affirm that we prefer to abandon public schools and educate our children in some other way if that be necessary to preserve separation of the races in this county. We pledge our support to the Board of Supervisors of Prince Edward County and their firm maintenance of this policy."

On August 4, 1958, Judge Hutcheson ruled a seven-year delay for desegregation until 1965, in order to avert what he called "disorder and possible bloodshed." This was upset, when in May of 1963, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ordered desegregation in high schools by September, 1959, and also ordered that the county begin to plan the same for elementary schools.

When the fall of 1959 arrived, the doors of all the public schools in the county remained closed. On September 10, the Prince Edward School Foundation, before a national radio and television audience, conducted a formal ceremony for the all-white Prince Edward Academy. Classes began on September 14.

Encountering much criticism for failing to provide school facilities for Negro children, white leaders in December chartered a corporation called "Southside Schools, Inc." and sent out letters inviting Negro parents to enroll their children in this all-Negro private school system at a $240 annual tuition fee. Since the governing board was all-white and nine of the seventeen members were also on the board of the all-white Prince Edward School Foundation, the Negroes had little confidence in this enterprise. In addition, the NAACP felt such action might jeopardize their arguments in the courts. Most observers felt that the school issue would be resolved in only a short time in the traditional "token desegregation" fashion, which has been the pattern throughout the country.

Around The Campi

Overheard after the recent disapproval by House Council concerning the imprints on the new cement on back campus: . . . Well, if somebody hadn't written on cement we wouldn't have the Ten Commandments.

The newest thing in pseudointellectual analysis: This is a glass of water. But is it a glass of water? And if it is a glass of water—why is it a glass of water?

Hi, how you?

Would you like a partial or complete answer?

I'd rather be a dead June bug than a live bird of paradise.

Thought for the week: Idols often have clay feet—cause for some concern during the rainy season!

Has anyone noticed the lack of bells?—Perhaps only during those extra 10 minutes in Professor . . . classroom!

According to a documented statement, ho, ho, no one is starving in the U. S.—Cheery note for Thanksgiving!

Three Chinese cheers for people with clay feet Fooy! Fooy! Fooy!

Songs, Cheers Of Past

Make Up Greek History

no more after 38 years. It was sad, but most exciting.

When the Mu Omega chapter room closed in June everyone was still elated over becoming Zeta Tau Alpha. After 42 years of growth and development on liberal arts campuses, Zeta Tau Alpha, international women's fraternity, came home to the place of its founding — Longwood.

The local Phi Zeta Sigma chapter of Delta Sigma Epsilon became the Alpha Psi chapter of Delta Sigma Epsilon in 1950. Tau Theta Pi was founded at Longwood in 1950 also. It was a social fraternity for men on the campus. Dr. Lancaster came to the rescue and gave them the use of an unoccupied classroom as a club room. Every Saturday during October and November I remember them working so hard to fix it up.

The 1952 VIRGINIAN had some wonderful snapshots of the Greeks. In '56 alongside the pictures was a drawing of the groups' pins, and the next year a picture of the individual crests appeared. By this time each of the Greek societies had definite colors: ASA — red and white; AST — emerald and gold; Delta Sigma Upsilon — olive green and cream; KD — green and white; Pi Kappa Sigma — turquoise and gold; Tri Sigma — royal purple and white; Theta Sigma Epsilon — rose and silver; and Zeta Tau Alpha — turquoise and steel gray.

In 1959 The Epsilon Upsilon chapter of Delta Zeta sorority came to Longwood. The colors were old rose and vieux green. Remember the organization that was formed at Miami U. in Ohio? After 37 years this sisterhood came to the campus in Farmville.

The very next year the group that was founded at Syracuse back in 1904 also found its way to our Alma Mater. It was Alpha Gamma Delta with colors of red, buff, and green. It was the Gamma Lambda chapter here.

The same year another change came about. The sorority that started at Colby College in Maine in 1874 made its way to Longwood, too. It was the Delta Nu chapter of Sigma Kappa with its colors of maroon and lavender.

Founded on March 4, 1852 at Macon, Georgia, which makes it the oldest sorority, Phi Mu was ironically the very last to become part of our college — in 1962.

So after a long history of growth and change and organization there remains a total of nine sororities, each with their own colors, "yells", songs, pins, etc. but all dedicated to the betterment of the individual.

Alpha Gamma Delta . . . And staunch and true, as years pass through, is my fraternity.

Alpha Sigma Alpha "Are you a member, I say, a member?"

Are you a member of dear ASA? . . .

Alpha Sigma Tau "It's not the yellow rose, or the Emerald and Gold.

It's not the pins we wear, or the meetings we hold.

These are neat, you see, but the best for me.

"From you we'll never stray;

Your lamps will lead the way. We're sister proud to be Part of the Delta Z."

"I love the pin you let me wear, I love the Greek that's written there;

For I love you, my dear KD"

Phi Mu

"Everywhere that you travel

You'll find a Phi Mu smile . . ."

Sigma Kappa

"Oh, I'm a Sigma Sigma Kappa,

I'm a Sigma Kappa Girl,

A real live daughter of the Mystic Bond . . ."

Sigma Sigma Sigma

"Let us pledge to Sigma,

you and I,

Bonds of friendship never die,

Till we meet again."

a history major.

Freshmen Charli McCoy, Alice Collier, Sharon Sue Little, and Lea Dunn have all played for one year, and play just for the fun and spirit of playing and singing. They have no professional aspirations, and are therefore majoring in psychology, English, history and music, respectively. Of the group cited Lisa is the only music major!

Charli and Lisa like all kinds of music, while Alice prefers folk and Sharon enjoys folk and semi-classical. When it comes to their professional favorites, Lisa heads for the Lettermen, Charli likes all groups, Sharon likes Judy Hunsley, and Joan Baez ranks number one with Alice.

Mary, of Peter, Paul and the Doves, is Lucy Flannagan's favorite individual singer, but she also likes Jan and Sylvia, Lucy, a sophomore, has played for one year, and wants to major in English, not enter the professional circuit. On the other hand, Carol Inabnet and Freda Richards, both Freshmen, have worked a bit professionally.

Carol has played for one year, and Freda for four years. Folk music and ballads rate as their favorite kind, and Joan Baez and Odette as their favorite professionals respectively. Another similarity: both are English majors.

Yes, the guitar spirit is really catching on — everyday more people make the all-important purchase of the vital ingredients (an instrument, a basic chord book, a want and a will) or go sign up for professional lessons. Freshman Allen Carter Arthur has just started out on the guitar, but wants to make it her hobby. She is a math major, and, naturally, prefers folk music.

But, to all you people that are just embarking on your musical careers, or that were not caught up in our survey, we don't want it said that the Rotunda forgot any budding young genius. We also recognize (fill your name in the blank) — as an official Longwood Guitar Great!

Sportin' Chance

By LINDA TURNER

"It is the American spectator who sits in a recliner chair and watches non-televised and attends football games to cheer the home team victory." Thus were the remarks I made in my sixth grade class just before recess. The class excitedly went to the playing field. Boys were to play soccer, girls were to play softball.

I had read the rule of soccer because the boys had asked me to officiate, however, that had been with one day's experience. Now they proposed to play all sixth grade boys against all sixth grade girls. The excitement of creek athletics which we had discussed that morning could not have been matched by fifty children eager to get on with the game. "Boys have a captain, how about the girls?" I said. "You," they shouted, "ME!" — well, that's all I was able to say. I was to be captain of the girls' team.

Being in the middle of the action is quite a chance from my previous viewpoint. Play soon began and the ball was lost in a mangle of kicking feet. Our fullbacks had left their positions in front of the goalkeeper, the halfbacks had gotten caught between the fullbacks and forwards, and the goalkeeper who I must admit was not much of a manager, had gotten so excited he had left the goal post. We had to be organized. Our intentions were to advance the ball to the boys' goal before they had the opportunity to find out the weakness of our goalkeeper. When play began, we successfully made an advancement of approximately twenty feet, then the whistle of the officiator (another pupil) was blown. A forward had forgotten and touched the ball with her hands or arms. The boys received a free kick; however, we soon recovered it, only to hear the whistle again. "Rule number three," the officiator said "is that a player may not touch the ball a second time before it has been played by another player after a kick-in free kick or penalty kick. On well, we were going to make a goal. The score was now six to zero. I saw the ball heading for the goal and I tried to kick it instead of picking it up as a goalie is allowed to do. In one skirmish I lost my shoe in a kick attempt. Nevertheless we were not discouraged. If we could get one point, that would be a successful game.

We planned, plotted and put on a "TO SCORE" chant. The opponents were so captivated by our determination that they allowed us to maneuver the ball to the other goal. You know — we did score!

'Home' Again

Henrietta Gilliam unpacks after returning from her student teaching assignment. Although a Spanish major, the active senior is an avid sports participant.

Sports Spotlight

Gilliam Finds Time For Sports, Languages

By Betty Wright

Just back from student teaching in her senior year, Henrietta Gilliam, majoring in English and Spanish, doesn't get a taste of the outside world at Longwood in December.

Back at Longwood, Henrietta picks up the reins of responsibility in a variety of activities. This, her senior year, she is first vice president of Alpha Sigma Alpha, secretary and the Athletic Association.

This not the first year that Henrietta has willingly shouldered leadership responsibilities. In her freshman year, she pledged ASA and became a member the first semester. She became an active participant of the Spanish Club as a result of her double major.

Henrietta has made class has ketball, volleyball, and hockey these years provide her with her most outstanding ability in this field though is varsity tennis. A three year participant, she represented Longwood in the Middle Atlantic Tennis Collegiate Championships at Mary Baldwin College in her sophomore year.

In her junior year, Henrietta was elected varsity tennis manager for the AA Council. She was elected vice-president of the Spanish Club and chosen as first vice-president of her sorority.

This capable senior has participated in May Day and Circus. As for student teaching, Henrietta has this to say: "I really don't at a whole lot. I can't wait to get out on my own. You don't know how much you don't know until you try teaching someone else."

Student Teacher Bring Back Anecdotes

gers; however, his fingers never seemed to manage to strike one key at a time, but many, and quite often slipped between them.

Another student teacher received eleven apples and reportedly told her pupils on the following day that she had been unable to eat all of them. Their disappointment didn't last long for each day after the student teacher was the recipient of a variety of apples including one shining brightly with the absence of a healthy bite on one side.

Much excitement was created when a mouse was found in another student teacher's desk drawer. A note was found with the unwelcome guest saying "Why can't a pretty field mouse be trained to act in a circus like some small dogs? Answer: too small to be trained to perform." Don't be upset; it has been a thought problem for the receiver ever since too.

First grade teachers are official teachers, mother, nurses, playmates and problem solvers. On arrival in her first grade class, a student teacher observed the teacher's discussion of the color blue. Sheets of paper upon which pictures of a butterfly, kite and grapes had been sketched were distributed for each child to color blue. A slightly confused pupil asked the student teacher, "Miss —, this is a butterfly isn't it?" She answered, "Yes, Steve, it is." He replied, "Never in my life have I seen a blue butterfly."

"Well, what color butterflies have you seen Steve," she said. "Only yellow," he said. Her advice was to color it yellow. When the paper was returned to Steve, an error had been marked by the blue butterfly. Steve stayed after school and said "You said this was a butterfly. The teacher marked it wrong." The kind hearted student teacher corrected the paper and put a large good across the top. He happily asked, "Are you going to be here tomorrow?"

The questions collected in their minds were soon answered and new ones invented each day. Changing from student to teacher, student teacher that is, was quite an adjustment. As student teachers, some were asked to chaperone dances, substitute for a government, health, or music teacher, type report cards for 6000 pupils, be private secretary for a school's dean, or participate in a faculty party's entertainment. You must have noticed a group of smiling faces waiting at their mailboxes for letters from their pupils or you must have chatted with someone who just recently had the wonderful experience of student teaching. Their remarks have been repeated again and again such as: "I love it," "Wish I were back," "I miss the children already," "The eight weeks flew by," and "You know I didn't know that I was really enjoying it until I couldn't hold back the tears the last day."

Brooks, Dunn Win Tennis

Class tennis was officially awarded to the red and whites as Liz Brooks captured the Championship in her duel against Lisa Dunn.

The two freshman finalists went at it tooth and nail as Liz broke away and won two out of three sets 6-4 and 6-2. Liz and Lisa both played their way to the top from a list of contestants which included Phyllis Collins, Sandra Long, Nevis Born, Ruth Limbrick, Patsy Kelly, Carol Langley, Gay Rice, Gary Edwards, Susan Leazar, Pat Barlow, Jane Annan, Pat Kite, Becky White, Frances Stewart, and Emma Ryan.

Also included were Kathy Kolsun, Civil Task, Judy Houch, Ginny Morton, Sharon Williams, Gert Gerhardt, Betty Wright, Carolyn Burnette, Connie Gallahan, Deanna Davis, Karen Ruder, Mary Ann Whitehead, and Lucy King.

With their win in class tennis the red and whites added five points to their climb toward the

Physical Education Assistants Prepare For Teaching Career

by RUSTY STEPHENSON

Nine weeks ago, unnoticed by the rest of the student body, ten junior physical education majors dressed in white, armed with whistles, hockey sticks, and butterfly flippers assisted. Assisting is one of the many steps a physical education major goes through in preparation for teaching after college. It is more formally classified as a part of Physical Education 333-354. Majors assist in the second semester of their sophomore year and the first semester of their junior year.

To an outside observer assisting seems to be rather easy and uncomplicated. All one has to do is be on time, dress neatly, and smile. To inside observers, namely the junior majors, assisting is a bit more complicated such as lesson plans, written and practical tests, and actual teaching. The extent of control the assistants have over the class is determined by the class professor. Most of the assistants are responsible for class attendance, discipline, the lesson being taught, and evaluation of the student's progress. There are many other things that make assisting unforgettable. For instance, what to do with 40 beginning hockey players when it rains and none of your lesson plans are designed for indoor use. Or how to control your temper when, after telling them for two weeks who takes free hits, they look at you like they have never heard the word when you call a free hit in a game. The value of the assisting plan is self-explanatory. The student who is assisting is placed in a teaching situation similar to student teaching, and is given the opportunity to apply all that she has learned in the same way she would if she were teaching in a public school. Assisting also serves another purpose. It enables the physical education department to offer more concentrated instruction to a greater number of people. Assisting is one of the many reasons why the physical education major has one of the best backgrounds for future use of any major on campus.

FROM THE BOARD

The Evaluations committee will hold an assembly at 6:45 Wednesday November 18 in Jorman Auditorium. At this time the committee will report the results of their evaluation of the 'rating' program. After a discussion period, a student poll will be taken. This is your opportunity to express your views on rating. If you are interested in this issue, please attend and bring a pencil.

The Legislative Board decided on the following penalty for failure to attend committees. One cut in assembly will result in attendance probation status; two overcuts the student must appear before the Dean of the College and a letter will be sent home by the Dean.

After looking into the possibility of obtaining student identification cards, we have found that we will not be able to have them this year. However, the Board is still checking further into this matter for future years.

The Board has also been checking into the possibility of placing low-calorie drink machines in some of the dormitories as the result of a student suggestion. The Coca-Cola distributor with whom we talked reported the following facts:

Low-calorie drinks freeze when placed in machines with coke. Even coke in the nonice machines is vended at 38 degrees or below.

There is not enough business to justify placing low-calorie drink machines on campus. The cost of installation for one machine is $2,000.00.

Gang Way

The scene is the Rotunda just before meal time, where singing, conversing and general mingling can be observed any day, especially when there's an extra good menu.

Official Ratings

This past week, ten junior physical education majors received their USPHA umiring ratings. Carolyn Cline, Rusty Stephenson, Frances Stewart, and Barbara Randall received Local B ratings; while Nevis Born, Phyllis Collins, Helena Hall, Phyllis Lasley, Ginny Morton and Karen Ruder received their Local C ratings.

These ratings recognize the girls' abilities in the officiating of field hockey games. The requirements for these ratings include a written examination and approval by two rated umpires who have observed them in a game situation.

The USPHA offers four classifications of rating - the National Honorary, National, Sectional (A and B), and Local (A, B, and C). Therefore those interested in the area of officiating can progress and receive recognition for their skill.

'Electra' To Open In Jarman Auditorium

THE ROTUNDA

VOL. XLIII

Longwood College, Farmville, Va., December 9, 1964

No. 8

Hester Presents Student Recital For Fraternity

Miss Judy Elaine Hester, mezzo-soprano, will present a pledge recital in Jarman class room on December 14, at 7:30 p.m. Judy, who will be accompanied by Billie Sue Board, is giving the recital as a requirement for membership in Sigma Alpha Iota, national music fraternity.

Judy will present seven songs in her recital. These songs are a recitative from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," two German songs by Schumann, an Italian song, "Vergin, Subito Amor," a French song by Jules Massenet, and two contemporary songs, "Old Song" by Douglas Moore and "Enough" by Esther Cooper.

Judy, a junior music major at Longwood, is from Chesapeake, Va., where she attended Churchland High School. While in high school, Judy studied voice with Mrs. John H. Hardy. Since being at Longwood, Judy has studied under Edward Hull and James McCombs, her present teacher.

During high school, Judy was very active in musical activities as she participated in various vocal competitions throughout the state, and was an active member of her high school choir. Since coming to Longwood, Judy has participated in two recitals. During her freshman year, she sang in a recital given by several voice students, and in her sophomore year, she gave a half recital. Judy has also done much solo work in the Longwood Concert Choir and in the Madrigal Singers, both of which she has been a member of since her freshman year.

This year Judy competed in the National Association of Teachers of Singing which was held at the University of Georgia. Judy, accompanied on the piano by Billie Sue, placed fifth among junior college girls from the Southeastern District (Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia).

Judy, who is singing the contralto solo in the Christmas section of Handel's Messiah at the Longwood choir Christmas concert, will present a full voice recital in the spring.

Turner To Head 'Y' Pageant

Next Tuesday evening, December 15, the Y.W.C.A. will present their annual Christmas Pageant. Several traditions will again take place, like the displaying of the Madonna, the Christmas Story, and seasonal, traditional music.

This year Jenny Turner is Chairman of the Pageant Committee, and Cheryl Scruges is her assistant. Mary Ann Haskins is to be the narrator, and a soloist and Dr. Molnar's Chorus will perform. The Christmas Story, with all narration from scripture, will be enacted.

Plans, started before Thanksgiving, will be culminated with the announcement of the Madonna. Candidates for this honor are selected by the Y.W.C.A. Cabinet, and the Madonna is elected by the student body. Characteristics she must possess include a high character, Christian outlook, and fine personal traits.

The Pageant stresses the religious, meaningful aspects of the season, not the commercial, and for this reason all students are urged to attend.

LOVE — THE HEDGEHOG CROSSES!

Longwood College Concert Choir, H-SC Glee Club Give Program

The Longwood College Concert Choir and the Hampden-Sydney College Glee Club will present a joint Christmas Concert on Sunday, December 13, at 3:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. The program will be under the direction of Dr. John W. Molnar, director of the Longwood Choir, and Dr. Ivan Olson, director of the Hampden-Sydney Glee Club.

The program will consist of several selections performed by the separate choirs, and then a finale which will be performed by the combined choirs.

The first portion of the concert will be presented by the Longwood Choir, under the direction of Dr. Molnar. The choir, accompanied by Gail Milstead, piano, will sing several choruses from J. S. Bach's "For Us a Child is Born." They will also sing "Adoramus Te, Christe" by Palestrina; "Regina Coeli" by Aichinger; "How Far is it to Bethlehem?" by G. Shaw; "To a Virgin Meek and Mild," a Polish carol arranged by Giarum; "In Excelsis Gloria," a French carol arranged by Henninger; and "Christmas Day," a collection of Christmas carols by Holst and arranged by Molnar. Soloist during this section of the concert will be Mildred Johnson, mezzo-soprano, and Linda Pritchard, soprano.

H-S Glee Club
The Hampden - Sydney Glee Club will present the second part of the program. Their selections will consist of "Praise Ye the Lord" by Saint-Saens; "Cantabile Domino" by Hassler; "Le, a Voice to Heaven Sounding" by Bortolianski; "Carol of the Bells," a Ukrainian Carol; and "Coventry Carol," arranged by Scott. Alan Elliott will accompany the Glee Club on the piano. The conclusion of the program will be a presentation of the Christmas section of Handel's Messiah by the combined choirs.

Soloist will be Judy Hester, contralto, and Billie Sue Board, soprano. The selections from the Messiah will be accompanied by several members of the Richmond Symphony Orchestra: Mr. Jack Kaminsky, Mr. J. Paul Note, violinists, and Mr. Victor H. Parcell, cello. Three of the Longwood Choir members will play with the symphony members. They are Doris Harwell, the flute, and Sue Pearce and Penny Livingston, clarinet. Sally Poltsage will accompany the choir on the organ, and Dr. Joanne Curmott, professor of organ and harpsichord at Longwood College, will play the harpsichord. The members of the Longwood Concert Choir are: Soprano 1: Betty Janice Bone, Mary Louise Brooks, Eileen Drayton Fishburne, Susan Margaret Fuller, Carol Dean Gibson, Karen Templeton Gibson, Catherine Ann Holmes, Carol Marie Lee, Phala Ann Legett, Margaret Charlotte Lehtinen, Christine Ann Mannina, Ruth Ellen Morehead, Mary Ann, Neal, Linda Rae Pritchard, Mary Patricia Rose, Jean Rhea White.

Giradoux's "Electra" Premiers Tomorrow

"Love to a hedgehog is crossing to the other side of the road", so says the Beggar in Jean Giradoux's Electra. The play will be presented by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs this coming Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, December 10, 11, and 12 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

The many aspects of love are treated in an unusual way by Giradoux who uses as the basis for his play an ancient Greek story. The plight of the Atrides family centers around the discovery by Electra that her mother, Clytemnestra, and her mother's lover, Agamemnon, murdered King Agamemnon when he returned home to Argos after the Trojan War. Electra's grief for her father and the revenge by she and her brother, Orestes, were also the basic themes for plays written by Sophocles, Aeschylus, and Euripides. Giradoux, however, wrote his version of the play in the 1930's rather than in the fifth century B. C.

Cast of "Electra"

Portraying Electra, the mournful and revengeful daughter, is senior Mary Lynn Lander. Mary Lynn, an English major from Staunton, has appeared in many plays in Jarman, is secretary of Alpha Psi Omega, and president of Beorc Eh Thorn.

In the part of Queen Clytemnestra, the wrong-doing mother, is freshman Kelli Loftis. Portraying Agatha, one of the "well-known women's faces" of the court is sophomore Mary Shelley Ryan. Shelley is an English major from Norfolk and a member of the Granddaughters Club.

The three Eumenides, who during the play grow into the three Furies, are played by sophomore Karolya McAdoo and freshmen Freda Richards and Marian Mowbray. As Nurse's wife is a freshman Jan Crouch, as the Beggar who is thought, perhaps to be a god, is Gerald Randall. Agamemnon, the resident of Argos and co-murderer of Agamemnon, is portrayed by J. P. Rogers. Orestes, the brother returned home, is played by John Hutt. In the role of the President, Agatha's dull husband is John Marshall Jones. The Gardener and second general are played by Dave Relyea. In the role of Captain and first guard is John Martin.

El Club Espanol Presents Annual Holiday Fiesta

Strains of Spanish festivity will fill the air tomorrow night when the annual "Fiesta Espanola de Navidad" takes place. This celebration, sponsored by "El Club Espanol," will be held at eight o'clock in the Student Lounge.

According to the president of "El Club Espanol," Sue Sweeney, much entertainment has been planned to make this an enjoyable event. Lucilla Koppany, our Argentine exchange student, will direct folk dances of her country; Mr. McCombs will present a musical selection; Laurie Soyars will present piano music; and Mr. Helms, Mr. Viera, Sue Sweeney, and Beth McPherson will sing "Vincitillo."

In addition to this festive celebration of Christmas, a solemn part will also be featured. The biblical reading of the Christmas story and Nativity scene will be read in Spanish. The beginning and intermediate classes will sing Las Posadas, the traditional Spanish song begun nine days before Christmas to commemorate the journey of the Wise Men.

Plantas full of goodies and a costume prize will also be featured. Another Spanish tradition, the "vrapo contest," is also planned for the occasion. It is the custom just before twelve midnight on Christmas Eve to eat twelve grapes for each time the clock sounds. Needless to say, it should be quite entertaining.

All students, Spanish-speaking or otherwise, and all faculty members are cordially invited. Hasta luego . . .

Senior Class Sponsors Drive For Old Clothes

The Senior class is sponsoring a clothing drive during the Christmas season. They are collecting old clothes, junk jewelry, trinkets, and old magazines for the Lynchburg Training School.

The members of the Senior class will make a door-to-door collection for these articles at nine o'clock the night of the Christmas banquet. All students are asked to contribute.

Ann Griggs is in charge of the drive. All questions concerning the drive should be directed to her.

Montgomery Exhibits Paintings, Crafts

Currently on display in the exhibition room of the library are the paintings and crafts of Mr. Lee Montgomery, a consultant and teachers for the City of Newport News. The works have been submitted for the month of November and will remain there until Christmas vacation. They include paintings, wood carvings, glass ware, mosaics, and ceramics.

Mr. Montgomery's paintings are for the most part, reflections of nature. That is, he first sees something in nature; then his vision filters through his own emotional and intellectual constitution, until his vision reveals itself as an artistic and aesthetic creation. The paintings range over a seven year period, and they show the development of the artist's thinking in regard to this environment. For instance, he depicts scenes from his environment in such water colors as River Banks, Pier, and Sand Bar.

There is a more universal theme in his later works. He is depicting at Blundering Point exceeds his own environment in the York River.

When we hear that an artist has used water colors, we expect something very traditional and realistic. Mr. Montgomery exceeds this in that he takes a medium such as water color, explores his own ideas in a very personal and inventive way. He uses a media in such a way as we would not expect it to be used. He uses glass for most of his ash trays, but he uses it in an inventive way. The same holds true for his mosaic and wood creations. There is a fusion of the artist's ideas with the media he considers best for the expression of his ideas.

Mr. Montgomery is a graduate of the University of Georgia, and did advance study at Columbus University and the Penland School of Arts.

He has had his works exhibited at the Virginia Biennial Exhibit, Irene Lasche Memorial Exhibit, the Norfolk Museum, Southeastern Exhibit in Atlanta, and at the Tidewater exhibit. Currently he is residing at Blundering Point on the York River.

Fall Of '64

Editors Note: The information for this editorial was gathered from a series of interviews with various persons working in, attending, and administering the school system of Prince Edward County. We wish to acknowledge with our appreciation their co-operation and the giving of their time.

Our first concern was to report whether there were special needs in the County concerning education. We contacted the County Superintendent of Schools and Mr. Harper, the Superintendent of Classroom Instruction, observed. We have some problems that you might find in many other school systems. Of course, we have a special problem with retarded children, especially in remedial reading." After looking around and conducting further interviews; however, several questions came to our mind concerning other phases of the school system that might be the root of additional problems.

We wonder about the condition of the buses. There seems to be some question about their safety and the crowded conditions that exist. Since our last bus was purchased by the Free School Association have been discontinued has this curbed the children's participation in extra-curricular activities? This is especially poignant because large numbers of the students come from a low, socio-economic background, and any delay means of transportation is thus.

We found that money left by the free school for the continuation through this year, of free lunches for students who can not afford the price of the meals each day has been rationed so as to stretch out over the next several years. Free lunches are now allotted on the percentage of people eating in the cafeteria each day. When the last number for the day has passed through the line, the free lunches are stopped. This is understandable to high school students, but difficult to explain to elementary school children. We wonder how adequate adult conditions are provided in schools that are not equipped with lunch rooms?

What about chances for further education in a school system that offers only two years of foreign language to its students? Other schools lacking in the curriculum that raise questions to our minds are art, dance, speech and dramatics?

We also wonder about clinical facilities that include one nurse for the entire system and no doctor even on a part time basis.

What about the plants themselves? In the elementary schools especially, there are terribly overcrowded conditions. Between twenty-five and thirty-five students are crammed into rooms that aren't very much larger than one of our dormitory rooms. In some schools, there is also a problem with adequate toilet facilities.

The next question dealt with special plans set up to meet the needs of students who have been out of school for four years. Mr. McIlwaine and Mr. Harper answered. "We have one person in charge of remedial reading in the high school, and one person helping the retarded children in the elementary schools." Two people in the role of the school.

We next asked where the funds to sponsor these programs had been obtained. The answer—"From the Free School Association."

In response to our next question they answered, "Four schools are now in use."

Our next question related to the hiring of teachers. Mr. Harper stated, "We hired them as soon as possible. The official announcement came on November 1st. Our staff was hired by the time school opened with the exception of one or two new teachers they will be hired at the regular time." This is understandable under the circumstances, but we wondered at the fact that several people had applied for jobs as early as the winter of 1963. It seems that there was "some" indication that the schools might open even then.

We then asked about the qualifications of the teachers. Their answer—"We tried to get teachers with degrees. All of them do except one or two. All have previous experience in practice teaching." This is very fair, indeed, but we wonder how many had experience in addition to practice teaching. We found that some heads or departments were in their first year of teaching.

In reply to the question of salaries, we were told that the starting salary for teachers began at $4,000 and went to $5,250. Mr. Harper then stated, "The public schools are running on approximately a half-million dollars."

We then asked about the dropout problem. We were told, "There is no particular drop-out problem. On we have had a few, but almost as many have come back in." In view of this question, we will be interested to see if this holds true at the end of the year.

Our next question dealt with absenteeism. Mr. Harper stated, "Absenteeism is not as great as we would like it to be. Of course, there is the compulsory attendance law. This is not a state law and it is left up to the counties. Our county does not have such a law. With the absence list climbing close to 100 every day, and with students requesting that they be excused, the numbers of children not enrolled in school, our questions are: Why doesn't this county have a compulsory school law?

We realized the problems and vast amount of work involved in operating a school system that has been closed for ten years, and the difficulties in working with children that have been without education for this same amount of time. We feel sure that Mr. McIlwaine has done a commendable job and is expending every effort to provide a quality education for these children. But, we also see a need for much improvement. This is an extraordinary situation as you would find in any other school system. This is the first time in modern American history that a situation like this has existed. That school system that is coupled with special programs are desperately needed. These programs that all citizens of the community should contribute themselves with and work together to correct.

Berkis Defends Position Taken By Minister

Dear Editor:

I feel I should reply to the letters of Barbara Melton, Gayle Ray, and Connie Birch which appeared in The Rotunda November 18. The letter of Miss Birch contains the following closing sentences: "Reverend W. O. McClung contributed a breakdown in law and order to Farmville by closing the doors of his church to a large segment of this community." I consider this to be a grave moral question. Miss Melton asserts that there have to be the churches and community of Farmville have their bad image in the national press.

It is quite obvious that the authors of letters do not realize that they are blaming citizens for defending their elementary legal rights. Any minister has to act in accordance with the will of the majority of the members of his church. The individual members of our community have certain basic legal rights not to require but demand not only privacy of their homes but also of their worship in churches. In this regard the rights of the individual are superior to the rights of the state but also to the society, especially an unruly mob trying to break into a church or to disturb a worship. Any member of our community has the right to demand law enforcing officials to enforce a mob or persons violating our basic legal rights. What image the society of Farmville might have in the national press is not from a legal point of view, entirely immaterial and irrelevant.

Miss Ray asks: "What positive action was taken by Reverend McClung in the social revolution which is taking place in the South?" It seems Miss Ray thinks that a mob or political pressure can deprive us of our basic legal rights as if we were living in a police state. Let me express my personal opinion facing this issue. In case a mob could without penalty break in church or political pressure be dragged into my church, I would not hesitate for a moment to drop my church membership because there are certain limits beyond which a person should never retreat a single step. The sooner those who try to make such a social revolution realize that there are very definite limits to their actions, the better for them and the society.

I am proud to be a member of a community which has more than plenty of ministers and citizens who have sufficiently strong backbone to defend their elementary legal rights against all kinds of libel and brainwashing in the national press and all other kinds of pressure and blackmail regardless of how powerful such pressure and persons behind it might be. Fortunately, we still live in a country where laws prevail. Let us help it remain so always.

Burger Reply Of 'True Facts' Goes On Record

Dear Editor:

In reference to the counter charge made by Miss Gayle Ray and the reply by Miss Connie Birch, in The Rotunda dated November 18, 1964, to the letter written by Rev. W. O. McClung, Pastor of the Farmville Baptist Church; I would like to make the following observations in order to set the record straight.

In answer to the question by Miss Ray, "Was it a moral reason that allowed you and your congregation to turn Negroes away when they tried to worship with us in your church?" it was the fact that they made the decision on the morning of July 18, 1963, backed up by the Board of Deacons, of which I was Chairman, and not Mr. McClung as Miss Ray stated. Miss Birch made the statement that Reverend McClung contributed to a breakdown in law and order in Farmville by closing the doors of his church to a large segment of this community. To again set the record straight, Dr. McClung was in the pulpit and had no idea of any decisions being made on the outside of the church until the service was over. Had either Miss Ray or Miss Birch been present, and witnessed what took place in front of our church on the aforementioned morning, they would have a much clearer picture of the event in question.

If you will read the court proceedings, on record in the Prince Edward County Court House, you will not find the defense admitted that the twenty-three persons of the Negro race were in the wrong and the court was convinced that "worship" was not their motive; and I do not consider twenty-three persons a large segment of this community.

I might suggest that your paper get the true facts in the future, before accusations are made about anyone. I feel that it is only fair that the Longwood students who attend our church, and worship with us, know the true facts.

Sincerely,
Robert B. Burger

Chi Examines LC Tradition Of Rattling

Dear Editor:

Both Chi as an organization and its members as individuals hold dear the traditions of Longwood and have as one of their goals the maintenance of these traditions. To many people rattling is remembered as a wonderful time of "ups" and "downs" which always ended with the fearful "Rats aren't amongs anymore" and with the beginning of many lasting friendships.

This is the way we feel about rattling. The facts, therefore, which were presented by the Evaluations Committee at their assembly were quite a surprise. We found, first of all, that rattling was not enjoyed by as large a percentage of the freshman class as we had believed for less than one half of the freshmen participated in the rattling Saturday afternoon.

Secondly, rattling is thought of as being designed not only to be a pleasurable experience, but also to be a means of helping freshmen avoid homesickness during their first weeks at school. Yet, for a majority of freshmen, rattling was unsuccessful in this respect. Thirdly, it was pointed out that because of the increase in the size of the student body, rattling is becoming inefficient. How, for example, can the Top Rats watch out for the welfare of 900 or 1000 freshmen? This is impractical; yet this is a problem that would be encountered in the near future because of the rapid growth of the school.

We feel that rattling no longer fulfills its purposes and may even become dangerous. Longwood has outgrown rattling. If a new program could be developed that would preserve the traditions of friendliness in a growing school, we would like to encourage it. If it is developed, perhaps by the Top Rats themselves.

Sincerely,
CHI

Students Fail To Make Use Of 'Gripe' Box

Dear Editor:

Recently the Business Office placed a suggestion box at the Student Bank teller's window at the Student Bank. The purpose of the box was to indicate any suggestions they might have that would better help us determine the best way to serve the students.

This suggestion box remained in this location prominently displayed for approximately three weeks. During this period a total of 31 students were interested enough to make suggestions. Of this total, some made more than one suggestion.

For the information of all concerned, approximately 350 students and organizations, etc., have accounts in the Student Bank. This does not include many students who do not have accounts but do cash checks, make change, etc. Of these 950 accounts approximately one-fourth or 237 use the bank Monday through Saturday each day, for a total of approximately 1432 accounts not including check cashing, change making, etc. If these figures were processed each week, this figure three times for the three week period is available for use, and you have an approximate total of 4306 plus banking activity.

These figures indicate that 67% per cent of the approximate 1432 students use this service the suggestion box. The figures also indicate that the Student Bank cashier processes approximately 65 students per hour or roughly one student per minute.

I can only draw the following conclusions from this survey: 1. The students are either not interested in improving the banking services or they are completely satisfied with the facilities, etc. 2. The banking staff is very efficient, to say the least. 3. The students are reluctant to commit themselves to making suggestions or did not have time to submit a suggestion because of present congested conditions.

I submit the results of this attempt to secure student suggestions to you, since I believe you, or your staff, indicated a desire to bring these results to your college newspaper.

Please indicate to your readers that the Longwood College Student Bank is operated only as a service to the students.

Thank you for your attention, and interest in this matter.

Very sincerely yours,
Ronald G. Lawhorne
College Accountant

The Business Office P.S. Of the thirty-one (31) suggestions tabulated, the majority indicated a desire for longer banking hours, more cashiers, and elimination of the long lines. One student suggested menus of dining hall food service be placed in the dormitories, and several students commented on dining hall waitresses payroll checks not coming until the end of each block.

Clearly Answers School Letters On Intolerance

Dear Editor:

In the last issue of The Rotunda, Rev. McClung was literally attacked from all sides because of his comments on the possibility of the amendment of Longwood regulations having an effect on Longwood's general moral outlook. He was accused of being a man whose own actions condemn him as unimpartial of race and order. Is there another side to the story?

The letter writers were obviously interested only in their views excluding all concern for Rev. McClung's attitude. They hurled stone after stone of proof at Rev. McClung for his action in the instance of the amendment of intolerance as a quality of intolerance themselves. Perhaps his convictions prevented him from stating such an event to take place within his church.

Rights seem to overshadow all other comments on the issue, but does Rev. McClung not have the right to act as he sees fit, just as those who oppose him may act as they see fit? Before we accuse others of intolerance, let us examine our own. If we need to act in intolerance are not planted within us to see if the seeds of intolerance are not planted within us.

Rotunda Likened To Bullent by NAACP

Dear Editor:

Frankly, I am absolutely bored with the numerous articles that continue to drive the Prince Edward education matter into the ground. I am equally disgusted with hearing how the poor Negroes have been without an education in this county for four years. It is quite clear to me that most people are either ignorant to the fact or choose to ignore the fact that the Negroes were offered an education in Prince Edward County, however, they turned down this opportunity for the reasons — which are totally invalid if investigated — that were given in the article by Rupert Pickett in the November 18th issue of THE ROTUNDA.

You may say that the Negroes were fighting for a principle; and perhaps you are right; but the people of Prince Edward County were also fighting for principle of Constitutional rights — a principle equally as vital to them as that of the Negroes.

I only wish to add that many students of Longwood College share my desire for THE ROTUNDA to deal a little more with the activities of this campus and a little less with the "problems" of the Negro in Prince Edward County. We would like to be proud of our newspaper instead of wondering if in reality it were not a copy of an NAACP Bulletin.

Existentialism Warrants Reply From Chavatel

The Rotunda

Attention Mr. Melton: I commend you on your interesting analysis of existentialism (Nov. 18) as it has been seen through the expressive genius of the Great Bard. I might add that both the sensitive, lucid words, Sartre and Sower, should be proud. Equally, I admire your forthrightness in revealing to those of us who are not so concerned with the Negro's plight in Caucasian eyes too often has been one of mere essence as a differentiated being, rather than one of existence as an equal human being. This is more than supposition—it is an acknowledged truth by those of us who concern ourselves with the serious matter before us today in our society. The word "day" in our context, the act of "becoming" . . . or exceeding himself . . . or seeking to better his assumed status, changes the prospective teacher to transcend the supposed level of normal achievement. And, this achievement must include a new breadth of rationality heretofore uncalled for. Perhaps of more immediate concern with our teacher trainees is the fact that racial barriers that this institution must never fail to the quest of educational leaders who acknowledge that an evaluation of conservative, accepted mores of the past is mandatory.

However, could not your assessment of existentialism be expanded to include what our student needs specifically are here at Longwood? For example, I suggest that, if since the Negro is rapidly being recognized as an equal, he will have to be taught as one not to extol the fact that he himself must want to learn as one. That our prospective teachers — that our student trainees — that our students are here at Longwood for this purpose I assume must now prepare themselves to face this new era of education in human understanding as an ultimate eventually among white educators; and, (3) that the types of education are to be the quality of education, the student increasingly demands, they too will have to learn to "exist" in vital, stimulated, rational thinking. However, should not simply being charming, as acceptable as sweet, be a part of the female school marmas . . . "in (Continued on page 3)

'Goes Longwood Ladies'

By The Group

Just before Thanksgiving vacation six members of the Longwood Judicial Board journeyed to Emory and Henry College in southwest Virginia to help their women's student government set up an Honor Code system.

Last year at the SIASS (Southern Intercollegiate Association of Student Governments) Convention, held on the LC campus, the representatives of Emory's WSGA were greatly impressed by our Honor system. They asked the Judicial Board members if, at some time, we would visit their school and present the various aspects of our Honor Code. They were very interested in setting up one on their campus.

Arrangements were made about two months ago for the November 29-30 meeting. The weekend finally came. We waited for two members of the group who were student teaching in Richmond to get to the campus.

Around 5:30, with a large send-off (composed of many of the campus crowd who were excited to see us leave, and the remaining members of the J.B. who were not very excited at all) we were off for E. and H. — the only problem was that we weren't really sure how to get there. All we did know was that we were going to follow our motto: Go West, young Longwood Lady, go West.

So with that in mind the Leader of the Pack, the Vice-Leader, and the two senior pack members and the two freshmen pack rats, escorted one "civilian" (Harriet Anderson), headed for the mountains of the south-west.

We were driving one of the better state cars, (cracked windshield, wheels out of line, and tailpipe falling off), which added us numerous times for a close shave along the side of a yellow line, and sideways in a front-parking parking lot. Anyway, we made it to Lynchburg and stopped at Holiday Inn for dinner. They were most helpful to see us.

The only traumatic thing that happened in the Roanoke was that I didn't know how to get out of it to go on to Burgundy. You'd never know we had a Lynchburg citizen with us.

Heading into Roanoke we had a little service station hopping — there were those among us. At one of our stops we called a couple of our Roanoke student essence! Education, beyond what pictures we of the faculty can draw for the meaningful reality of the concept, is a bright, shining light for the self-reliant, earnest young woman whose responsibility to herself for the future is now. It is not as an act of procrastination in education which until she arrives at her new vocational post, all wrapped in the packaging of theory often received in stereotype.

Whether it be in facing the awesome task of providing meaningful learning for all the children from all environments, to the involvement with and discovery of new ideas for the future for Longwood graduates has to be a bright, illuminating, and an exciting one. It can only be maintained this way if all teacher-candidates learn that their existence must be meaningful and that their essence in being women has little to do with the enrichment of living into which they must guide our youth. The total woman from Longwood has the challenge to be the total person in developing total personality regardless of environmental, ethnological, or racial backgrounds.

Oh — we forgot to mention our committees, which did a bang-up job on the trip:

- 1) Committee on Transportation — Laraine and "Dixie"
- 2) Committee on Road Maps — Laraine and "Dixie"
- 3) Committee on Scenic Tours — Joyce and Anne
- 4) Committee on Public Relations — Laraine
- 5) Committee on Food — everyone
- 6) Committee on Finance — Laraine
- 7) Committee on Recreation — "Dixie"
- 8) Committee on Sleeping — the Pack Rats
- 9) Committee on Keys — Mary Franklin
- 10) Committee on Heat, Defrost and Air — Nancy
- 11) Committee on Wages and Means — Joyce
- 12) Committee on Music — Joyce (bagpipes), "Dixie" (Jewish chants) and Laraine (song book)

All along the route we were constantly kept informed of the area by the two Virginia geography experts who studied under Dr. Lane — Joyce and Anne.

Upon arriving (finally) in Radford we deposited our "citizen" passenger, decided to tour several clover leaves and then decided to go to the south-west through the wilderness on route 11. But we found that for some reason we were heading north. This was not bad, but since we did want to go south-west, it wasn't too good. So in order to go south we first had to go east and from east we got back north, then we took the next turn which put us back toward south which was the way we were supposed to be going in the first place.

All this time we were still beset with a running narration by Dr. Lane's Virginia geography students.

Believe it or not we got to Pulaski and there we stopped the next coffee at an exclusive Greek restaurant called the Washington Cafe. The little man behind the counter studied Greek (alpha, beta, chi) and didn't seem to know the names of several of the neighborhood delinquents.

After our coffee break we were attempting to leave town when we were held up by a freight train. During the half hour we waited we discussed some Honor Code changes. We had been sitting there with the motor running the whole time (not knowing exactly when the ridiculous train would decide to move) when it was decided by one of the clever members that (by previous experience) the train would probably leave as soon as the motor was cut off. The motor was cut off, and not more than half a minute later.

On the other side of the tracks we refueled, credit card in hand. The time was about 12:00 midnight.

Around 1:30 we were still on route 11 looking for Emory and Henry College. We figured we were close, so we stopped at a tiny little place called Dead Eye and got directions from one of the local inmates as to the whereabouts of our goal. He stated that if we turned right at the next half mile down the road we'd be just about there. Five miles later we found the turnoff (he had a marvelous sense of distance) and the first indication of an institute of higher learning.

At approximately 3 a.m. we pulled up to what looked like the newest dorm (which was Marsha Washington, the one we were told to find). But several boys were coming out the door so we rather felt that we might be at the wrong dorm. We inquired as to where Marsha Washington was and were told that she had been dead for quite a number of years.

Needs to say, we eventually found the right dorm and were greeted by all the government officials. About ten minutes after that we passed out.

At the end of the next sunny morning (with the temperature at least 35 below outside — well at least 35 degrees) we arose and finally had a meeting with the president of the WSGA and the advisor, who was also the assistant dean of women, who was also the head house-mother.

At this time we heard about the problems confronting the WSGA at Emory in setting up some sort of Honor Code. Then we explained some of the major points of our Longwood system. After this initial informal meeting we went to lunch (meals are cafeteria style). We noted that there were many odd and strange-looking creatures who seemed to be going to classes and eating in the dining hall along with the women students — you know, like they belonged there.

After some investigation we discovered that they were males. We knew it was a co-ed school alright, but it took awhile for it to sink in. It soon reminded one of high school days.

Following lunch we went to the football field to watch Emory play their last game of the year against Guilford College (N.C.). It was a very close game. Guilford's most outstanding feat, other than winning 70-0, was stopping Emory's hard drive down the field on the one centimeter line. It was a terribly frustrating play for E.H.

We were sitting in the bleachers right above the cheerleaders. About halfway through the game one of the group members told us that she was back to the dorm. (One of the industrious student teachers didn't even come to the game because she was busy working on lesson plans to see their supervisors). Then there were only four of us.

Oh — forgot to mention the row of boys behind us who yelled constantly and when people didn't want much action they yelled. Obviously you've heard the one about the polar bear who sat on a block of ice — that was told. Then there was the lady who was cross-eyed and when she cried, the tears fell on her back and died of bacteria.

By the third quarter two more of the group left. Then only two remained to brave the freezing cold weather. Although we were well-clad and had blankets over us, by the end of the game it didn't seem too likely that we'd be able to make it back to the dorm, since we didn't have feet anymore — just blocks of ice. At one point we were sure we would have to be amputated. And our mouths were frozen so we couldn't cry. Weep, weep.

Near the dining hall there was a pond with some stupid ducks who were quacking and swimming around in the icy water. It made one feel ill just looking at them. Then there were the two swans that didn't do much of anything.

We saw Baxter Carter, one of our ex-Longwood gentlemen, by the way (that's for all the seniors).

For dinner we met with the WSGA and some members of House Council for several hours. Throughout the discussion it was evident that our Honor Code had many merits that we perhaps had overlooked. Compared to other systems Longwood had a basically sound and strong and well-functioning Honor system.

Naturally there were points brought up as a result of discussions such as these, and much thought possible these weak points will be strengthened in the near future.

We headed for the Hut (like our "room") afterward and took in some more of the scenery.

Back in the dorm again we got into a deep intellectual discussion when we finally realized we had to get up at 7:30 the next morning and find the Catholic church. The nearest one was in Bristol, 30 miles away.

A motor was made to adjourn to bed. It was seconded, and there being no further discussion we voted. The motion was carried — only one night-wild vote was given.

Next morning — next cold, frozen morning — we stood by the good old state car at 8 a.m. Although we could not see the road to the one-half inch of solid ice on the windows, and the fact that there was no scraper to be found, we were not discouraged. Oh, no, for our senior pack member who was head of the Ways and Means Committee found a means to see the way. She extracted a comb from her pocketbook.

About 20 minutes later we were making our way out of the campus by remote control. Everyone had a peep hole to look through. Eventually, the heat from the Defrost, Heat, and Air Committee got on the ball and we had a clear windshield. Everyone played Catholic for the morning for there was one among us who had much influence. She had the car keys. The only problem was that we didn't know where the church was in Bristol, so our amazing navigational ability was put to good use. Also our Public Relations head managed to get some directions from some man who pulled into the gas station right next to us. We found the church and were even early, believe it or not.

By noon we were ready to leave Emory and Henry and head for home.

We managed to go quite a ways without incident. But then someone (we will withhold the name to protect the guilty) felt the need to hang out the windshield and get some fresh air. She forgot that the map was in her hand and at the first huge gust of wind our beloved little map was blown down the highway in the opposite direction. Oh well, we were actually there.

Only half an hour behind schedule (our schedule) and after a slow lunch we pulled into Radford and picked up that "civilian" again. We thought she looked rather shocked because we were actually there. Hmmm.

At one of our stops, there was one among us who had the need to urinate, but was unable to because the door to the ladies room at the gas station was locked. That was in Roanoke. Our next stopping point was Bedford. Fortunately, the door there was open.

Around 8 p.m. the campus lights were before us and we were back at good old Longwood College, after 565 miles of wandering and a most unique excursion. We can't wait till the next one.

Miss Hood enjoys sports, music, science. This is her first year at Longwood.

Sports, Science Tops On Newcomer's List

Miss K. Elizabeth Hood has joined the faculty in the Natural Sciences Department here at Longwood College. Before becoming a resident of Virginia this fall, Miss Hood made her home in Birmingham, Alabama. She has also lived in Mississippi, Ohio, North Carolina, and Georgia.

As a biology major Miss Hood graduated from Aenes Scott College in Decatur, Georgia in June 1964. This past summer she began graduate work at the University of Virginia Mountain Lake Biological Station near Blacksburg, Virginia. She is currently making plans for more graduate work.

As an undergraduate at Aenes Scott, Miss Hood was a student assistant in the biology department, and during the summer of 1963, she was a student research worker in the Diabetic Research Laboratory in the University of Alabama Medical Center in Birmingham, Ala.

Miss Hood has various hobbies which consume her time out of class or laboratory. Her major interests other than science are music and sports. Miss Hood plays the french horn, the piano and the guitar. She also enjoys listening to records. In the line of sports, Miss Hood says that her favorite is basketball, but she also likes baseball, swimming, and tennis. At Aenes Scott, Miss Hood played field hockey, basketball.

Beore Eh Thorn

Beore Eh Thorn, Longwood's recently accepted English fraternity, has recently accepted nineteen students into its membership.

In an effort to help the new members, the group has held recently in the Cyprus Room. Theresa Albright, Kay Catron, Betty Garner, Carol Gibson, Barbara Milton, and Louise Mann were inducted into the organization. Other initiates included Martha Miller, Judy Squires, Nan Tyler, Donna Weatherly, and Annette Weston. A second initiation was held on Dec. 8. Those initiated were Sue Ball, Mary Jane Blackburn, Glenda Booth, and Elaine Mann. Other new members included Martha Miller, Betty Leavelle, Beverly Rank, and Rosemary Rudy.

Entrance into the club is based on grade average and contribution in the study of literature. The student must have completed a minimum of 18 hours of English with an overall "B" average in these courses.

Sports Spotlight

"German Tank" Proves Outstanding '65 Senior

By Sharon Williams

In this week's spotlight is a real sport of a different nature. She is none other than Maria Ann "Dixie" Grant.

First, let it be explained that Dixie was not chosen spotlight necessarily for her outstanding ability in sports. Dixie was selected because the Rotunda felt that some small tribute should be paid someone who may never make the Olympics, but who has participated in all the class sports.

Dixie came into her freshman class like a German tank into a stone wall — conquering everything in sight. She was placed on the throne of the freshman presidency by her classmates. This was a result of her competence shown in the direction of the fresh ski for Circus. Then her class selected Dixie as their Circus Court representative.

In the line of sports, Dixie has played class basketball, class hockey, and class volleyball. These sports have been a devotion with her for her entire college career.

As a grand finale to her departing freshman year, Dixie was elected to the judicial board as her class's representative. So pleased with their representative's ability on the Judiciary, the class has elected her to this position for her junior and senior years.

MARIA "DIXIE" GRANT

As an outlet for her love of writing, Dixie joined the Rotunda Staff in her freshman year. As a sophomore, she was chosen Page Editor. Dixie created the candid column known as "Around the Campi."

Dixie received an invitation to join the national Journalism fraternity Phi Delta Ep-salon. On the Rotunda Staff, she moved into the position of Managing Editor.

The Junior trophy needed money and what better income than the door receipts of a college homecoming? The first to be given at Longwood was even more than successful with a great deal of thanks going to one of its organizers — Dixie Grant.

Dixie was given the responsibility of Feature Editor for the Rotunda. This year, she has written histories on judicial and legislative bodies, and on social societies bringing to the students the past record of the largest activities on campus.

AKG finally recognized Dixie's talents and tapped her in their annual ceremony.

Dixie, like everyone, has her pet peeves. For instance, she doesn't like to hear someone say, "Oh, she died." This stemmed from her experiences in a dentist chair when she thought she had died.

If a philosophy could be attached to Dixie, it probably would be "There is a place for everything and everything should be in its place."

She is a member of Sigma Phi No. 10, a member of Sigma Phi No. 10, a member of Sigma Phi No. 10, a member of Sigma Phi No. 10.

Ask her something and expect anything.

Dance Forms Offered At LC

By Emily Landrum

Dance is the oldest art form of mankind. It is based upon movements of the body, which are inherent as are basic or body rhythms. Man danced or moved to his own rhythms long before he developed song. Man's tendencies to dance are inherent because of movement, which itself is satisfying and which, by man's intelligence, assumes symbolical forms in other arts as well as the dance.

Man's social dance forms, as folk, social or ballroom, plus square dance reflect the social, cultural streams, and in this instance that stream, which may be described as Western civilization.

Our civilization has its roots in folk dance as a basic type underlying many other forms. At the other end, the folk root is augmented by modern dance as an essence of the basic movement or basic dance concept underlying all forms in either civilization.

Dance is reflected in many facets of life as in the present period of unrest, uncertainty. The restless beat is apparent in contemporary social dance forms as the Strand, Slop, Pony, Twist, Hully Gully, Mashed Potatoes and the traditional patterns quick step, rumba, a re-defined pattern as the Bossa nova.

WHY IS FOLK DANCE IMPORTANT?

Folk dance is an outgrowth of basic dance in Western civilization, but which may also relate to patterns of dance developed by folk throughout the world at some time or times. Generally, folk forms develop by being handed down through generations or a new step is evolved but lies dormant for years.

This is a folk period of dance, music and song. Link the Beatles and Hootenanny to the folk concept and one can almost visualize a somewhat medieval world beset with many woes.

WHAT IS SQUARE DANCE?

In square dance or the American patterns of indigenous folk dance relates to exploring tunes and figures as dance is traced and developed as it moves across the land. Dance is traced from Virginia, New England, across the mountains, drifting out in the Midwest in a definitely described square, which becomes a series of interchanging patterns of circle, square, and modified longways as it goes farther westward.

WHAT IS TAP DANCE?

Essentially, tap reflects aspects of folk dance or dances of the common folk. Some ethnic forms as Spanish and Mexican dance are taplike in their rhythmic patterns of foot beats. The Irish are another source for understanding tap as folklike and possibly a basic beat that man never loses.

In tap dance, the dancer or learner plays upon a beat, all around it, embellishing it with as many sounds as one gets from one beat, shifting the beat or accent.

WHAT IS MODERN DANCE?

Modern dance is not modern nor are other art forms. The term — contemporary or 20th dance is a better label than modern, but experts, dancers accept this name in the same sense as they apply modern to art in general.

Modern dance of the 20th century is rooted in basic movement and basic rhythms that underlie all dance forms or types. In our period, it is considered as a hybrid, offshoot, or outgrowth from the codified techniques of the classical ballet. It was really a revolt from the ballet, which was understood by figures, as Fokine, who worked as hard to change aspects of ballet at that as others in the modern dance went back to the essentials of all arts, dance forms — movement, rhythm and expression in a new form of theater dance.

WHAT IS ADVANCED MODERN DANCE?

Here, Choreography or composition becomes a problem. One goes into the fine points of the theater dance. One learns to develop dances as basic problems in learning for oneself, then re-arranged for a trio or duo group. Symmetry and asymmetry become problems in staging dances. The use of space and time always relate to the theme or central idea of the work. Members of Orchestras lend basic support to this advanced class in their attempt to have a higher level of dance through basic study of it alone. Other students may choose the course if they are specifically interested in dance as theater dance.

SHOULD I TAKE DANCE FUNDAMENTALS?

Dance fundamentals is an orientation class for understanding movement in dance form, basic techniques for skill development as in any other area of physical education, and one's self and others. One learns to understand herself through exploratory movement and technique experiences.

WHAT DOES ONE DO IN MODERN DANCE?

In the second course, or if you have had some previous training in dance, you learn to take dance out of the gym and structure it for the stage. Emphasis is upon projecting, or taking dance out of the gym or studio into the theater. One is always oriented to some one looking at your work and can they understand what you are doing. This stage of learning may be likened to understanding a painting or music and sculptural form which is not arrested. One learns to manipulate dance as he visualizes other art forms and he becomes an onlooker and a dancer.

A new course — SURVEY OF CONTEMPORARY DANCE FORMS — will be taught for the first time this spring semester. A comparative study of the literature pertaining to classical ballet, modern ballet and modern dance as theater dance will be done through films, music for understanding relationships and through tracing the similarities and differences in content relative to classical ballet as compared to modern ballet and modern dance.

Juniors and seniors are invited to join the class. Some prefer. A comparative study of the literature pertaining to classical ballet, modern ballet and modern dance as theater dance will be helpful.

Students will study ballets of the past and then progress to an understanding of the changing forms in ballet itself.

Around The Campi

About the freshman who makes grilled cheese sandwiches in her room with an iron.

Someone found some chewing gum in the Boston cream pie last week, and the comment from somebody in the kitchen was, "Was it your flavor?" The girl's reply, "I don't know. I didn't chew it long enough."

Book of the Week: "White Like Me" by Tinkie Cleary.

Pseudointellectual comment of the week: Hi, how you? Relative to what?

While heading toward Emory and Henry for the Student Government meeting, the group passed the Golden Rule Funeral Home.

Know what the 500 pound rat said in a low voice? "Here, kitty, kitty, kitty."

Annual Christmas Tree; Tradition Through Years

by Linda Turner

The Longwood Christmas spirit arrived in the form of the Rotunda tree. What merriment the tree always causes! It's not an ordinary one imported from parts unknown, but one carefully selected by the Buildings and Grounds Department from our Longwood Estate, or old Farmville Airport.

When it rested sturdily in its

Juniors Plan Ring Dance, Banquet, Show

This year the juniors have big plans for the weekend which has been set aside for the yearly "Junior Dance". Their plans include a banquet, a concert, and a Ring Dance, which will fill the entire week end of February 27.

First on the list for the week end will be a banquet for the juniors on Friday night, February 26. This will be held in the Senior Dining Hall and will be a time for the entire junior class to be together.

On Saturday afternoon, the juniors plan to have a concert. The concert group has not yet been selected, however, due to complications in negotiating with booking agents. News about the concert will be posted as soon as the juniors select a group.

Saturday night will be the time of the Junior Ring Dance. The dance will be held in the old gym from 9:00-12:00 P.M. Dress for the dance will be formal; girls wear long formal; boys wear tuxedos. Music will be provided by the SOUTHSIDE SEVENADERS. At the dance, the juniors will receive their rings.

The entire week-end should be especially exciting for the juniors, but the whole student body is invited to the concert and the dance, and the juniors hope that many students will come.

Christmas Banquet

"... 'Tis the season to be jolly" resounded throughout the campus the night of December 14 when the Freshman Commission presented its annual Christmas program. The affair began in the dining room with a holiday dinner prepared by the Slater System. Christmas eggnog and petit fours were the tempting previews of this delicious meal.

The members of the commission entertained with a skit entitled, "Presents to Longwood." Everyone was then invited to the Rotunda for the "hanging of the greens," and Christmas carolling.

A seasonal greeting from the commission... "The Freshman Commission wishes in a very special way that you and yours will be sure to have a Merry Christmas day."

stand, another year's problem appeared solved; however, the Freshman Commission looked on with anticipation and excitement — how would they ever decorate that twenty foot tree from top to bottom? Did you pass through the Rotunda to see the per cent? Some were unimpaired lights, others were sorting bails, several were taking turns on the high ladder in an attempt to reach the top, and all were singing carols. Such enthusiasm and energy saved for the occasion!

Now the 1964 Christmas Tree will reign over Longwood. Waiting for the meal to be spent in songs, and the entwining of the greens around the banisters of the Rotunda after the Christmas dinner warmed the hearts of everyone. Children reminisce the jolly chuckle of Santa, parents recall the crackle of logs in the fireplace and Longwood students pack and present remember the Rotunda Christmas Tree.

Toys For Tots

Longwood Christmas tree is decorated by the Freshman Commission and placed in the Rotunda every year. It is here that "Toys For Tots" are collected.

Increase In Enrollment Brings Need For Expansion Program

Longwood College has submitted to the State Budget Office a request for $4,947,600 in appropriations and bond issues, with which to expand and improve its physical facilities during 1966-72 in anticipation of a per cent increase in enrollment during the six-year period.

Some $2,800,000 of Longwood's capital outlay request is earmarked for building four new dormitories to house a student body that is expected to increase from a present enrollment of 1,458 to approximately 2,400 students by 1972.

President Francis G. Lanford, Jr. stated that during this period of projected growth and development the college will ask the State to appropriate $3,475,500 in actual capital outlay funds and to authorize the issuance of bonds totaling $1,460,000 representing one-half the cost of the four additional dormitories now contemplated.

These requests for the 1966-72 period are in addition to capital expenditures of $2,068,000 authorized for the current biennium, 1964-66.

Of the total amount being requested for the projected three biennia, 67 per cent — or $3,300,000 — will be needed in the 1966-68 biennium as follows: $2,600,000 in legislative appropriations and $700,000 to be borrowed in a bond issue. Requests for the two subsequent biennia are: $972,600 in 1968-70 and $775,000 in the 1970-72 biennium.

Top request for the two-year period of 1966-68 is an art, drama, and music classroom building, estimated to cost $1,117,800 of which $285,000 was appropriated by the last General Assembly, leaving an unappropriated balance of $832,800 now requested.

Another top-priority request is an addition to classrooms and science building, an addition that was anticipated in 1963 at the time of the original construction and would provide classrooms, laboratories, and faculty offices at an estimated cost of $268,000. Also high on the list of requests for 1966-68 are two dormitories — each designed to house 200 students and one head resident. These two buildings would be similar to others recently constructed and will cost an estimated $700,000 each, half of which may be financed by appropriations and half by sale of bonds.

An accompanying request for $50,000 covers the estimated cost of providing utilities for all new classroom buildings and dormitories.

Additional capital outlay requests for 1966-68 are as follows: construction of new tennis courts and resurfacing of present courts — $45,000; parking lot — for additional 400 students — $100,000; conversion to classrooms of Post Office floor to Ruffner Hall — $85,000; conversion of Student Building to dormitory — $60,000; conversion of second and third floors of Ruffner Hall to offices for administration and faculty — $180,000; electric service improvement — $41,800; extension of athletic fields — $50,000; additional entrance to dining hall and fireproof vault — $50,000; modernization of heating systems — $51,000; and additional land — $75,000.

Two additional dormitories constitute 85 per cent — or $1,400,000 — of some $1,647,600 requested for 1968-72.

Commenting on capital planning, Dr. Lanford stated that the college first determines its future enrollment increases and then makes developmental plans that represent a "balanced building program" — one that maintains a proper balance in the construction of housing, classrooms, equipment, utilities, athletic fields, and dining facilities.

According to Dr. Lanford, "The college endeavors to project its building program in biennium development units to assess and timed to meet the needs of higher student enrollments as they occur."

WORLD'S FAIR

Anyone interested in entertaining at the World's Fair next season contact THE ROTUNDA for further information.

Students Select Craig For Pageant Madonna

Last night, December 15, 1964, Sandra Craig appeared as Madonna in the YWCA's Annual Christmas Pageant. Each year a Madonna is chosen from the Senior Class by the student body from a list submitted by senior class officers, the Freshman Commission and the YWCA. This year fourteen girls were nominated for the honor.

The Madonna is chosen for her virtuous qualities quoted from Proverbs 31: 25, 26, 27 and 29. "Who can find a virtuous woman? For her price is far above rubies... Strength and honor are her clothing and she shall rejoice in time to come. She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness... many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all."

Sandra Craig is an elementary major from Roanoke, Virginia. During her years at Longwood she has been active in all phases of the school. She was a member of Freshman Commission, and served as Freshman Counselor during her sophomore year. Sandra was secretary of the Screening Board for major and minor elections. As a junior, she was tapped into Alpha Kappa Gamma and was Ringmaster for the 1963 Circus. Recently Sandra was selected for "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities." At present, she is doing her student teaching in a fifth grade in Roanoke.

Frosh Elect Co-Chairmen For Show

Newly-elected co-chairmen of this year's Freshman Production are Nancy Young and Nan Myers. Nancy is an elementary and English major from Richmond. Nan is a history or sociology major from Hampton. They have signed up a script committee which began meeting this week and plans to have the script completed by Christmas. People wishing to work on the production may sign up on the freshman bulletin board.

College Boards

Scholastic Aptitude Tests and Achievement Examinations were given to students of Farmville, Prince Edward County, and nearby Cumberland County last Saturday, December 5, here at Longwood. All told about 160 students participated, taking their Verbal and Quantitative tests in Jarman Auditorium and their Achievements and Writing Sample in the Hiner Building. The College Board Exams are old and established, but continually are altered. They were started in June, 1926, when 8,000 candidates took the initial test. There has been quite a change in them, since in a recent year, 1961-62, 819,339 students took the SAT.

Professor Carl Brigham, of Princeton University, was mainly responsible for the shaping of the SAT, and its early history. This leads to present day, for now, as a highly successful program, it is required by most colleges for admission.

Registration

Registration for the spring semester will be held January 11, 12, and 13 in the evening. Freshmen and seniors will register on the 11th; sophomores on the 12th; and juniors on the 13th. Dr. Brooks says that it is hoped to be able to use the IBM Data Processing Equipment for this registration. Registration will be held in the Student Building and the old gym.

All students are requested to see their advisors and make out a temporary schedule before January 11.

EXAMS

The exam schedule will be up right after Christmas vacation. Be sure to clear up conflicts immediately.

Audio-Visual

The Audio-Visual Department of Longwood is the audio-visual center of the college and is the Bureau of Teaching Materials for Southside Virginia under the direction of Dr. Edgar M. Johnson.

The Bureau, connected with the State Department of Education, sends educational films to registered schools and public health agencies in fifteen Southside counties and the cities of Lynchburg and Danville. Each year the Bureau adds $400 or more worth of new films.

The facilities of the department located in the Hiner Building are available to faculty and students for individual and group use. Available materials on college level subjects include films, film strips, film slides, glass slides, and recordings. Motion picture, overhead, film strip, film slide, glass slide, and opaque projectors may be used. Other equipment includes record players, tape records, photo-recording equipment, and a drive recording press.

The film room is open from 8:00 to 5:00 on weekdays and from 9:00 to 12:00 on Saturdays. There are two projection rooms, one of which is open after hours.

A person wishing to use the facilities may use the film catalogue in the library or film room. Materials and equipment must be booked with Mrs. Gillis. If necessary, appointments for instruction by student assistants in the use of the equipment may be made also.

YWCA Sponsors Speaker Hobbie For Assembly

The Longwood YWCA was proud to be conducting its second Spiritual Life Service this week, February 9-10. Guest speaker for the event was Mr. F. Welford Hobbie, who is presently Pastor of First Presbyterian Church in Staunton, Virginia. He was born in Roanoke, Virginia, was graduated from Davidson College and served in the U. S. Navy as a line officer.

He attended Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, Virginia from 1946-1949, and did a year of graduate work for his Master's Degree at Union Theological Seminary. He studied one year at the University of Basel in Switzerland. Mr. Hobbie has served pastorates in Chatham, Virginia and in Tarboro, North Carolina, and is presently serving in Staunton, Virginia, where he lives with his wife, the former Jean MacDonald Maxwell, and their four children.

The Spiritual Life Series has as its general theme, "Learning and Living." Mr. Hobbie has been dealing with what seems to him basic to both, and "that is a confrontation with meaning of life."

Services began with an assembly program on Tuesday at which time Mr. Hobbie spoke on the topic "The Question of the Meaning of Life." The Concert Choir, conducted by John W. Molnar, presented musical selections Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Virginia Room. When the topic "Faith's Answer" was discussed. A musical selection by Mendelssohn was presented by soprano Billie Sue Board, accompanied by Sue Pearce.

Tonight at 7 o'clock an evening service will be held in the Baptist Student Center. The topic to be considered is "The Christian Way of Life." Music will be presented by The Madrigal Singers, under the direction of James K. McCombs. Services will be concluded with a short worship service on Thursday morning, conducted by Mr. Hobbie. An evaluation breakfast for members of the YWCA Cabinet follows.

Head Of College Administration To Return To Virginia Faculty

The students and faculty were all surprised at the sudden announcement of Dr. Francis G. Lankford's decision to resign as President of Longwood College. The formal announcement of Dr. Lankford's resignation was made at a meeting Saturday afternoon by Mr. W. H. King, one of the members of the board of directors.

In a letter to Millie Woodward, president of Student Government, Dr. Lankford made some statements expressing his sentiments, statements which he intended to be delivered to the entire student body. The following statements were taken from the text of his letter: "You will understand, I am sure, that this decision leaves me with mixed feelings. I am excited with the prospect of this new undertaking, but will leave behind many happy experiences and fond memories of my ten years at Longwood.

"One of the most enjoyable parts of my work at Longwood has been my associations with the students. They have been an inspiration and their support has sustained me as I have dealt with the many problems of college administration. The excellent spirit in which the students have worked with the administration to promote changes for the good of Longwood accounts in large measure for the progress we have made."

Dr. Lankford will go from here to the University of Virginia where he will become a faculty member of the school of education. He explained his decision to return to teaching by stating that he has held a desire to teach again for a long time. With his remaining six years before retirement, Dr. Lankford is looking forward to his teaching position in hopes that it will be very self-fulfilling. It is indeed a time for reflection as another ten-year era in Longwood's development draws to a close.

Freshmen To Present "Growing Pains" Mar. 19

Since February 2, the Freshman class has been rehearsing for their Freshman Production, "Growing Pains," to be held in Jarman Auditorium on March 19. The story of the skit revolves around a modern - day girl, Barbara, and her continually frustrating search for something better out of life. As a child she seeks the fast-moving, fun-filled glamour of the teen years. When she becomes a teen-ager, she looks forward to the quiet, understanding period as a young mother. As she reaches this age, she seeks freedom to travel and be free of all responsibility. During these times, Barbara is confronted with many humorous incidents and people. As she finds herself, Barbara realizes that she has at last overcome her "growing pains."

Members of the Freshman class who have parts in the skit are: Mayling Simpson as Barbara; Bunny Harrison as Mrs. Henderson; Carol Sue Croton as Norman; Mary Tyler as Mary Jane; Sandy Curry, Carol Blythe, Hortense Mitchell, Jeanette Bedisoul, Sue Gatewood, Judy Hall, Ellen ood, and Patsy Stricker as the eight girls at the pajama party; Mary Polifka as Jenny Andrews; Patsy Springman as Mr. Andrews; Adele Richter as Mrs. Andrews; Phyllis Myers as a child; Marianne Hurlbert as Susan; Kitt Loftis as Susan's mother; and Ellen McCienden as Mr. Jones.

Nancy Young and Nan Myers were selected by the members of their class to be co-directors of "Growing Pains." Other committee chairman are: Script committee, Diane Davidson and mitee Patsy Diehr; Programs and Tickets, Phyllis Myers; Publicity committee, Martha Mullins; Costumes, Kitt Loftis.

The Freshman class is working hard to make this year's Production the best on ever. They plan to charge $50 per person to add to a future project of the Freshman class of 1968.

Miss Longwood Pageant

This year's Miss Longwood Pageant, will be held here on April 9 and 10.

The annual contest is sponsored by the Student Government Association. Its purpose is to select a young woman who possesses the attributes of good character, intelligence, sense, charm, talent, and graciousness of manner to represent Longwood College.

Last year's winner, Mildred Johnson, looks back on her reign as Miss Longwood and the events of the Miss Virginia Pageant as "an opportunity to establish many lasting friendships and to have numerous memorable experiences. It has also afforded me the opportunity to bring the name of Longwood College to the attention of many people on both state and local levels."

A list of the general rules and regulations for the contest will be distributed this week to the classes and organizations on campus. Also, any group of 10 people who wish to sponsor a friend may procure the regulations and an entry blank from Judy Tate in South Cunningham 127. All entries must be in no later than 7:00 p.m., February 19.

Library Exhibit

Reproductions of paintings by famous artists are on exhibit in the main room of the library. These reproductions may be rented for the semester for $1 at the check-out desk. Because of the demand, only one painting is allowed for a suite.

World Renown Dance Company Performs For LC Artist Series

Jose Limon and his dance company will be presented at the Artist Series February 17 in Jarman Auditorium. Jose Limon Limon and his company will perform "Distinguished Ambassadors of Dance." They represent the highest category of artistic achievement and add to the prestige of this country.

For the third time the Limon Company has been sent abroad by the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations, administered by the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA) for the United States Department of State. They have just recently returned from a three month tour of Latin America which included Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Trinidad, Venezuela, Panama, Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala, and Mexico. Their first tour was in 1954 when they went to South America, and their second tour was to Europe in 1957.

The Limon Company played in the great capitals and in many small cities. Their tour was an unparalleled artistic and cultural success. Everywhere their performances were received with enthusiasm and acclaim.

Now the Limon Company is touring the United States. They are presenting here works which have been presented abroad such as "The Moor's Pavane," "Night Spell," "Ritmo Jondo," "There is a Time," "Toccata," "The Traitor," and others.

Among the choreographers, other than Mr. Limon, are the great Doris Humphrey, the talented Ruth Currier, plus others.

Registration Procedure Raises Many Comments

By Susan Wolfe

SHH!! A moment of silence in reverence for a few departed days—namely the 11th, 12th and 13th of January.

Do you still remember the mass hustling, busting and breaking down, and the ridiculous newscasts? The center of the room being crowded, and everyone carrying papers, cards, could easily imagine a ticker tape scattered about and skeptics even envisioned a Black Friday, 1929. But the hours ticked by. It was Registration, January, 1965.

The first to go, the seniors and freshmen, were lucky though everyone else—but lo, fate oft times plays funny tricks. Sophomores and juniors were left resting in sections, before they closed, getting the right courses, and for some, catching pneumonia or frostbite. This small disadvantage was soon corrected though, and Tuesday and Wednesday nights had relatively low temperature problems inside.

Actually, if you could read and follow directions the new registration was no more difficult than any past or future method. But then too, think of the poor girl who peeped out at the end of the English line only to reach the front and find out it was for Natural Sciences. Minor adjustments, must, of course, be made by the individual.

Seriously, though, what were real opinions of this IBM Registration? Dean Brooks thought it "definitely an improvement over the fall" and that the whole procedure, "went more quickly." His only negative view was the amount of people on the first night—too many. His favorable affirmative feelings include the cooperation fostered through the process, the accuracy of the results, the fact that every faculty member had a role for his class and a classification for each of their students. He felt it was "Good this time, but next time it will be better."

Pacitly opinions were mainly favorable. Mr. Byrneside, who headed the process, said he was very satisfied with the system as a whole, and he thought under the circumstances it had been excellent. "Error-free," he said, "very human, not mechanical." Mrs. Kathleen Cooper, sociology teacher, said she was pleasantly surprised, and thought it turned out very well on the basis of his first attempt. She was very pleased.

"Monday was agony," were the words of Dr. Rosemarie Sarason. "But Tuesday and Wednesday went well." Her questions for improvement include more advance in advance so students would definitely know sections and courses, better lighting in the gym, and registering in order of seniority. She feels once "Things got ironed out, it was a very good session." But, still, admits she will never get over Monday. Mr. Batts thought the registration went quite well, and that, "they were in confusion with the old system." Also, he thought it was much more efficient. "It was like storming out of the Stone Age into the Modern Age."

Student opinions differed a bit. Senior Jackson Schmidt summed it up in one line. "It was very fully cold." Sally Taylor also a senior, said she thought it was rather disgusting, for the birds and added she couldn't get any classes she wanted.

"Some kids were really upset and it really took a long time for some," was Junior Susan Twilley's opinion. She attributes for her words "fear." She thinks she thinks "there is a better way. It was better than the first of the year, but it's still not as good enough yet." Robbie Allen, another junior, thought "it worked real well except the juniors being late. I think that."

That juniors were late, I am happy about that. Sharing the same opinion, another junior, Gene Edwards, observed it was off better than she expected and went smoothly.

Ann T.ewell, a sophomore thought it went "real well." So did Sue Gorder, who added, "It was a lot easier. I was only 15 minutes, but I waited from 1907 on wheels inside." One other sophomore, Ester Royster, was rather disgusted, and said she thought the main back up was with the adviser section where she had to wait an hour for her name to be called. But, all said, she felt it "better than usual."

Miss M. B. Freshman, thought it ran smoothly, with a lot less confusion and she got the courses she wanted. "It

History Of Honorary Groups Shows Variety, Fun, Purpose

By Maria Grant

As all the other phases of Longwood life, the honorary organizations on the campus have a long, if not humorous, background. Most of the ones in existence today are rather recent additions (since the '20's) as well as to the conglomerate of groups at Longwood. We take you now to the year 1904 as AGELESS again attempts to recapture the spirit of the era.

"It's ever so nice to have room in the 'Rotunda' again," I thought perhaps I would never be able to relate any more of my extraordinary experiences. Heavens.

The first type of honorary organization that I can recall was one around the year 1904. It was called the Arcus Literary Society and the colors were gray and green. I do wish I could go on about it, but I frankly can't remember anything more than the fact that it was there. My goodness—I forgot the Conningham Literary Society, whose colors were green and white. And that was even back in 1902. How nasty of me. Its main course of study was southern writers.

In 1906 the Pierian Literary and Debating Society and the Athenian Literary Society came to the campus. They were such fun. Especially the Athenian. They had a motto (as most other things at that time). "I never could see any better because of it, but then one can't always have everything."

"Self-reverence, self-knowledge, self-control" was the motto of the Ruffian Debating Society of 1912. Actually I lied. That was not their motto. It was just of a trademark. The real motto was: "Much as we value knowledge, we value mental training more." My, my, that's a terribly good thought, even today.

The very next year came the Jefferson Debating Society with its motto, "Equal and exact justice to all." Hummm... They had rather many debating societies then, didn't they?

Something I noted with much interest was the fact that there was possibly some correlation between the Ellen Richard's Club of 1917 and Alpha Kappa Gamma. You see, the Ellen Richard's Club, which lasted on quite a number of years, was a service organization. Although I don't recall too awfully much about it, it did bear some resemblance. Maybe the idea for Alpha Kappa Gamma (original) Alpha Delta Rho came from this early club. Well, it's always possible.

In 1925 there was a group called Pi Kappa Omega. You may not believe it, but for some reason I can't remember one thing about it. Maybe my notes got mixed up over the years, or my diary, or something. But also that year, in the spring to be exact, Alpha Delta Rho was founded at Farmville. The purpose was to act as a coordinating unit where influential girls of the college could meet and discuss things of vital interest to the students and the college in general.

Fall of 1927—I remember that a group of students at the University of South Carolina organized with a similar purpose. They became known as Gamma Omega Pi.

On May 12, 1928, representatives of the two local organizations I just mentioned, Alpha

Around Other Campi

If you think Longwood offers interesting and activities, just look around to other campi and you will find even activities as diverse as horseback riding.

Recently, "Stone House" a Ski Club which plans trips to various ski resorts, was organized. Several other clubs, such as the Eastern Mononette College in Allentown, Pennsylvania, a No-Curfew Society for seniors is in effect on a tent basis. Maybe the idea will come down to reach their membership camp to the South.

At Mary Baldwin College in Staunton, formal classes are of forced

At Pepperdine College in Los Angeles, California, the new idea is the recent Powder-Puff football game between the freshmen and the upperclassmen girls. Winning the game by scoring five touchdowns was the Homecoming Queen.

At Muhlenberg College in Allentown, Pennsylvania, a No-Curfew Society for seniors is in effect on a tent basis. Maybe the idea will come down to reach their membership camp to the South.

At Mary Baldwin College in Staunton, formal classes are of forced

In Defense Of Editorials

Dear Mr. Anfin:

I was pleased to hear that you have been reading our paper, although I'm sorry that you got no further than the front page. It is indeed a credit to your intelligence that you were able to "sum" up our paper so critically having read no further than page one.

Quite frankly, I have grown more-than-weary of die-hard segregationist slapping the term "pseudo-intellectual" on anyone who has any feeling at all about human rights. (I prefer this term, rather than civil rights). Neither my "cohort," Miss Melton (who I merely see outside-of the Rotunda office), or I profess to be intellectuals. I am merely a student attending Longwood College who happens to feel a student's thinking should go beyond "What's happened to School Spirit? Let's Start A Grass-Grrowing Campaign," or "Does Rattling Serve A Useful Purpose."

There are members of the staff who hold viewpoints that differ from mine and they have been given every opportunity to express their feelings, as have all the members of the editorial staff. They have not, however, found "time" to turn in any written work. Any member of the student body or community is free to write letters to the editor—all of which are printed.

After checking the subject matter of my editorials this year, which include circus, rating, two on the judicial system, the freshman year, and others phases of school life, I found that I had written only two editorials on "Pier Edward" in ten papers. In view of these facts, I fear I have no just or legal claim to carrying on "a passionate journalistic crusade."

If you had attended the College Press Convention or read any of the better publications on journalism, you would realize that the outstanding men in the newspaper would have expressed delight that the editors of school papers are finally waking up to what is going on in the world outside of their sheltered little campuses.

To satisfy your curiosity, I do not believe in unilateral disarmament, or in recognizing Red China, and know absolutely nothing about American Samoa. Nor do I wear long straight hair, blue jeans, or sit in coffee houses writing poetry.

Oh, by the way, might I suggest some topics on which I'm sure you are more than qualified to write—"Should Outdoor Bars Be Built Between Frat Houses," "Is It Practical to Install a Heating System For The Intarmural Field During The Winter Months," or "Should Socks Match or Contrast With The Shirt."

Please forgive the above, but I'm afraid I forgot that we know editorial policy of waiting twenty-four hours before answering a letter.

Cordially yours,
Patricia S. Wallace

Letters To Editor

Schlegel Defends Editorial Policy

Dear Editor:

I would like to commend the Rotunda for the lively debate it has stirred up in its columns. Although the arguments may have been at times irrelevant or irrational, as they frequently are in any discussion, the debate represents the true spirit of democracy, which is based on the achievement of agreement by the expression of dissent.

It is the right, even the duty, of each of us to criticize what he finds wrong in the community of which he is a part. Those of us who are criticized will naturally feel unhappy, but, if the criticism is unjust, we can explain, and, if it is justified, we can try to improve. Only by exercising our freedom can we remain free.

Sincerely yours,
Marvin W. Schlegel

Editor Condemns Rotunda Policy

Dear Editor:

I have been a reader of the front page of your "newspaper" for several months now, but I have unfortunately found the rest of your publication of mass pseudo-intellectual garbage. You and your cohort, Miss Melton, seem to have an unquenchable thirst for civil rights emotionalism. I am sure that great multitude of civil rights proponents who wait anxiously for the edition of your passionate, journalistic crusade are well satisfied by now and are looking forward to your recognition of Longwood College again.

I feel sure that you have enough problems at Longwood to last you the entire term of your editorship. I wholeheartedly agree with the letter of Miss Dodge (Vol. XLII, No. 8) that you "deal a little more with the activities of this campus (Longwood)."

I am looking forward to your next crusade. Can I offer you some suggestions on topic that I am confident you know as much about as the civil rights issue, e.g., "Unilateral Disarmament and its Effect on Longwood College," "Recognizing Red China: Our Moral Duty As Longwood Ladies," or "Discrimination in American Samoa." You should be able to get real emotional over these!

Cordially yours,

YWCA Sponsors Panel Discussion Racial Barriers

The Randolph Macon Woman's College in YWCA was host to an Activities Day Program Jan. 6-7. The Longwood "Y" was represented by Fran Lipford, Louise Mann, Teresa Albright, Les Wilson and Jean White.

The purpose of the program was to discuss racial barriers and the lack of cultural understanding. A Nigeria Student at Rutgers, a sociology major at RMWC, a member of the Virginia Council of Human Relations, and a Negro who had just returned from Selma, Alabama led the discussion.

Other colleges attending the program included: Washington and Lee, V. M. I., Hollins, Georgetown, George Washington, and Lynchburg.

Longwood Blue And Whites Taste Victory Over W & M

The L. C. Blue and White varsity team began the 1965 basketball season winning over William and Mary, 39-31, and 33-16, in the first and second games respectively.

In the first game, the L. C. offense had trouble getting started. It was a closely-knit game, as the Longwood girls did not take a commanding lead until the latter part of the second half. Carolyn Burnett led the way with fourteen points. Lene Robertson and Lisa Cobbs, who was later replaced by Kathy Hill, were the other forwards. Those playing guards were Frances Stewart, who captained the L.C. team, Lynn Baker, and Connie Gallahan, who was replaced by Sharon Williams in the second half.

In the second game, the Longwood girls showed that they could make baskets as they racked up 53 points. Sophomore Pat Brown was high scorer with sixteen points.

Frances Stewart and Sharon Williams are the co-managers of the team.

The varsity is coached by Miss Tier and Miss Brocknough. The 1965 basketball schedule is as follows:

AA Council Sponsors Annual Song Contest

The annual Song Contest will be held during the assembly period on February 22. The contest is sponsored by The Athletic Association. This year the classes will be judged on color songs. Both the words and the music must be original and must be written by a member of the respective class.

Each of the four classes will sing its song in the assembly. Judges for the contest will be selected from the school faculty. The judges will choose both a winning song and a runner-up.

Honor Societies

the big dances that year? Yes, and they presented many art exhibits. They were terribly good, too. And Alpha Phi Sigma sponsored a book exchange.

The same year (awfully busy, wasn't it?) Boer E. H. Thon brought John Erskine and Richard Halliburton to the campus to speak on one thing or another. They also made a habit of supporting the Colonnade, which was a nice policy. Pi Gamma Mu sponsored the annual Mardi Gras dance that was very good that year.

Pushing onward to 1941 I remember the convention in Tallahassee to which Pi Gamma Mu sent representatives. It was the National Convention on World Problems and Pan-Americanism. I told you they kept in discussion. In April of that year Dr. Sinkins led a discussion on race relations. How clever.

Oh, the most fun convention ever was the Dixie Convention at Wintrop College (Rock Hill, S.C.). That was the one where Pi Kappa Delta sent four girls who debated on the question: "Resolved: That the Federal Government Should Regulate by Law all Labor Unions in the United States." It took quite some time before they understood what they were debating. But the big event of the year was the National Tournament in Minneapolis.

Gamma Psi was at work again, dears. This time they were decorating for the annual Cotillion dance. They had the most lovely Manhattan style.

Another thing they did was to make puppets for use in marionette shows in the spring. How cute.

In the 1945 Handbook it was stated that the general requirements for membership in any honorary society are based on scholarship, service and character. In addition it said that the student must show an outstanding interest and ability in the particular field.

The responses to the questionnaire concerning the drinking rule which were sent to parents last summer have been tabulated by Dean Wilson and presented to the Legislative Board. The rules on alcoholic beverages were changed (see 42-43, 1964-1965 Student Handbook) and the following forms to be completed were included:

1. Do you think these rules are about right and should be continued substantially as they are? Yes —, No —.
2. If you think these rules should be modified, would you give us your suggestions for changes?
3. More students have proposed that we eliminate all of our present rules on drinking and substitute only one that would read something like this:

What is your reaction to this suggestion? Agree —, Disagree —.

Several comments on these questionnaires and the drinking rule in general were discussed at length at this meeting. The results of the questionnaire are as follows:

To keep the rules as they are 1093
To make recommended changes Invalid (marked 1 and 3) yes 96

Total 1222
(no drinking at all — 48)

Since so many students have expressed an interest in this subject, the Legislative Board feels that you should now have a chance to voice your opinions concerning any phase of the drinking rule. A system is now being worked out whereby each student will have the opportunity to express her feelings to members of the Legislative Board. This system will be arranged so that it will be as convenient as possible for the students and will be announced at a later time.

Please use the Student Government Suggestion Box for any suggestions or comments!

Students Play In Tournaments For Class Games

Class volleyball and class basketball are being managed in a new way this year. Plans are being made for a Round Robin tournament which will precede the class games.

In each sport, any group of students may make up a team to play in the tournament. The students on a single team do not have to be from the same class. Teams from organizations are also welcome to participate. All

LAST DAY TO DROP CLASS

February 24 is the last day that a student may drop a course without receiving an automatic grade of failure.

Greek Corner

Now that the sororities have had time to recuperate from fall rush, it is time to start thinking about spring rush. The dates have been set — it will last from Tuesday, February 16 until Tuesday, February 22. Spring rush is very informal as compared to fall rush.

A representative from Edward Vantine Studios will be on campus from Monday, March 15 until Wednesday, March 17 to take individual pictures for the sorority composites.

The sorority rooms will be open during the Junior dance where girls will be welcome to bring their dates during intermission.

The newly elected officers of the Junior Panhellenic Council are: president, Jeanne Overman; vice-president, Alice Collier; secretary-treasurer, Gerri Daniel; chaplain, Sandra Curry; reporter, Donna Daly. The Junior Panhellenic Council will make the program arrangements for the Panhellenic banquet and will conduct a survey of rush.

April 7 has been set as the date for the Panhellenic banquet at which time the new Panhellenic officers shall be installed. Scholarship announcements will also be made and the pledge scholarship cup will be awarded.

A A NEWS

The Athletic Association is sponsoring several activities at the present time. These include basketball and class volleyball.

There are several changes in the basketball and volleyball games this time. Basketball teams may be comprised of six players and four substitutes. Any group within the college may form a team and play in the Round Robin Tournament which precedes class games. Class teams will be chosen by participants in the tournament. Practices are now being held at the following times:

Basketball
Mon. & Wed.	6:45 p.m.
Tues. & Thurs.	10:00 p.m.
Volleyball
Mon. & Wed.	10:00 p.m.
Tues. & Thurs.	6:45 p.m.

Get your team together now! The bowling program is still in effect. You may bowl at the Farmville Sports Center twice a week. If you bowl during the day, you may bowl three games but only two games may be bowled at night.

These teams will play in the tournament for their particular sport.

Each volleyball team must have at least six players and may have two substitutes. There must be six players on each basketball team and each team may have four substitutes.

After the tournament, students from each class who played on a team will choose their class team. There will then be games between all the classes in the usual manner.

The winner of the class games will be awarded ten points toward the color cup.

FROM THE BOARD

On February 15-17 Longwood will be honored by a visit from Mike Lawler, Student Government Vice President of the National Student Association. He has requested to meet with certain administrative officials, student government members, and various student groups. Mike's primary concern in visiting our campus is to provide student advice and healthy discussion on student problems in the areas of Student Government and the campus at large. Mike is a very capable student leader and has a varied knowledge of student affairs.

The National Student Association is an organization of Student Governments which consist of 350 colleges and universities in the United States. This figure represents two and a half million students, or more than half of the students enrolled in colleges today. Longwood first became aware of NSA when five Student Government members attended a regional conference at Duke University. These delegates were very impressed with the organization and since that time have been doing research as to how NSA operates and the type of services it renders to other schools.

Holman Receives Research Grant For Equipment

Dr. Leta J. Holman, of the Natural Sciences Department at Longwood, has just recently received a $200 grant for research. The grant was awarded to her late in January.

Dr. Holman said that the Virginia Academy of Science offers small grants, that is, $200-$500, to individual investigators for use in research. An investigator applies to the committee in Virginia who will decide if the Academy can afford to grant the money.

Dr. Holman asked for money for a photomicrography, which is a camera to take pictures through a microscope. Dr. Holman will be studying the cytology or reproduction in chiggers. She said the research would last at least 6 months to a year depending on the time she has and the amount of progress she makes. And she said that the equipment would be available to her for whatever new projects she decides to embark upon later. Dr. Holman commented she was very grateful to the committee for helping her complete the Wilson and Jean White.

Government Subsidizes LC Summer Institute

Longwood College has been selected by the U. S. Office of Education for one of 105 Summer Institutes for Teachers of English provided by the National Defense Education Act. The Longwood Institute will be for 35 secondary school teachers of English and is scheduled for June 13 to August 7, 1965.

The institute program is designed to improve participants' knowledge of subject matter and to increase their competence in the use of new materials. All participants will receive stipends of $75 per week plus $15 a week for each dependent.

The program of the Longwood Institute will be organized around three courses and a workshop. One course will be in Language, introducing the student to the basic assumptions and methods of English descriptive and historical linguistics. Another course will be in Literature, emphasizing techniques of close analysis of fiction, poetry, and drama. The third course will be in Composition, attempting to increase the teacher's power to evoke good writing from others through better directed assignments and more accurate judgments of writing.

A Workshop, providing time for the group as a whole to evaluate, relate, and share learning experiences is also scheduled. There will be in addition special lectures, informal meetings, exhibits of materials, and educational films.

Director of the English Institute is Dr. R. C. Simonini, Jr., chairman of Longwood's department of English, speech, and drama.

Group Searches For President For Fall Term

A committee to secure a successor to Dr. Francis G. Lankford, Jr., as president of Longwood College was named today by Douglas A. Robertson, of Lynchburg, Va., rector of the college's board of visitors.

President Lankford's resignation was accepted by the Longwood board of visitors last week with more than great reluctance prior to his recent appointment as professor of education at the University of Virginia, effective September 1, according to Mr. Robertson.

A former professor of education at the University, Dr. Lankford will return to full-time teaching in Charlottesville after 10 years as president of Longwood.

John Whitehead, of Radford, Va., vice rector of the board, will serve as chairman of the board's three-member search committee to find a successor to Dr. Lankford. Mr. Robertson announced.

Other members of the committee are E. Angus Powell, of Richmond, Va., and Mrs. Mosby Phlegar, of Norfolk, Va., a Longwood alumnae.

A former member of the Virginia House of Delegates, Mr. Whitehead is president of Peoples Bank of Radford. Mrs. Phlegar is secretary of Longwood's board of visitors. The former Miss Jane Royall, of Tasewell, Va., she is a B.S. degree graduate and former assistant dean of women of the college.

Mr. Powell, prominent civic and business leader of Richmond is president of David M. Lee and Company.

Mr. Robertson stated that both the faculty and alumnae of Longwood have been invited to suggest names of educators whom they wish to recommend for consideration by the board's search committee.

dramatic art. Mr. Foster B. Gresham will serve as associate director, and Dr. Dorothy B. Schlegel and Mr. Ellington White will be instructors.

The new institute program was developed by the federal government in approximately 100 days. On October 16, 1964, President Johnson signed the Act authorizing 7 new steps of institutes for advanced study. Twelve days later the Office of Education invited all institutions of higher education to submit institute proposals by December 30.

Panel of scholars and specialists in the various fields met in Washington in January to review and evaluate the nearly 1,000 proposals that had been received. Dr. Simonini was one of the consultants reviewing English Institute proposals. By letter dated February 5, 1965, the Office of Education notified selected institutions of its interest in negotiating contracts for operating the institutes.

The 1965 program will be in English, reading, history, geography, disadvantaged youth, educational media, and library service. The institutes in foreign languages and counseling will also be continued. Cost of the institutes is estimated at $22,270,000.

Visiting Scholar Delivers Speech On Shakespeare

Longwood will be privileged to have on campus Wednesday, February 24, Dr. Bernard Grebanier, noted Shakespearean scholar.

Dr. Grebanier will deliver a lecture entitled "What is at Stake in Othello" at 10:00 a.m. in West Wing 103.

Dr. Grebanier is Professor Emeritus of English at Brooklyn College. He is editor of the Living Shakespeare Recordings, and he is the author of The Heart of Hamlet, The Truth Shylock, and Thornton Wilder.

College Heads Attend Meeting

Dr. Francis G. Lankford will attend the fifty-first annual meeting of The Association of Virginia Colleges this weekend. The meeting will be held at the Golden Triangle Motor Inn in Norfolk on Friday and Saturday. This year's theme is "New Directions for Education in Virginia."

On Friday afternoon at 3:30 there will be a panel session: "The Far East and Virginia Education." Dr. Lankford will be presiding. At the General Session Saturday morning, Dr. Taylor Reveley of Hampden-Sydney College will preside over the session entitled, "What's Ahead in Virginia Education."

The Association will close after a business session presided over by Dr. Anne Gary Pannell, President.

LETTERMEN BRING FUN AND ENTERTAINMENT TO LC.

Craig Attends Festival: Princess Of Longwood

Sandra Craig, a senior, has been selected to be Longwood's representative in the annual Apple Blossom Festival, to be held on April 25 through May 1. As in the past, the festival will be held in Winchester, Virginia, and there will be representatives from all the colleges in Virginia. Miss Craig's selection was made on the decision of a faculty committee, which also chooses a representative for the Harvest Festival in the fall. The committee always selects a graduating senior.

Reigning over the festivities will be a queen who is usually a nationally known personality. This year's queen has not been announced.

Miss Craig has been active in several campus and national organizations during her college career. She served on the Freshman Commission her freshman year and was freshman counselor for her sophomore year. As a junior she held the position of president of the Wesley Foundation along with the office of secretary of the YWCA. She was also Ring Master for Circus that same year.

Her senior year has been just as full with activities as her previous three. Currently, she is Committee Chairman for the Wesley Foundation, president of the YWCA, vice-president of the State Methodist Student Union, and secretary of Alpha Kappa Gamma. She has also been selected for membership in Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities and was voted Madonna by the students of Longwood.

After graduation in the spring, Miss Craig plans to teach elementary school somewhere in the state of Virginia. She will be graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in elementary education with a major in history and social science.

The four-day Festival weekend promises to be an exciting one in which one of the highlights will be a large parade. The Apple Blossom Festival is comparable to the Azalea Festival held annually in Norfolk. Both festivals follow the same policy in choosing both the princesses and queen.

Dr. Graziani attended New York University and Bellevue Medical School, and has since been a member of the American Medical Association, the Fourth District Medical Society, and has served as an associate of the American College of Physicians. He was also a member of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Farmville Presbyterian Church.

Following World War II, Dr. Graziani moved with his family to the Farmville area where he became a member of the staff at the Southside Community Hospital.

Services for Dr. Graziani were held Thursday, February 11, at the Farmville Presbyterian Church with burial in Westview Cemetery.

The students of Longwood extend their deepest sympathies to the family and friends of Dr. Graziani, and we all regard his death as a personal loss.

Junior Weekend

Lettermen To Appear For Campus Concert

By NORMA DAVIS

After countless months of planning, hours of committee meetings, and endless days of toil, the long-awaited Junior weekend will commence on Friday, February 26, with a banquet that night and will end Saturday, February 27, with a class gathering at the Cedarbrook Restaurant. Since the Juniors are undertaking such a project and want it to be especially meaningful, plans were tentatively begun last spring. Being the smallest class on campus has not handicapped in the resulting quality of any part of the activities.

Mention should be made at this time of the various committees and committee heads who have worked so long and hard to make the weekend a success.

These include the banquet committee headed by Sally Grayson with co-committees of food (Frances Heath), programs (Anne Chappell), decorations (Fran Linford and June Williams), invitations (Bud Murdoch), and entertainment (the Freshman class); concert committee headed by Linda Spinner with co-committees of stage manager and crew (Karen Ruder), house (Beve Goodes), tickets (Barbara Garrison and Phyllis Lashley), and publicity (Tinkle Chary and Bettie Clegg); dance committee headed by Harriet Anderson, with co-committees of rings and favors (Sybil Ellet and Sylvia Markos), programs (Mary Ann Hanken), decorations (Jenny McCoy and Ann King), refreshments (Norma Johnson, figure (Phyllis Boyken), dance band (Frances Wallhall), flowers and gifts (Heleen Weeden), chaperones (Rosemary Rudy), pictures (Sybil Ellet), publicity (Bettie Clegg), odds and ends (Frances Roan and Bonnie Coleman).

Class Banquet
The Junior class banquet begins on Friday night at 6:00 p.m. in the old gym and Tabb Rec. The Juniors have permission to decorate until 2:00 a.m. Saturday morning. The "meat" of the banquet, of course, is the food itself with steak being the main course. And Mr. Penick has been very kind in preparing special meals for the entire weekend.

Lettermen Concert
From 4:00 p.m. until 6:00 p.m. the Lettermen will entertain in Jarman Auditorium with Kaye Catron as mistress of ceremonies. Longwood is fortunate indeed in having them after a "minimum" offer of . . . $1750 (considering one performance usually nets them an average of $800). Comprising the group are Tony Buisala, Jim Pike, and Bob Engemann who have played at many Virginia colleges for capacity audiences. Needless to say the 125-member Jarman Auditorium will be filled to capacity since all tickets were sold within one day after being put on sale (except those reserved for student leaders). A special section has been reserved for the Juniors and their dates. Even ad-

May Day At LC To Feature Fun, May Court, Skit
It's the merry month of May when flowers bloom once more . . . the birds are singing and the grass is green . . . And it's the time for May Day at Longwood College! The annual May Day festivities will be held on Saturday, May 1. The 1965 May Queen is Wanda Old, senior, and her Maid of Honor is Suzanne Ballard, senior. The May Court is composed of . . . seniors — Meredith Cate, Lee Smith; juniors — Marlene Armour, Jane Brown, Kaye Catron, Bonnie Coleman, Heleen Hall, Connie Parkins, Mary Kaye Richeson; sophomores — Sandra Burrell, Ann Casten, Betty Jo Hamner, Barbara L. W. S. Freshman — Ginny Daugherty.

The program is generally directed toward entertaining the court, faculty, friends, and students of Longwood. The entertainment may take various forms, but it usually consists of a fairy tale with other acts including as many students as possible.

May Day chairman is Judy Cundiff, and Kay Cobb is business manager. Judy, being very enthusiastic about the festivities, said "We are especially interested in making our skit different — or adult as possible yet simple and light enough to be enjoyed by the wide age range that will see it. We appreciate the excellent cooperation from everyone."

LC To Sponsor Dramatic Art Institute

Longwood College will offer a High School Institute in Speech and Dramatic Art, June 28 to July 16, for 20 students selected from rising juniors, seniors, or graduates of the current year. Mr. David Wiley, assistant professor of speech and dramatic art, will direct the Institute and will be assisted by Dr. Patton Lockwood, assistant professor of speech and dramatic art.

Courses in acting, acting, and stagecraft will be offered and several plays will be produced. Participants will be charged a comprehensive fee of $150 for the three weeks.

The High School Institute at Longwood is being offered in response to a growing demand on the part of high school students for summer activities that will enrich their educational experience. Although institutions in other states have offered successful summer institutes of this type, the number of students who have been offered here in Virginia. Students who do successful work in the Longwood Institute may earn one high school credit.

Education And Awareness

Recent letters-to-the-editor that have appeared in the last few issues of THE ROTUNDA seem to be reflections of the controversy over the role of a college newspaper in relation to the campus, the locality of the campus, and its concern for off-campus events. Most of these letters have expressed a desire that THE ROTUNDA concern itself only with the problems that have direct bearing on this college. With this in mind, perhaps it is time for us to examine our attitudes on the subject of education, which is supposedly the primary function of Longwood.

We have committed ourselves to send our sons in an institution of higher learning. We have come here to explore new ideas and open the channels for discoveries in new intellectual areas. We have come here to be educated — in short, to become aware. Education can be defined as awareness.

The problem involves our attitude toward the opportunity of obtaining an education. The attitude around Longwood seems to be one of narrow-mindedness and resistance to new ideas or change without the slightest desire for challenge, commitment, or the confrontation with controversial ideas. Most of us would rather exist complacently in our own cotton-candy world, ignoring every event, every crisis, and every injustice that occurs without the circumference of our own college walls.

The motto of Longwood is "We Teach to Teach." What is meant by the second reference to "teach"? Are we going forth to teach future students to close their eyes, their ears, and their minds to everything that is not "nice" — or everything that does not coincide with their pre-established ideas?

Most students on THE ROTUNDA staff have chosen not to be so narrow-minded. They have chosen to extend their horizons of awareness beyond the scope of campus activities. Furthermore, the events within Prince Edward County, especially those concerning integration, have a direct relationship to the college. As long as Prince Edward County chooses to remain an outpost of resistance to the cause of education, prospective professors will hesitate to bring their families here for fear that the education of their children may be gravely threatened.

As tomorrow's teachers, we have the responsibility today of becoming aware of all areas of human experience and understanding. There are more profound problems than whom we will date next Saturday night or who has just become pinned to whom. The educated person is the aware person. How can one possibly become educated when he does not allow his thoughts to penetrate beyond the narrow limits of his own segment of college life?

In an article in THE ATLANTIC on college students and their activities, Dr. James H. Paulsen, noted psychiatrist of Stanford University, wrote that, "participation of students in the Peace Corps as well as (other off-campus activities) is evidence that their activities are not restricted to campus matters . . . While most students complacently follow the trails and swamps of the past, a vibrant minority seek change and progress."

SCENES FROM YESTERDAY

Around Other Campi

The predominant issue of the Rotunda's editorial pages this year may seem to be integration versus segregation, but actually the issue of the problems of the campus versus the problems of the "outside world" has been the main controversy. There might be some significance in noting that this controversy is not typical only of the Rotunda, but also of many other campus newspapers. Following are some excerpts from the editorial pages of some of these other publications:

From the QUEEN'S CURRENT of Queens College, "As important as it is that our world not be limited to these two blocks of campus, it is a campus problem that we think should be at the top of our list . . ."

From the COLGATE MAROON of Colgate University, "The Maroon should either be de-emphasized or improved. Too many minority opinions are blown up and pushed on the campus."

From the FLAT HAT of the College of William and Mary, "The publication of this column . . . aroused campus interest in non-campus issues for the first time in memory . . . it fomented controversy on an otherwise apathetic campus."

Not all newspapers are concerned with this controversy of the campus world versus the outside world. The following excerpts from editorial pages are considered some of the "crucial" issues on other camp:

From THE BREEZE of Madison College, "The crosswalks on Main Street can be only as safe as the students of Madison College make them. Use them; but if you do, use them wisely."

From the RAMPAGE of Bluefield College, "We feel that the administration has sufficient enough reasons for not allowing students to dance on campus . . . It is not the responsibility of the administration to the faculty to see that the students are entertained."

From the PROSCRIPT of Richmond Professional Institute, "The Student Government Association has a new branch — the PHT (Putting Hubby THRU). This proposed award would be presented to working wives of graduating students who have helped their husbands complete their college education."

The editorials and the letters to the editor in a college newspaper are often a reflection on the type of students attending the college. If this is true, then a campus newspaper which concerns itself only with campus issues represents the college student's concerns with the college issues. Perhaps the prevalence of controversy in the ROTUNDA is an indication of what a Longwood student is really like.

YWCA Traces History To 1896; Catalyst In Campus Activities

By Marla "Dixie" Grant

Another one of the five major organizations on campus is the Young Women's Christian Association. Ever since its beginning way back around 1896 or so, it has continued to serve as the spiritual segment of campus life by providing many opportunities through the year for spiritual growth and development.

Just so you'll know a little more about the Y's background, we swing the clock back again as AGELESS tries to recall the major events through the years. It's 1896.

Would you believe that since May of this year the influence of the YWCA has increased so much? First of all we simply had our bi-weekly meetings in the chapel. Now we not only have the meetings, but weekly prayer-meetings, and 18 Bible classes of about seven girls each. By the way, our general committees consisted of finance, bible study, membership, religious meetings, and missionary meetings. There weren't many. I must admit, but they certainly carried on well. Quite.

One of the most exciting things the Y has done through the years, and which has not changed at all, has been the welcoming of the new freshmen. Every year I can remember the Y girls helping the sometimes puzzled new students find their room and get settled. They were ever so nice.

One particular year, 1902 I think it was, the Y had some "October entertainments" for the new girls. It was an "Old Maid's Convention." It was such fun! Even if it was true.

The year before that we added mass committees to its organization. There were a devotional social, intercollegiate, room and library, and building fund committees.

In 1903 there was another new girl party I remember. It was a "lucky party." Also that year was the Southern Students' Convention in Asheville, N. C. The Y sent a delegate who brought back all sorts of terribly interesting items. Obviously it wasn't quite so wild as the Student Government trip to Emory and Morehead in 1904, but one must remember that times do change believe it or not.

My goodness, in 1907 we had 330 members in the YWCA, and in 1909 there were 427. Little did we realize that in 55 years the membership would increase by about a thousand.

Between 1912 and 1920 music, publicly, world fellowship, rural, and social committees were added to a growing list. They did a wonderfully nice job. Good heavens — did I tell you? In 1923 the VIRGINIAN started having individual pictures of the Y officers. This perhaps doesn't sound like anything terribly traumatic. Well, actually it wasn't.

Not to be outdone by any other group, the YWCA also had a motto. But the motto has lasted for many years as part of our Y, and before that could be found in a very influential and popular book that has survived for ages. "Not by might; not by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord of Hosts." Zachariah 4:6.

Before going on, perhaps I should mention the main purpose of this organization as stated in the 1932 Handbook: "We, the members of the Young Women's Christian Association of Farmville unite in the desire to realize full and creative life through a growing knowledge of God."

"We determine to have a part in making this life possible for all people."

There is also a national purpose for the YWCA in colleges: To create a Christian attitude in the colleges; to broaden its members through cooperation and influence spiritually, mentally, socially, and physically.

The same year (1932) a freshman counselor and undergraduate representative were added to the list of officers. And it was committee — expanding time again — a church cooperative, singing, conference, and town committee joined the group.

The prayer committee was in charge of devotional services held each night after dinner in the auditorium; the moral watch was a devotional service held every Sunday morning after breakfast in the Student Lounge and a similar service in the auditorium; the prom program conducted on Friday Saturday nights in the auditorium.

Burnham Joins Faculty; Studied In Europe, Duke

By Susie Holsclaw

Mr. Richard Burnham is the latest instructor to be added to the faculty of Longwood's English, speech, and dramatic art department. Fresh out of Duke University with his Master's degree, Mr. Burnham joined the team at the beginning of the second semester, and he is now teaching courses in freshman English and English 216.

After finishing preparatory school, Mr. Burnham entered Ohio Wesleyan in 1939. Being a man of athletic interests, he participated on the varsity swimming and football teams. He also served as chairman of Student Government committees and became sports editor for the school newspaper.

Studies in Europe

He received a scholarship as an exchange student and studied during his junior year at the University of Exeter in England. His year abroad was enhanced by two months of skiing in Norway and a laborious summer in France where he worked on a farm.

The next year, 1942, found him back in the States at Ohio Wesleyan where he completed his undergraduate work in 1943 and emerged with a Bachelor of Arts degree in English. For a year and a half, Mr. Burnham studied at Duke University where he received his Master's degree.

Plans for Ph.D.

Mr. Burnham has plans for

BURNHAM JOINS STAFF

eventually receiving his Doctor's degree, with emphasis either in the field of Victorian literature or Medieval studies. His interests slant more to the Victorian period.

Before serving as an advisor for the Miss Longwood Pageant, Mr. Burnham will have the lead in the spring production of the Longwood Players, Three Penny Opera. Although he has never acted before, he is looking forward to the experience with excitement and enthusiasm.

Letter To Editor

Main Snack Bar Draws Criticism

Dear Editor,

Since my arrival at Longwood in September, I have often been puzzled by the service at the "Main Rec" snack bar. The waitresses there "very" in manner from friendly to downright hostile. On several occasions I have been treated rudely, and I have even been subjected to unnecessary sarcastic remarks. I realize that the ladies who work there are kept busy by swarms of hungry girls, yet I can see no reason for such rude treatment. When a girl goes to the "rec" for a snack she certainly should be treated in a courteous way.

Sincerely,
Cynthia Fitchett

Virginia Artists Exhibit In Library, West Wing

Back in March of 1951 a faculty committee here at Longwood chose the first painting of what they hoped would turn out to be a large collection of paintings by Virginia artists. The first of these, a snow landscape entitled "It Started Early in the Morning," was the work of Mrs. Edith L. DeRose of Richmond, and was chosen from the Virginia artists' works.

At that time the Longwood College Purchase Prize Award was established through funds provided by the summer graduating classes of '49 and '50 and the winter classes of '49 and '51. Each year since then funds have been provided to increase this collection of works, which presently consists of 11 paintings (but hang in various offices and rooms around the campus).

This year, as in the past, a selection committee will be chosen from a current exhibit in the exhibitors' room of the Dr. J. H. Lancaster Library, entitled, "An Exhibition of Prints by Five Virginia Print Makers."

Featuring the four major techniques for making prints: relief processes, intaglio processes, stencil processes, and lithography, the exhibit began February 8 and will run through the 27th. The committee will purchase one print from each of the artists represented, and these will be added to the growing collection on campus.

The five artists were chosen from the 7th Annual Printmakers Show at the University of Virginia, at which time Miss Barbara Bishop, one of the five, took first prize.

The other four artists represented here are: Mr. Carson Davenport (Danville), Mrs. Beverly Porter (Northampton), Mr. Edw. Porter (Northampton), and Mrs. Hartwell Priest (Charlottesville).

An alumnae of Longwood College, Miss Bishop received her master's from the University of North Carolina and is currently on the staff of the Art Department at Southern Seminary in Buena Vista.

Mr. Davenport, a member of the Averett College faculty in Danville, has consistently won awards and honors at both state and national exhibitions.

Batts Receives Research Grant

Billy S. Batts, Assistant Professor of Natural Sciences, has received a National Science Foundation Grant. The grant is under the Academic Year Extension Program of the Research Participation for College Science Teachers.

The grant extends from last October, 1964, through October, 1965. During this time, Mr. Batts plans to continue the study he began last summer at Cape Hatteras, N. C. — the study of the Oceanic Bonito or Skipjack, scientific name of Katsuwonus pelamis. He hopes to return to Hatteras this coming summer to continue his work there.

For the work, Mr. Batts is being assisted by students Jackie Frost and Kathleen Romanus. Also helping by translating are Anne Vicars Bruce, who is translating a Spanish book on the skipjack in Cuba, and Jacqueline S. Courvoisier, who is working on a French article.

Reasons for the studies are mainly because of the fish's commercial importance, mainly in the Pacific and around Hawaii, and because of its growing importance here in the Atlantic. As Mr. Batts explains, "You see, eventually a much greater percentage of our food will be coming from the sea."

Popular Singers Give Concert On LC Campus

ditional seats are to be set up in the rear of the auditorium. The group will arrive from New Jersey sometime that same afternoon and leave shortly after the concert to continue their southern tour following a brief autograph session. Students are reminded not to go backstage after the performance is over, and the dress will be Sunday attire.

Ring Dance

The Junior Ring Dance will highlight the weekend's activities beginning at 8:00 p.m. Saturday in the old gym with decorations centered around a pink and white floral motif. The Ring Dance is a renovation of the old Cotton dances formerly held at Longwood. The Juniors are hoping to establish a ring dance which will become a college tradition. Although the Juniors received their class rings on February 16, they will not officially receive them until 9:30 p.m. Saturday when they perform the ring figure receiving their rings in a heart shaped arch from their escorts.

The women will be wearing long formals (any color) and carrying one long stemmed red rose, and the men will wear tuxedos. The dance will be held at the Southside Screamers from South Hill, Virginia. Over 700 persons are expected to attend including students, faculty, special guests, and chaperones.

BEDSIDE NEWS CONFERENCE

Upon learning that Mrs. Helen Mason, award winning woman's editor of the Farmville Herald, was in the local hospital but restless to resume her campus beat, Longwood student leaders gathered up paper, pencils, typewriter, and latest campus news to help Mrs. Mason "get back on the job." Students representing college organizations were: Olivia Gibson, Nancy Brown, Melody Saunders, Milly Woodward, Mrs. Mason, Dean Newton, and Jenny McCool.

"Peace Corps" Workers Wage War On Poverty

VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) is one of President Johnson's programs to aid in the war on poverty. VISTA, which has been termed a "domestic Peace Corps," is under the control of the newly created Office of Economic Opportunity.

VISTA will recruit, and train volunteers to work for at least one year in impoverished rural and urban areas all over America. Volunteers will work in city slums, on Indian reservations, and in mental hospitals. They will work with migrant workers, as recreation leaders, and in settlement houses. Volunteers will be sent to any area within the United States and its territories which needs and requests assistance.

VISTA workers must be at least 16 years of age. There is no upper age limit. There are no specific educational requirements but all training and talent will be utilized. Glen Ferguson, director of recruiting for VISTA, says that the one basic requirement for volunteers is that "they care about poor people, enough to share their life and try to help them."

One unique characteristic of the VISTA program is that the volunteer will live within the area of need where he is working. VISTA does not want workers who "return to middle-class America every evening." Workers who are assigned to slum areas to work will live in those areas during their term of service.

Besides receiving pay for their food, rent, medical care, and job travel expenses, volunteers will receive $3 a month. Also, the volunteer will be allotted $50 a month, the sum of which will be paid to the worker at the end of his term with VISTA.

Applications for VISTA may be obtained from the Office of Economic Opportunity, Washington, D. C.

This is a reminder to all interested students, that all petitions for Major elections must be in by Thursday, February 18.

FORUM

A FORUM will be held this week on February 18 when the topic, "The U. N. Pros and Cons" will be discussed by Dr. James H. Sims and Dr. Marvin Schuel. Everyone is invited to attend this meeting, which promises to be very informative and interesting. The forum will be in the Student Lounge at 5 p.m.

Longwood Campus Grows During Lankford's Term

by Beverly Roark

Longwood has progressed greatly in its 35 year history, but the greatest amount of progress made in the shortest span of time has been in the past ten years that Dr. Francis G. Lankford has been president.

It was in December of 1954 that Dr. Lankford accepted the position of president of this college; he was then a professor in the mathematics department at the University of Virginia. He officially assumed duties on June 22, 1955 when he and his family moved to Farmville, and the following December he was inaugurated.

To accommodate for just the beginnings of Longwood's expansion, the college purchased in the summer of 1954 the Sanford House to house 15 students for the 56-57 session. That first year of Lankford's stay brought 793 students opposed to the 689 enrollment of the previous year.

Although plans were being made as early as March 1956, it was not until February, 1957 that final approval was given for the construction of a new dormitory to house 150 students. This dormitory, South Cunningham, was opened in the fall of 1958. In October, 1958, the administrative staff announced its long-range plan for additions to be completed by 1963. This plan called for three new dormitories, a new home management unit, and additions to the library.

During the course of the 1958-59 session the Home Management House was added to the campus. That same year brought the new foreign language lab. The summer of 1959 was a busy time for reconstruction on Long-

Independent Research Projects Attract Three Senior Biologists

by Marcia Catoe

Three girls are currently involved in an independent research project taken for four credits which has the name Special Projects in Natural Biology. The girls are Wanda Old, Ann Persak and Milly Woodward. They are studying the human blood at this time to learn techniques to be later adapted to a related project. Wanda will begin the study of the blood of rabbits under a direction of Dr. Carson Wells, while Ann and Milly may go into research involving the cells of insects under the direction of Dr. Jane Holman.

The interest in this research arose from the fact that it is not known how to culture or grow the leukocytes, or white blood cells of rabbits, or how to grow the cell tissue of insects under artificial conditions. Using the human blood as a basis for learning techniques of how to grow the cells under stimulation, the girls will later apply the techniques they learn to their individual research. These techniques are being taken from science journals and the store of knowledge of Drs. Wells and Holman, who are now conducting a form of team teaching for all three girls.

These techniques have been tried and are known to yield predictable results. A problem at this time is the unavailability of fresh chemicals for the experiments.

Tedious Steps

The first step in the current experiment is to prepare by sterilization the glassware. This involves no less than seven different washings of the test tubes. The chemical solutions to be used are next prepared. A blood sample is then drawn from one of the young "scientists" and refrigerated for a minimum of three hours to allow the red blood cells to settle to the bottom. After the red cells have settled, the plasma which is on the top, has to be taken carefully from the test tube so that the blood is not removed. The plasma which contains the leukocytes is next added to a medium which contains nutrients, antibiotics and a chemical to stimulate cell division. An incubation period is required for 58 to 72 hours at 37.5 degrees C. during which time the cells continue to grow and divide. Four hours prior to harvesting the cells a chemical colchicine is added to stop cell division at metaphase. The chromosomes of the leukocytes are best studied under a microscope during this stage. Next the cells are harvested aided by centrifugation which is a process that separates the leukocytes from the rest of the plasma. The leukocytes are then chemically killed and slides are prepared and stained.

Research Purpose
All this work is for a purpose. Since so little is known about the chromosomes of rabbits and the cell tissue of invertebrates, the work of Wanda, Ann and Milly may lay a foundation for further research in the area. Wanda, in her study of the leukocytes found in the blood of rabbits, will try to count and make a study of the characteristics of the chromosomes. Ann and Milly, if they do work with insect tissue, will try to discover in what medium the cells will reproduce, and according to Dr. Holman, "It is hard to get the proper conditions in a test tube for the cells to grow." However, if the experiment does not produce positive results, the negative results will tell in what media the tissue will not grow.

As far as one specific aim for the outcome of these projects goes, no one involved in the projects yet has one. Dr. Wells summed up everything very well when she made the statement, "We don't know what we'll do with it until we find out what it is."

Library Art Exhibit

A graduate of Smith College, Mrs. Priest has been in several permanent collections, including the Library of Congress.

To be noted is the fact that two of the five artists are housewives and the other three are college faculty members. Considering that art is only a part-time activity for this group, it is remarkable that they have won so many awards, honors, and fellowships for their creative efforts.

Student Comments

Commenting on the prints, one student art major stated that the exhibit shows "excellent variety of techniques." Being from the Eastern Shore she was a bit partial to Carson Davenport's cubistic "Chintheque Harbor."

Another student feels that the exhibit is a very good one and recommends that others see it. She said that because of an art course she's taking she can better appreciate what went into the prints.

One of the art professors on campus mentioned that the exhibit is "unique" because it represents "a variety of mediums." Members of the committee in charge of choosing and purchasing prints this year are Mrs. Janice Lemen, Miss Annie Lee Ross, Miss Nancy Leitch, and Mr. George Chavatel of the art department. Also, Mr. Charles Butler, librarian, Dr. Charles Patterson, and Miss Betty Taylor, student representative.

designated to suggests prospects, consists of Miss Virginia Bedford, associate professor and a chairman of the department of art, chairwoman Dr. Elizabeth B. Jackson, professor of natural sciences, and Dr. Charles F. Lane, professor of history and social science.

Mrs. Philip A. Roberts, of Staunton, Va., president of the Longwood College Alumnae Association has been asked to serve as liaison between the Longwood alumnae and the board's search committee. Mrs. Roberts is the former Miss Caroline Eason, of Richmond, Va.

In the current biennium 1964-65 the college, for the first time, has a two-million-dollar operating budget. It was in the 1956-58 biennium that an operating budget of as much as one-million dollars was reached for the first time.

Established by the 1964 General Assembly and appointed by Governor Albert S. Harrison, Jr., last spring, Longwood's new board of visitors held its first meeting last July, succeeding the State Board of Education as the college's governing body.

H<sub>2</sub>O Club Presents 'Manhattan In Motion'

Next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, February 24, 25, and 26, marks the 1965 Water Pageant. The theme of this year's show is "Manhattan In Motion". Tickets for the show will cost 55 cents each.

The Water Pageant is headed this year by co-chairmen Ann Persak and Linda Spinner. The participants in the Water Pageant will consist of the members of the H<sub>2</sub>O Club and the Corkettes.

The pageant consist of ten numbers written by various participants. In the order in which their numbers appear, the girls include: Linda Spinner, Karen Ruder, Lucy Flannagan, Connie Parkins, Susan Lawler, Geri Gerhardt, Kathy Kolva, Arlene Steiner. There will be a duet written by Ann Persak and the finale written by Miss Barbara Smith, sponsor of the H<sub>2</sub>O Club and the director of the Water Pageant.

The different numbers are representative of the mood they are trying to create. In this case, therefore, through the use of music chosen by various members of the club, the members will create an atmosphere of "Manhattan In Motion".

LC Stomps Stratford With Lopsided Scores

Last Saturday, February 13, the Longwood basketball team stomped the Stratford basketball team.

The first game was an easy victory for the Longwood blue and white's. The forwards were hitting well and scoring practically every time they got the ball. The defense were on their toes, intercepting many passes and retrieving most of the rebounds.

Stratford was at a tremendous disadvantage as they have no gym at their school in which to practice. The final score in the first game was an amazing 78 for Longwood to 15 for Stratford.

The second team started out

'Blithe Spirit' Crew Chiefs Begin Work

With rehearsals under way for the March 4, 5, and 7 presentation of Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit," the crew chiefs for the play have been appointed and are working with their crew members on their assigned positions.

Senior Bobbie Rice is the head of the lights crew for "Blithe Spirit." Bobbie has worked on lights for many pageants and assemblies, as well as on numerous plays. She is a member of Longwood Players.

The sound crew is headed by Karen Engdahl, a junior and a member of Longwood Players. Last year Karen was in charge of the sound for "She Stoops to Conquer," she worked with lights for this year's last production, "Romeo and Juliet."

Junior Donna Weatherly is the head of the props committee for the play. Donna worked with make up for "She Stoops to Conquer." Although Donna has never worked on props before, she says she is very happy with this opportunity.

Scenery for "Blithe Spirit" is the job of Longwood Player member Jackie Walker. Jackie, a senior, has been active with various phases of a backstage work in campus dramas since her freshman year.

Beverly Roark, a junior, though having only experience in make up in this year's Circus skit, is enthusiastic about her job as make up crew chief. She says that it should be a challenge and a lot of fun since "Blithe Spirit" has two ghosts and one medium.

Longwood Player member Cheryl Howe is in charge of costumes for the upcoming play. Cheryl, a senior, has worked with costumes and with make up for many of the school productions. This year she worked with make up on "Romeo and Juliet."

equally as well although it took them some time to get into it. Once they got started though, there was no stopping them. The offense and defense were working together so quickly and smoothly, that it looked like a drill.

The final score for the second game was the mysterious 90, Stratford 11.

'Y' Serves Campus In Varied Projects

And Libby Bernard was a look-out in her two-tone green with new elbow-length sleeves—ideal for lycrums (or class parties, or Slater parties, etc.).

Oh, and I can remember seeing the Y girls dashing to meet trains and buses and planes (oops, no planes—I lied), carrying suitcases from the station to third floor Library whenever that was or Student, explaining the mysteries of "second floor Annex."

One year they had a "Professor Quiz" contest that baffled the poor freshmen.

In '43 the YWCA sponsored Race Relations week in the spring—it was a new feature of the Y program.

My heavens, I keep forgetting to tell you about the installation of the froth into the Y. It used to be a rather elaborate service. The new class marched along the colonnade to the Joan Court, candles in hand. It was a most impressive sight.

The year 1943 marked the organization of Religious Emphasis Week.

Another one of the big duties of the YWCA (mainly the Freshman Commission) has been the decoration of the Christmas tree in the Rotunda and the hanging of the green (outstanding cedar around the pillars) and leading the carols before and after Christmas dinner. The first time I remember any mention of the Rotunda Christmas tree was back in 1947.

Around 1949 the Y had a column called "Y Lines in the Rotunda."

Oh, and in '53 the Commission sponsored a juke box dance for visiting high school students. They were awfully sweet.

Following are the outstanding duties of the YWCA through the ages. Some are still duties today.

1) prays each night Monday through Friday

2) plans Union Vespers

3) sponsors Christmas carol singing

4) plans Christmas Banquet and Hanging of Green

5) plans Christmas Pageant and White Christmas

6) holds annual Religious Emphasis program

7) writes personal letters to new students

8) assists with registration and meeting of new girls.

9) sponsors and plans formal reception for new students and faculty

10) sponsors drive for food at Thanksgiving which is distributed by the Welfare Dept

11) conducts Cabinet retreat each spring and fall

12) brings fall and spring speakers to campus

13) sends flowers and cards when occasion arises

14) sponsors Big-Sister Little-Sister parties

15) sponsors "sing" contest

16) sends out alumnae letter every Friday night

17) keeps bulletin board in main hall

18) seeks to cooperate with various churches and encourages church attendance

19) plans pre-Easter Sunrise Service

20) observe World Day of Prayer

21) seeks to promote spirit of friendliness among all students

Each year the Y has a theme which extends throughout the year. My very favorite was the one for '50-51. It was simply called "Joy." Isn't that nice?

Besides the aforementioned duties, the Y sends delegates to various conventions and conferences whenever the opportunity arises.

In this short article it is impossible to include all the merits of any organization. The Y is no exception. Its work has continued over many years of faithful service, and will probably continue to do so for many years to come.

Mr. Ellington White, Assistant Professor of English here, has been Corrin and Miller Williams, authors of an anthology of modern Southern literature, saying that one of his short stories has been selected to appear in their anthology. The story, "Iago and the Tired Moor," was first published in the Kenyon Review for the summer issue of 1962.

Mr. White has had two other stories published: one in Best American Short Stories published by Houghton-Mifflin, and the other in The Modern Talent published by Holt - Rinehart-Winston.

This anthology of modern Southern literature is being published by the Louisiana State University Press. The book is expected to come out sometime this year.

At the conclusion of the tournament, the class members who participated will choose their class teams.

The basketball tournament will also be starting this week but plans for this tournament have not yet been completed.

HEART FUND

The Legislative Board will sponsor a collection in memory of the late Dr. John G. Guzzini, our beloved college physician for many years. This money will be given to the Heart Fund since Dr. Guzzini's specialty was cardiology.

Each dormitory will be asked to come to the Rotunda at the following specified times on Thursday, February 18 to offer their contribution.

Orchestrates Holds Assembly Explaining Limon Concert

Jackie Walker, President of Orchestrates, led the assembly program relating to the Limon Concert. Mrs. Emily K. Landrum, Associate Professor of Physical Education with Dean Ruth Wilson clarified the two parts or sections of the concert. Jackie Walker discussed the film which followed the annotations of the faculty.

Mrs. Landrum provided the background information for understanding modern dance as it relates to Jose Limon. Doris Humphrey, and the other pioneers of her period. The first section, or Part I — "A Choreographic Offering," was clarified through a chronological basis for understanding specific works and a musical basis for understanding pure dance form.

Dean Wilson enlarged upon the second ½ section or Part II Mass Brevis as the short mass for all denominations as ritual, hymns or symbols, which make religion a universal experience for man.

Jackie Walker clarified a background understanding for the film "The Moor's Pavane" for Shakespeare's Othello, which was shown twice: the first time for a glimpse of stylized dance from which reflects aspects of the deceptions of man, and the second view, to gain more meaning and understanding of a literary form in another art form.

Orchestrates sponsored the records that were played in the Dining Hall at noon and evening meal.

NSA Representative Visits LC Campus

By Barbara Melton

For three days during the past week, Longwood was visited by Mr. Michael Lawler, Student Government Vice-president for the National Student Association. The purpose of Mike's visit was to hold several discussions with members of Longwood Student Government in order to explain fully the organization and the programs connected with the National Student Association.

Mike spoke at an open meeting of the Legislative Board last Wednesday night, February 17, and again to the members of the Judicial Board on Thursday night, February 18. In an effort to acquaint the entire student body with NSA, it is hoped that this article will serve as a relatively comprehensive explanation.

Being a student gives rise to special problems, and several years ago a group of concerned students decided that a national organization of students could do things that no individual student or student government could do alone to alleviate these problems. This was the birth of the National Student Association.

Since the organization was begun, it has grown to include over 500 colleges and universities, student governments from all across the nation. What NSA attempts to do is provide a means and communication among its member student governments, as well as provide them with resources and services which no single student government could afford.

In terms of the beliefs of NSA, it has consistently supported responsible student action on those issues which have aroused the student community. It has consistently supported academic freedom and the freedom of the student from unreasonable intellectual and social control by his college.

As far as the organization of NSA is concerned, member student governments are entitled to send delegates to the annual National Student Congress held each August in the Midwest. These delegates participate in seminars, committees, and finally in the legislative plenaries which consider resolutions affecting the Association's membership and policy for the year to come.

It was previously mentioned that the National Student Association provides a number of services in order to benefit member student governments with their problems. One of the accomplishments of NSA is its student discount program. Using an identification card, students can travel abroad and receive tremendous discounts in hotels, etc. NSA provides an educational travel service which plans student tours at excellent discount rates.

Among these benefits, NSA works with member student governments in holding conferences and seminars concerning problems in the areas of Educational Affairs, International Affairs, National Affairs, Civil Rights programs, Cultural Affairs, and other areas of discussion and debate.

Perhaps the greatest and most profitable service offered by NSA concerns its Student Government Information Service. The Student Government Information Service is a clearinghouse of information on the programs and problems of student governments.

A member student government may make any number of SGIS requests, and no fee is charged for the use of this service. Information can be obtained on such subjects as the following: academic policy formation and student work in this book exchanges, campus courts, community service programs, cultural programming on campus, dormitory government, drinking regulations, honor systems, leadership training, political awareness programs, publications boards, religious emphasis programs, speaker ban cases, student administration relations, student values, and many more subjects that cannot be included in this article.

All Longwood students should be aware of the existence of such an association as NSA and should consider how it could be beneficial to the educational experience of us as students of this college. NSA is being considered and discussed by the members of our Legislative and Judicial Boards as well as by members of the Administration. Further developments in this possibility will be related in a later article.

Mrs. Janice Lomen and Betsy Taylor study one of the many prints on exhibit in the library and second floor West Wing.

West Wing Exhibits Have Varied Prints

Currently on exhibit in the West Wing, second floor, is a collection of varied and interesting prints, done by prize-winning professional artists. It will be here throughout the month of February.

The exhibit is from the Pratt Graphic Art Center, in New York, and was gathered by the director of this center. All are from recent collections on exhibit in the United States.

Most of the different ways of printing are used such as etching, linocut, and relief. Some are in color and some black and white.

Janice S. Lomen, Associate Professor of Art, described the display as "high quality." She said most of the designs were abstract, but "refer to nature in fresh new ways."

Two prints on exhibit which are very interesting are "The 14th Street Meat Market," rather unusual, by Antonio Frasconi, and "The Little Boy," with interesting coloring in shades of brown, by Seong Moy.

The exhibit is a rental exhibit for the benefit of art students and other interested persons. It has done much to stimulate student and faculty interest in art and is an excellent complementary exhibit to the exhibit now presented in the Exhibit Room of the library.

Williams Takes One-Year Leave For More Study

Among those who will be leaving Longwood for a one-year leave of absence will be Mr. Dennis Williams. Instructor in Longwood's mathematics department.

Mr. Williams has received a grant from the National Science Foundation, and he will work toward the completion of his doctoral degree at the University of Michigan. His grant extends from 1965 to 1966, and he said that he will probably return to Longwood.

1965 Major-Minor Elections Begin With Conferences

The one direct way of deciding what type of student government is wanted by the student body is, according to Theresa Albright, Chairman of the Election Committee, for the students to express their choices in the 1965

Major-Minor Elections. Last year only 600 students out of a body of approximately 1,300 voted. Many more students voted in the coming elections.

Those on petition for the Major election are as follows:

Chairman of Legislative Board—Theresa Albright, Kaye Catron, and Jonny McCoy. Chairman of Judicial Board—Linda Bassford, Mary Lea Shoulters, and Frances Stewart. President of House Council—Judy Cundiff, Beverly Cuthbert, Anne King, and Jean White. President of Athletic Association—Bobbie Allen and Barbara Rauland. President of the Y.W.C.A.—Olivia Gibson, Fran Liptford, and Louise Mann.

The conferences with the candidates for President of House Council were held Monday night, and Chairman of Legislative Board on Tuesday night. Tonight at 6:45 conferences for the candidates for Chairman of the Judicial Board will be held in West Wing. Thursday night the candidates for the President of Y.W.C.A. may be seen at the same time and place. The candidates for President of the Athletic Association will be in West Wing at 6:45 on Monday, March 8th.

It is imperative that all students attend these conferences since this provides an opportunity for students to meet the candidates and find out what their views are. It is likewise urged that all read the posted petitions and sign them as is desired. It is of the utmost importance, however, that all vote in the Major Elections on March 8th.

Dr. Helms and Dr. Schelegel discuss U. N. conditions in the forum held last week.

Miss America For 1965 Speaks To LC Entries

Mildred Johnson, Chairman of the 1965 Miss Longwood Pageant, reported that twenty-seven entries have been submitted for this year's contest. From these twenty-seven entries sixteen will be selected by a screening committee to compete as semi-finalists in the pageant on April 10.

To the contestants and to the student body Vonda Kay Van Dyke, Miss America 1965, sends the following message: "As Miss America 1965 I will visit every section of this great country of ours, and I hope I have the opportunity to attend many of the local and state pageants. . . . There are 3,500 pageants being held in colleges, universities, and communities this year, so it will be impossible for me to visit all of them."

"I will not be able to take part in your pageant, so I want to send my sincere best wishes to every contestant and my congratulations to the committee who is working the event."

"It is a worthwhile experience—win or lose—and with all the scholarships that are offered, there are many winners in every pageant. Seven hundred girls are going to college this year with the help of their Miss America scholarships."

"My first local pageant was for the title of Miss Phoenix and I was first runner-up twice. Frankly, I was a bit discouraged, but the third time I entered the Miss Arizona Pageant, I represented my college town of Tempe. So, don't give up on the first pageant. . . . I had entered again I would not be Miss America and have a $10,000 scholarship as the winner and a $1,000 scholarship as Miss Phoenix."

"I hope you will encourage the young women in your college who enter the pageant. This is where the next Miss America will be named and she will be right there in your own town."

Music Institute Offers Summer Piano Training

This summer the Music Department of Longwood College will offer a two-week Piano Clinic for outstanding high school piano students. The clinic, which will begin Monday, June 14, and last through Friday, June 25, will be conducted by Dr. Sterling C. Adams, Associate Professor of Music. An intensive study of piano literature, practice methods, master classes, theory fundamentals and performance will be features of the clinic.

High schools are invited to submit names of students whom they would like to recommend for the clinic. Students are requested to register before April 15.

A tuition charge of $50 will be made and payable by April 15 for those who will participate in the clinic. Room and board, which will be on the Longwood College campus and under the supervision of college personnel, will amount to $100 per student. The cost of travel for music and other material. The modest cost of the clinic makes this a rare opportunity for high school students to receive excellent and comprehensive instruction in a field which they may wish to pursue later in life. Further information is available from Dr. Adams.

Colonnade Holds Literary Contest For LC Writers

Once again it is time to announce that the Colonnade is now receiving entries for its Spring Literary Contest, which closes on March 15.

There are five basic categories by which the entries are classified. They are: poetry, short story, formal essay, informal essay, prose impression, or play. Each work submitted must be completely original and previously unpublished.

Entries will be judged by a committee consisting of three faculty members and one student judge. It has not been definitely decided if the committee will appear in person at the Colonnade.

Prospective contestants are requested that entries are submitted by Monday, March 15 and may be turned in to Mrs. William L. Adams, Room 100, or Donna Weatherly.

Cash awards will be given to winning entries. These prizes consist of $10 to first place winner, $5 to second place winner, and $3 to third place winner. All students are urged to enter this contest.

Griffin Attends State Meet Of Home Economies

U. G. Griffin, Professor and Chairman of the Department of Home Economics, will attend a meeting of Home Economics Department Chairmen in Richmond, on February 26 and 27. The meeting is at the State Hotel, in Richmond, as for the degree-granting Home Economics Department. The meeting is for the purpose of discussing the

One Of A Kind

By the time a girl reaches the age to enter college, she is no longer considered a child but is now thought of in terms of a woman. She is no longer the little girl trying to act grown-up; rather, she is grown-up.

It seems rather strange to me that she should look grown-up and be considered grown-up, but still act and behave as a child. What I mean to say here is that she is still trying to mock the people she admires. Now, I ask you—what's wrong with being different, with being one of a kind, with being an individual?

An individual on campus is hard to find. Everyone seems to feel he has to be like his comrades—he has to be of the same image as the crowd.

Popularity and acceptance by the crowd are keynotes considered by our non-individual inmates. If the group drinks alcoholic beverages out at Leo's, we must too. It looks quite sophisticated to insert money into a cigarette machine, so we smoke. It sounds very "collegiate" to curse every word or so, so we indulge in this vice too.

Even though we've been taught these things are wrong and, in the case of cigarettes, that they are bad for our health, we still are tolerant and allow these practices to mar our lives. We ignore the doctor's plea, and we ignore our conscience. We ignore these things because we are too weak, too diseased by infirmity to say "no" and to go against the accepted society of our group.

But what of those individuals that do exist—those few church-going Christians, those few who do act according to what they believe themselves? Are these people scorned? For the most part, yes, but the difference here is that these people don't care. They aren't concerned with what the mass likes; rather, the individual is concerned only with acting in a moral, uncorrupted manner. Thus, with a free conscience and a happy heart, this person can roam the halls with relatively few worries. Longwood is desperately in need of more such happy-faced residents!

The Crisis On Our Campuses

Reprinted From The February 1965 Issue Of The Reader's Digest

A storm of controversy that threatens to attain hurricane proportions is churning on the nation's campuses. Behind the riveted exteriors of administration buildings, in men's and women's dormitories and wherever students and faculty gather, one question provides a recurrent focus for debate. By this time the fact that a major change in campus morals is taking place has been convincingly documented. The question now is not whether the changes are occurring but why it is occurring; and what, if anything, should be done about it.

America's colleges and universities have traditionally been the seedbed of significant social change. But the current change is occurring so rapidly that neither students nor faculty members and college administrators fully understand what is happening. There is, it seems, a sort of vicious circle in which student demands for more freedom (or, to use the current catchword, permissiveness) are met by a relaxation of administrative rules. There may be, as many college administrators argue, values in the trend. But where is the administrator who will not acknowledge that it has produced an increase in illegitimate pressures on campus? And where is the parent who has not observed in his college-age offspring the signs of a deep moral confusion? Here, from its commencement address last June, a college president gives one of the clearest descriptions of the problem yet presented.

—The Editors of Time and Country

On American campuses, at most every college administration reports increasing pressure from students to relax rules and regulations on smoking, drinking, visiting hours and curfew, while the whole question of how far the college should act in loco parentis has been the subject of heated debate. We are thus confronted with demands for more freedom in the face of a declining acceptance of morality.

Tremors from these seismic disturbances have reached Hollins in the form of a widespread (Continued on page 4)

Surface Joins Staff During Last Spring

Mr. Paul M. Surface is one of the Education Department's latest faculty additions; he serves as an instructor of audio visuals and is in charge of management of the closed circuit television system. Mr. Surface joined the staff last May and helped in the selection and the installation of the television studio that occupies part of the Hiner Building's third floor.

Mr. Surface's previous experience in this work includes radio work, teaching an electronics shop class, and teaching calculus on the educational television network WHRO in Norfolk.

Mr. Surface is widely traveled and has lived in various places such as San Francisco, Washington, D. C., Denver, Colo., Portland, Ore., and Scarsdale, New York, where he graduated from high school. During World War II, he served as a radio operator at Two Jims and brought home a Purple Heart for his service in the bombing of Japan. A graduate of the University of Washington in Seattle, he has attended many colleges before and since his graduation. He has studied at Oberlin, New York University, Columbia, two of William and Mary's previous branches, now RPI and Old Dominion, M. A. D. S. and Longwood where he received his master's degree in 1962. Prior to his arrival at this campus, Mr. Surface taught at Norview High School in Norfolk.

Because Mr. Surface keeps the television cameras and most of the controls in working order, he is planning to take a course in television servicing at Old Dominion College. On week ends he

Letter To Editor

Students Defend Rec Employees

Kay Young

Dear Miss Fitchett,
In response to your letter published February 17, 1965 in the Rotunda concerning the service of the Main Rec, we feel that in all fairness it must be pointed out that the majority of those who work there are very pleasant to do business with. Any unpleasantness does sometimes occur, but this should not reflect on those employees not involved.

Sincerely,
Earlene Dalton

Melton Editorial Draws Response

Dear Miss Melton:
In response to your editorial, "Education and Awareness," printed in the last edition of the Rotunda, February 17, 1965, perhaps you misjudge or do not truly know your fellow students. We are here for a well-rounded education of body, people, and problems. Some of the problems we can do something about, others are impassive to the actions of one person with one opinion. This "cotton-candy world," which you have so obligingly labeled, is really quite sticky. Generally, there are very few people who wish to return to this "cotton-candy world" once they have finally left. Perhaps this is because they are so anxious to go "forth to teach future students to close their eyes, their ears, and their minds to everything that is not nice."

We are so pleased with the capabilities of the Rotunda staff. At least, we now know to whom we might go to broaden our outlook and stimulate our awareness.

Miss Melton, on your next attempt at summing up majority opinion, you might best consult the majority. Best wishes on your future attempts within your "cotton-candy world."

Narrow-mindedly,
Anita Osborn

Histories Tells Of Circus, Song Contest

Editor's Note: This is the seventh in a series of histories on Longwood College—its organizations, its traditions, its changing eras, and its students.

By Maria "Dixie" Grant

Perhaps one of the most well-known and well-liked traditions here at Longwood has been Circus. Ironically, it was established rather late in L.C.'s history and it seems to have held a most prominent position ever since its very beginning. In this comparatively new part of our college's activities slowly on the decline. No matter, let's find AGELESS and ask her to relate some of the lushness of the Circuses of the past.

At the same time, Longwood through the years have been the good old Rotunda sings and the Song Contests.

Let's run back with Father Time to the year 1931 and join AGELESS.

Oh, hello there, My heavens, we didn't have to take such a bloody long jump back this time, did we?

Circus used to be one of my very favorite times of the year. I looked forward to it so. I remember for instance in 1931 our Circus queen had on a long white gown with a train and a huge crown. There was a Ringmaster, too, but I can't seem to recall an Animal Trainer. The 1932 yearbook showed the Circus of '31 in ten tiny pictures with the caption: "Ode and Emz". The whole show was held in the gym and my friend, Mary Shelton, cracked the whip that night. She was very good for the first Animal Trainer I remember seeing.

November 7, 1932 was a rainy day at State Teachers College. All the streets of Farmville were cleared for the big parade. Mickey Mouse ("Dot Wainwright") and his orchestra featured Betty Boop ("Margaret Gilmer") got the show off to a great start.

All the different organizations competed in the ring for prizes. Oh, one of the nicest things was the magician who shocked the audience by producing a "real live SAT sat." That year the Junior was the Music Club (later in second and the Seniors were first (see, at least one group of seniors came out with a Circus prize—smile). The high point of the evening was the revelation of the queen who had ridden in the Queen's Wagon that afternoon in the parade, and whose head was replaced by a large question mark (actually her head was still there, obvious by).

In 1936, on October 28, there was a big car drawn by horses. Ever so nice. It was still fun trying to guess who the Circus queen would be.

Slater Announces Food Survey Results

The Slater Food Management System has announced the results of its Food Preference Survey held earlier in the year. The survey has detected the most liked and disliked foods for breakfasts, appetizers, soups, salads, sandwiches, entrees, vegetables, breads, desserts, and beverages.

What are some results? For breakfasts, favorites are doughnuts, 96 per cent; blueberry pancakes, 88 per cent; and fried corn flakes, 76 per cent. Most disliked breakfast items are oatmeal, 88 per cent; oatmeal and raisin, 88 per cent; and oatmeal and raisin, 88 per cent.

Tied for appetizer preference are orange juice and fresh fruit cup, at 90 per cent. Ribbarb is the most disliked at 60 per cent. Soup favorite is chicken noodle soup, at 92 per cent, and clam chowder ranks as most disliked at 64 per cent. For salad, ham and cheese cold platter is preferred, at 88 per cent, while tossed green salad is the same percentage. Jellied Bing Cherry is liked most by 80 per cent, while as per cent, and as per cent dislike fresh vegetable aspic and carrot raisin respectively.

For entrees, the most preferred, while bacon, lettuce, and tomato, is the most popular at 80 per cent. Then rank hamburgers, grilled cheese and tomatoes.

Favorite entrees include roast beef, 99 per cent; turkey, 98 per cent; and beef steak, 97 per cent. Most disliked are braised liver, 50 per cent; shrimp, 50 per cent; and lamb stew, 50 per cent.

One hundred per cent student approval was recorded for French fries, and next ranked baked Idaho potatoes at 99 per cent. Beans and corn are more preferred vegetables. Most disliked are French fried eggplant, turnips, and Brussels sprouts.

And what about breads and beverages? Soft rolls and biscuits were tops, while corn bread was least preferred at 26 per cent. Hot tea was also not a favorite at 5 per cent. Iced tea, not chocolate, milk, lemonade and coffee were preferred in that order.

For the survey, three percent ages — chocolate milk sundae, 97 per cent, to pineapple upside down cake, 85 per cent. Most disliked — bread pudding at 49 per cent.

ARA Slater tries to use the results as a guide in making their menus, whenever possible. Results were tabulated by computers at the company headquarters, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

On January 29, the system took over the snack bar in Main Hall. Mr. Penock welcomes suggestions.

Students are asked to watch the bulletin boards for weekly specials. Hours for the snack bar will be posted later.

H2O Club Show Opens Tonight At 8 O'Clock

Tonight marks the opening of this year's annual H2O Water Pageant. The theme for the 1965 show is "Manhattan in Motion." A general admission of 35 cents is being charged per person. The show begins at 8:00 p.m. tonight, Thursday, and Friday.

Ara Persak and Linda Spinner are co-chairmen for this year's Water Pageant. Miss Barbara Smith is sponsor of the H2O Club and is director of the Water Pageant.

The pageant consists of numbers created by various participants. The different numbers are representative of the mood the members are trying to create. Thus, in this way the members will create through music an atmosphere of "Manhattan in Motion."

The participants in the Water Pageant consist of members of the H2O Club and the Corkettes.

Enthusiasm For Sports Activities Describes Senior Earlene Lang

Particularly well known on our campus as a sports enthusiast is Earlene Lang. Earlene is a senior this year and has had three full years of sports activity behind her. She has been active in all aspects of sport and recreational activity at Longwood.

Hockey is one of Earlene's first loves, and she has played on the varsity squad for four years. She has enjoyed playing basketball on both the varsity and class levels. This year she will be scoring baskets for the Senior Class team. During the spring, archery is a popular activity on campus and Earlene is right on target with this sport. She has participated in several intra-collegiate Archery Tournaments. There is a never ending array of sports activity that Earlene enjoys, including playing on the class volleyball team, and as a hobby, not to mention skiing at Hot Springs. Earlene also has her hand in the pie of other activities at Longwood. She has been on the A. A. Council for three years and is the president of the Monogram Club. She is vice-president of the H2O Club this year, and has been in several water pageants and class swim meets. This year she is serving as vice-president of the VAHPER which is the Virginia State Association for Student Physical Education.

Earlene is from Walsenburg, N. C., and as you've probably guessed by this time is a physical education major. She did her student teaching during the second block in Colonial Heights, and she plans to teach in this area next year.

Earlene Lang, the Sports Spotlight is on you!

Judicial Board members, better known as the "Penguins," take time out to play volleyball in the Round-Robin tournament.

Host Of Teams Vie In Round-Robin Games

The Basketball Round-Robin tournament got under way February 16 with a game in the old gym at 10:00 p.m. The Green Gladiators defeated Second Floor Tabbs, 12-8.

On February 18, at 10:00 p.m., the Hinges won a game with the Court Jesters, 20-9.

No games will be played the week of February 22-26 because of the Water Pageant. The games will be resumed the following week. The class basketball games will be played just before Spring Vacation.

Teams participating in the Basketball Tournament are the Green Gladiators, Second Floor Tabbs, the Court Jesters, the Hinges, the Toss-Ups, and the Seniors.

Beginning March 1, games will be played on Monday and Wednesday nights at 6:45 p.m. On Tuesdays and Thursdays the games will be played at 10:00 p.m.

Volleyball In the Round-Robin volleyball tournament nine games have been played. There have been no games this week due to the H2O Water Pageant, but next week things will be underway once again.

In play Second-Floor Tabbs defeated the Anchors, Jolly Pipers, and the B's defeated the Penguins (Judicial Board).

The Group downed Jenny and the Majors; the Spasies downed the Other Group; and Sigma Kappa downed the 306's.

The Other Group defeated the Penguins; the Aardboks defeated the Majors; and the Spasies defeated Sigma Kappa.

Longwood Meets Defeat, Victory In Basketball

Saturday, February 20, the Longwood basketball team met victory and defeat in two games with Madison College.

In the first game, Longwood bowed to Madison for a 4 point defeat with the score 33-49. The second game was a tight one in which Longwood emerged victorious with a one point lead over the Madison team. The score for the second game was 49-42.

Students' Heart Fund Memorial Is Tribute To Late Physician

Longwood College students have made a substantial contribution to the Memorial Heart Fund as a tribute to the college physician who was also their counselor and friend.

Members of the Legislative Board, student government group, sponsored the memorial tribute and gift.

Dr. Graziani, whose untimely death occurred here February 9, had been Longwood College physician since June 1, 1957.

Last Thursday a huge red cloth cut-out in the shape of a heart covered almost a fourth of the floor in the Rotunda of the college's main building. On it, students placed their gifts.

At 6 p.m. Mrs. H. E. Southall, of Farmville, who directs the Memorial Heart Fund in Prince Edward county, was present to receive the memorial donation.

It totaled $138.55 made up in bills and hundreds of coins.

Dr. Graziani, who was also their counselor and friend, was a beloved physician, he was a beloved counselor and friend.

Woodward said. The Memorial Heart Fund operates the year round. Mrs. Southall explains. Contributions to it are acknowledged, the names of the memorialized being notified and the donor similarly receiving due notice and a receipt.

As distinguished from the annual February fund appeal of the Virginia Heart Association, the Memorial Fund receives gifts throughout the year. Mrs. Southall is agent for the state association in this phase of its operation. Memorial gifts may be sent to her at any time at Farmville, Va., care of Memorial Heart Fund.

In addition to the gifts from the students, numerous memorial gifts in tribute to Dr. Graziani were received from friends in the county and community.

Song Contest

The underclassmen took both awards yesterday in the 1965 Athletic Association's annual Song Contest.

For the second year in a row the Class of 1967 — sophomores — took first place with their song, this time with a class song. The Class of 1968 — freshmen — were awarded second place for their song.

The songs — class songs this year — are original in both words and music and are written by members of the respective classes.

concern about the efficacy of the honor system. It seems to be generally conceded that infractions of the rules go unreported and therefore unpunished, and that there is a general disinclination to tell on anyone else—to be one's sister's keeper. I have heard it argued that obedience to the letter and spirit of the honor code should be a matter of individual conscience, not of corporate responsibility. Presumably, if an individual does not agree with a rule or with the system, no one ought to force it on her.

Any system that leaves it to every individual to decide whether a rule is just or unjust is no system at all, but anarchy. It is like having a criminal code in which the murderer decides whether he has committed an offense. An honor system differs from any other regulatory mechanism only in the mode of enforcement. It is enforced by the subjects themselves rather than by external authority. The concept of honor grew out of the medieval code of chivalry in a steeply hierarchical society, and the essence of honor was the notion of an obligation to one's class not to bring discredit upon others by improper behavior. In the kind of democracy that has evolved in this country, such a sense of corporate responsibility may be an anachronism. But I believe that some conflict exists between certain contemporary currents in American democratic thought and practice and the idea of a self-enforcing honor code.

At the center of this problem is the generally sorry condition of the American family as a focus of moral authority. Haunted by ill-defined Freudian strictures against parental repression, bedeviled by the "progressive" cult of self-expression, urged toward permissiveness and beguiled by false doctrines of family democracy, parents have too often abdicated their responsibility for setting standards of behavior and limitations on their children's freedom of action. Afraid of inducing trauma, or of being unpopular with their children or their children's friends, they have yielded to demands for privileges and liberties that are clearly harmful.

In so doing, these adults rob their children of an essential part of their education by failing to provide clear measures of right and wrong and values based on something firmer than the whims of the crowd. It is an ethic which says that because many people are doing something, it is normal, therefore right.

It must be made clear that rules are made to protect young people from hurting themselves, not simply to keep them from having fun. We must rid our selves of the notion that fun is an end in itself, rather than a by-product of doing hard things well, or we will transform ourselves into a society of adolescents.

We must also beware of the prevalent and pernicious misconception that democracy implies absolute equality and that any denial of equal worth is un-American. Democracy means equal rights before the law and equal opportunity for individual development to the limit of one's potential; democracy emphatically does not imply that everyone has the same potential, that knowledge and experience are not to be valued above ignorance and inexperience, and that every man's judgment is sovereign and that every opinion is as good as every other. In other words, democracy does not deny the principle of authority in the enforcement of rules, so long as everyone has recourse to peaceful methods of changing the rules.

I have been accused of old-fashionedism for advocating a return to the "old-fashioned" concept of "father knows best." Of course parents are not infallible, but the odds are with them. The "right to make one's own mistakes" is an absolute rallying cry. We all make mistakes unavoidably, but what is the use of studying the history of human society if each generation must repeat the errors of the past?

Paradoxical though it may seem, true freedom comes through commitment—commitment to people, to ideas, to causes greater than oneself. Freedom lies in being able to choose an area of engagement and intense interest; it cannot be found in aimless hedonism or irresponsible drift. The joys of freedom reside in using one's powers to the full in the service of some worthy enterprise that commands all one's conviction and devotion. We are happiest when we are fully used. Every enduring achievement of mankind is the product of a disciplined mind and will and imagination.

Limon Appearance Is Unique Event For LC

Jose Limon's appearance at Jarman Hall is a unique and singular event for Longwood students. His status is comparable to that of the original pioneers of American modern dance. As a member of the Humphrey-Weidman group, he found that dance could better define his meaning of art than painting. He studied and has worked with Doris Humphrey, the prima choreographer of all modern dancers.

The first section of the concert was titled: A Choreographic Offering and was a work commissioned by Connecticut College in memory of Doris Humphrey. It is based on movements of specific works, and may be used by the student to better understand the structure of dance. From a music basic, several of the vignettes are formal, pre-classic, nonnarrative dance motifs paraphrased by Limon. Another group of works may be defined as reflecting Humphrey's beliefs of man in dance form. This is evident in the Passacaglia Fugue in C Minor, which is considered pure music and yet exalting man.

Dionysianism of the '30's is based on pagan ritual with swirling patterns of color enhanced by migrating lights. This is the exterior aspect of a dance founded in basic, emotional movement.

Circular Descent is one part of a work titled: Two Ecstatic Dances. The term circular descent spirals and circular patterns of movement or motion of the human body.

New Dance, a 1935 work, was the first modern dance work of extended length. It marked the transition from modern dance diversifications to modern ballet. With My Red Fires, the second part, one views the march figure, both as mother and figurehead in a culture. New Dance became the third part of the Trilogy.

Ruins and Visions, a dance for four, relates to Spender's poem, "The Palace." The dance deals with people who deny reality. But war comes. The characters, drawn together by catastrophe, meet reality with courage and faith. Spender's themes were built into a new, choreographic form. His symbolic characters were individualized, and his negative ending was replaced by an affirmative conclusion of great power. Humphrey choreographed this work for Limon.

Missa Brevis is one of Limon's most beautiful and reverent works, and which relates to the mass. This work comprises the total second section or Part II. Kodaly's Missa Brevis on Tempore Belli has been rearranged by Juillard. The first performance of Missa Brevis was also at Juillard School in 1958.

The segments of the short mass may be understood as the ritual of a reconstruction of the reverence of worship, exalting and symbolized in form. Others may view the powerful work through hymns of praise, reverence,

Eighty-Eight Teach In Four Away Areas

Eighty-eight seniors are presently doing their student teaching in the four away student teaching areas.

In Henrico County twenty students are observing and teaching in their respective subject areas. Those teaching elementary education are Lucy Booth, Beverly Butler, Betty Jean Crowder, Barbara Ennis, Helen Jones, Patricia Odgen, Mary Lou Pennington, and Millie Walker. Bobbie Burrell, Thelma Dowdy, Betty Hammer, Sharon Hollins, Judy Kenney, Brenda Martin, and Janet Watkins Parrish are engaged in teaching English. Three seniors, Laura Lee Myerhoffer, Diane Minter and Rita Sizer are teaching biology. Betty Ann Wyatt is concentrating on her history classes while Virginia Starkey is teaching business classes.

Private Student Gives Recital On February 25th

Mr. Walker Cunningham, a private student of Dr. Joanne Curmatt, will give an organ concert next Thursday, February 25. Walker is a high school senior from Blackstone, Virginia. He is accomplished not only with the organ, but also on the piano and flute.

He will play five pieces: Toccata and Fugue in F Major by Bach, Concerto in B Flat Major by Handel, a piece by Sweelinck, Toccata and Fugue in D Major by Buxtehude, and Litanies by Alain.

The concert will be held in the Rehearsal Room of Jarman Hall. All college students are welcome to attend.

that year by the way. Lovely affair.

About 1952 the big Saturday Sing was taken down a peg or two or three. Instead of the usually long program, we just gathered around for about 15 or 20 minutes after dinner. The four classes and various organizations used to present a short skit back then, and there was always a prize for the best one. The '52 Circus theme was "Merry-Go-Round the World."

Our yearbook made a few changes the next year when the court members were in their gowns on stage instead of the individual shots. Quite nice. And you know that it was that year, too, that the AA began to present a prize to the best song in the Song Contest? It was lots of fun. And you'd never believe the songs. Yes, you would, too. In '54 the Sing, sponsored by the YWCA, was changed to Friday nights after dinner, during the fall and early winter. A lovely picture of the whole Circus Train. And there were even some scenes from the skits.

Skipping ahead to 1958 I remember there was a monstrous clown's face made out of paper stuck on the stage on Circus night. The mouth was a big opening to the Ringmaster to step through. And it was that same year that the Animal Trainer actually made it in the yearbook.

With "Sawdust Shavings" as the theme in 1955, there was finally a picture of the Ringmaster along with the court in the yearbook. They still hadn't gotten around to the Animal Trainer. And there were even some scenes from the skits. Skipping ahead to 1958 I remember there was a monstrous clown's face made out of paper stuck on the stage on Circus night. ## Batts Publishes Lepidology Study

In the December 31, 1964 issue of Copeia, the official publication of the American Society of Ichthyologists and Herpetologists, an article by Billy S. Batts, assistant professor of Natural Sciences here, appeared. The article, entitled "Lepidology of the Adult Pleurocentrid Fishes of Puget Sound, Washington," is concerned with the study of fish scales, lepidology, of flatfishes found in Puget Sound.

It is a complete study of these fish scales so a more positive identification of them is possible. It includes the key results, analysis, methods and materials, and summary used by Mr. Batts for the project.

Curnutt Recital

February 22, Dr. Joanne Curnutt presented an organ recital at the Northminster Baptist Church. Her pieces included contemporary Scandinavian and French music. In order to introduce a new style of freshness into the organ recital, two Danish and a Norwegian piece were presented.

Accompanying Dr. Curnutt were Mildred Johnson who sang and Doris Harwell and Samuel C. Stowe, III, who were flutists.

February 19th, Dr. Joanne Curnutt gave a speech at the Virginia Music Education Association at Mary Washington. As a member of the panel, her talk was on "The Role of the Performer in Music Education." This speech emphasized the stress for individual roles in the field of music education and a more stress for the musician.

Leitch Receives Weaving Award

One of Longwood's assistant professors of art, Miss Nancy V. Leitch, won the highest merit award in weaving in the Southwestern Craft Exhibition at the Mint Museum of Art at Charlotte, North Carolina. The exhibition opened early in January and closed January 31.

The award was made for a red wool hanging, and the cash award was the highest given in weaving. Master craftsmen from the surrounding southwestern area took part in the exhibition.

PLAYERS REHEARSE

Hard at work in Jarman, the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs prepare for the coming play—"Blithe Spirit."

"Blithe Spirit" Materializes Into Three-Act Comedy

Blithe Spirit, a three-act farce by Noel Coward, will be presented this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, March 4, 5, and 6, at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs.

This well-known play takes place in present-day England in the country cottage of Charles Condomine and his second wife, Ruth. An unusual sequence of events results from some entertainment provided by Madame Arcati, an eccentric medium. Eventually all the characters become involved in the mischievous happenings and misadventures which lead to an unusual and comic conclusion.

Blithe Spirit has been rehearsing for five weeks under the direction of Mr. David Wiley. A performance was given Monday night to a small audience of cadets from Fork Union Military Academy. The three performances this week end are free to Longwood students, $5.00 for other students, and $1.00 for adults.

The role of Ruth Condomine is played by Ellen Miller; Charles' first wife, Elvira, by Sally Richter; the charming Madame Arcati by Mildred Gwaltney; the maid, by Mary Ann Chin; Mrs. Bradman by Anne Cooley; Charles Condomine by Gerald Ragland, and Dr. Bradman is played by J. P. Rogers.

Assistant director is Nan Gregory, with June Wilson as technical director, and Nancy Woltz as director of public relations. Stage manager is Barbara Agee and heading the various crews are Jackie Walker, scenery; Bobbi Rice, lights; Karen Engdahl, sound; Donna Weatherly, properties; Cherany Howe, costumes; Beverly Roark, make-up; and Libby Sutphin and Pat Wall, house.

The next play of the season, Three-Penny Opera by Bertold Brecht, will begin rehearsals Monday, March 8, and will be presented the third weekend in April.

Simonini Joins Committee Meet Of ADE Officers

Dr. R. C. Simonini, Jr., chairman of the department of English, speech, and dramatic art at Longwood College, will attend a meeting of the administrative committee of the Association of Departments of English in Colleges and Universities in New York, March 5-6. Dr. Simonini was elected vice-chairman of the Association at its annual meeting in New York during the Christmas holidays.

The ADE was organized in 1963 to facilitate communication between departments of English, to provide a means for making effective the aims of the profession in academic affairs and in matters affecting the public interest, and to encourage the development of general policies relating to departmental management.

Working closely with the Modern Language Association and the National Council of Teachers of English, the ADE was successful in influencing Congress to amend the National Defense Education Act last year to include English and other subjects. The leadership displayed by organizations of the English teaching profession was especially commended by the U. S. Office of Education at a meeting last week of 400 directors of NDEA summer institutes for teachers. Longwood College will have one of the 1965 Summer Institutes for Teachers of English in Secondary Schools.

Candidates For Major-Minor Elections Answer Students' Queries In Conference

Candidates: Legislative Board

by Suzan Woltz

Hot on the election trail, Longwood's candidates for the various offices have just spent a busy week of conferences and questions. All conferences were held at 6:45 each evening, and in this way candidates' views and opinions were expressed.

"The Rotunda" was there, too, and asked a series of questions to each prospective office-holder, that were made out by the present incumbent in that position. The questions and their replies are here posted in order that the majority of the student body will know the ideas and attitudes of the campaigners.

For the office of president of the Legislative Board, the questions are as follows: What are your specific objectives for student government next year? What do you think the purpose of May Day should be and do you think May Day in its present form serves this purpose? What role do you think the administration should play in student government?

Kaye Catron

She believes it could be corrected by unifying the three through closer committee cooperation, evaluation, and work. Her answer to the third question, concerning the administration's part in student government, was brief and to the point—a big role. Kaye feels the student government should have much more to say about the administration duties than at the present.

Theresa Albright

Theresa Albright, in answer to the first question, listed six specific objectives. Firstly, she hopes that in coming years, the Legislative Board will expand in growth and broader scope with the rest of the school. She also hopes for membership in N.S.A., more contact with other groups, and more joint student-faculty committees. Fourthly, she maintains the position of the board as a legislative body—with quicker, more rapidly available results. She would like to create more student interest—more student understanding of the board. Lastly, Theresa wants to inform the students—especially the day students and the summer freshmen.

To the second question, she replied that May Day is to spring what Circus is to fall. It's a thing all students can participate in, work together, get to know each other, and enjoy themselves at the same time. Theresa feels May Day has lost some status, but could be brought back to par by suggestions from other college May Days, and sponsorship from other organizations, like the A.A. or classes. For the third question, Theresa replied that the administration must have final responsibility and authority, because a large portion of the student body are minors. She believes students should have a greater voice in things, like courses, and that the student government should always try to present student viewpoint.

Kaye Catron feels that the rules and regulations should be less restrictive for upperclassmen and remain the same for lowerclassmen. Her reasoning behind her statement is this: besides teaching young women to live under disciplines, the rules should also give the girls a chance to prove they can work with responsibility.

She believes May Day is not presently serving its purpose on campus.

Jenny McCoy

A three-point program is the basic objective of Jenny McCoy, another candidate. She feels informal press conferences, with heads of various organizations, administration, and students would be beneficial in that changes of policy could be told and explained. Her second point is the compulsory attendance by board members at board meetings. Lastly, she hopes to broaden the scope of the Legislative Board. One way to do this is by forming a committee that would collect articles and studies on higher education. Then each week some of these would be published in The Rotunda. In the sophomore symposium composed of deans and student body presidents of many schools would meet to discuss the aims of higher education.

May Day is the equivalent of Circus, with holidays and stunts. It should, however, show the creative side of L.C. life. At present, Jenny doesn't feel May Day is fulfilling its purpose. She suggests it be sponsored by the Athletic Association, that way increasing dance facilities, and that it take more advantage of Longwood Players, and the choirs here.

The administration should serve in an advisory capacity, and we should feel free to go to them for advice and help. Jenny added that she did not deem their approval necessary for minor details, but that they should have the final say on more important ones.

From Here To Future

Three hundred Longwood students were struggling to get their feet on the ground.

Today we are able to reflect on this time to keep our feet on the ground. Longwood students and a part of our nation have been awarded a tremendous responsibility. The responsibility to prepare for the future through the present.

Tomorrow we will go to the polls to elect leaders for our school. By now we have formed our opinions as to whom we will vote for. But how were these opinions formed?

If you can say to yourself that you have voted not on popularity, but on what you have found in that candidate which constitutes the qualities of a leader; that which you have found in questioning, investigating and thinking; and that which you feel upholds the standards, goals and ideals of Longwood, then you have already gained a firm foothold in the future.

Here at Longwood you are taking a step toward responsibility to yourself and your fellow students. Will that step prepare you for those much larger ones you will soon take in the interest of your country and the world?

Karen Ruder

Candidates: Judicial Board

Three questions were made up by Anne Cordle for Judicial Board candidates — What do you believe should be the proper place of Judicial Board as an investigating and as a judicial body on campus? Do you feel the Honor Code is working successfully here, and what could be done to strengthen its operation? What are your feelings about the necessity and limits of searches?

Linda Bassford

Linda Bassford, a candidate for the Judicial Board, believes that the Judicial Board should be an investigating body, not a judicial body. She believes that the Honor Code is working quite well here, but that it could be strengthened by having more searches. She believes that searches are necessary to maintain the Honor Code, but that they should be limited to the physical aspects of the student's person.

To the extent that the Judicial Board is an investigating body, she believes that it should be able to conduct searches. She believes that searches are necessary to maintain the Honor Code, but that they should be limited to the physical aspects of the student's person. She believes that searches are necessary to maintain the Honor Code, but that they should be limited to the physical aspects of the student's person.

Mary Lea Shoulters

Frances Stewart

Frances Stewart believes Judicial Board should act by a democratic agency. It should be in cooperation with the student body. Its "legality" has grown out of necessity and should continue to grow. She agrees concerning the Honor Code that she has been here almost three years and in that time has seen just one alteration in the Code. Frances has just one alteration in the Code. Frances has just one alteration in the Code. Frances has just one alteration in the Code.

Letters To Editor

Editorials Bring Responses

Dear Editor:

In response to the reply to Miss Melton concerning her article "Education and Awareness," I, too, have an opinion to express.

If you will listen to the conversations of your fellow coeds, I am certain that you will discover that the majority speak only on matters of immediate concern to themselves, as Miss Melton denoted. You will also discover that the majority of students do not care to discuss controversial issues. They are not really interested in matters outside of what Miss Melton ironically classifies their "cotton-candy worlds." The conflicts in which they are involved are predominately conflicts with one another. Very few are interested in the community in which they reside nine months out of a year. The popular attitude is: This is not my home, not where I plan to teach, so why should I be concerned?

As Miss Melton stated: "We have committed ourselves to spend four years in an institution of higher learning. We have come here (supposedly) to explore new ideas and open the channels for discoveries in new intellectual areas. We have come here to be educated — in short, to become aware." What better opportunity have we than right here in Prince Edward County, currently making history.

It is fine to be involved in numerous campus activities, but we cannot isolate ourselves. An important part of our education here is to become involved with the surrounding community. To know its people — how they think and why they think as they do. To learn both sides of each controversy. To be concerned about these people and to commit ourselves, thus broadening our ability to understand others when we are on our own without the security of home or campus. "I am a part of all that I have met." (Wordsworth)

The Rotunda has been doing an excellent job of reporting the facts and enlightening the student body about the Prince Edward County situation, and they should certainly continue to do so. Broader steps should be taken toward inspiring an interest in this community.

Unfortunately, what Miss Melton stated in her editorial is true of the majority of students. Perhaps some of the minority can not see this. "Education can be defined as awareness."

Respectfully,
Linda Dyer

Dear Miss Young,

In response to your editorial "One of a Kind" printed in the Rotunda February 24, 1965, I feel you have unjustly insulted and underestimated not only the individuality of your fellow students here at Longwood, but also of the majority of people the world over. It is a human instinct within us to fit the modes of our time, and certainly ours is not the first age in which people desire to match the styles in wearing apparel and activity. The majority of us at Longwood take pride in appearing well-groomed, and I have yet to see a girl snubbed for wearing such "out-of-style" clothing as the straight skirt or open-collared blouse.

In your reference to "those few church-going Christians" we have on campus, it is obvious that your own attendance at evening services is somewhat slack or you would notice the impressive number of girls that do attend.

Many of us indulge in smoking, a habit, however, detrimental to health, shared by millions of people of fine character and leadership qualities all over the world. I hardly think this habit causes sleepless nights due to a

Long-Time Navy Man Joins Math Faculty

By Phyllis Hammer

Mr. Harold Crist has joined the faculty in the Mathematics Department here at Longwood College.

Mr. Crist, a native of Green Bay, Wisconsin, is a long-time Naval veteran. He was graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy with a B.S. degree in 1933. Highlights of his Naval career include commanding a destroyer 1946, troop transport — 1956, cruiser — 1945, and Missile Training Center, Dam Neck, Virginia — 1952-1955. He served as navigator of a flagship which conducted the first bombardment of Japanese territory. He also served as navigator of "Augusta," which took President Truman to the Potsdam Conference in 1945. The President announced the dropping of the first atomic bomb on their return trip. Mr. Crist was Operations Officer on the staff of "Caribbean Sea Frontier" during some hectic maneuvering by Castro and the first series of present launchings of astronauts. The Naval veteran has served two tours in Alaskan waters, two and one-half years in the Canal Zone, as well as traveling in China, Western Europe, Northern Africa, and Central America.

He was retired in 1960 and took his Master of Arts in Teaching (Mathematics) at Duke University in 1961. Prior to coming to Longwood this fall, Mr. Crist taught senior mathematics in Virginia Beach High Schools, 1961-1964.

Presently, his family is living in Virginia Beach. He has an 18-year-old daughter who plans to major in band music, and a 21-year-old son who attended Chowan College and plans to major in English or Journalism.

His hobbies include reading, carpentry, swimming, and exploring new ideas on applications of math.

When asked how he likes Longwood, Mr. Crist replied, "I bothered conscience, nor do I remember having seen an individual who smoked shunned from society as an undesirable.

In future editions, I hope to see the editorial section of our newspaper occupied by articles that represent our true faults or accomplishments, and not by unjust degradations of Longwood character.

Sincerely,
Sherry Grimes

AA Members Express Thanks

To the classes:

We as members of the Athletic Association wish to thank you for your support of the new tournaments for volleyball and basketball.

The spectators for these night practices have been almost more than for the actual games in the past. Keep up the good work and hope you will continue to support the class games.

Sincerely,

Miss Longwood

Twenty-six candidates have been turned in to run in the Miss Longwood Pageant. These girls are sponsored by various groups and organizations at the school.

It has become necessary, however, to cut this number down to sixteen. This will be done on March 9 in the following fashion: girls will appear in Sunday attire and will present three minutes of talent. They will be judged by certain faculty members who will screen out ten. The remaining sixteen will compete on April 9-10.

enjoy the atmosphere at Longwood, the congenial faculty, the good group of students who possess an excellent desire to learn and wear a smile even during times of adversity." He went further to add that "all the girls are charming and respectful. The campus is a good representation of American womanhood."

Math students, attention — get off the subject of squares roots to tell you some of his experiences!

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

House Council History Closely Tied To College Rules Through Passing Of Time, Changing Eras

By Maria "Disie" Grant

The history of House Council cannot be separated from the changing rules and regulations of Longwood College, for they have changed with the passing of time — naturally.

In order to give you an idea of the House Council of the past as compared with that of the present, it is also necessary to quote some excerpts from the Handbooks through the years. There is a humorous side to the story of this, one of our five major organizations.

Acetess returns to take us on a time tour moving backward to the year 1917 BHCWO (before House Council was organized):

My goodness! I never thought I would get to that dinner on time. Do you know that in 1917 we were required to come to meals unless we were in the infirmary or excused by the head department? Where, there were many other general rules at this time—for instance, we had to get permission from the home office to leave the grounds, except for music — and taking a walk for recreation. Each day we were required to take a half-hour of outdoor exercises. Personally I can't seem to be member exactly that they consisted of. Oh well.

In the 1926 Handbook (and still under general rules) I recall we had to observe absolute quiet between 10:30 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. And heavens, they really meant it! The same year and for many afterward this rule stuck just as did the following:

- Students are permitted to leave the college once a month (once I almost went crazy because I didn't date any Hampden-Sydney boys and I had all my periodical reading done for the whole semester and there was still two weeks to go before I could leave.) Pretty dim.
- An orderly arrangement of rooms before leaving in the morning (this proved fatal for some of my friends).
- Clothes are not to be hung in or out of the dorm windows (I didn't have any problem because I couldn't get my window open).
- No playing pianos or victrolas during school and study hours.
- Things strictly forbidden: card-playing, riding without permission, going into Farmville post office or railroad station, being joined at the soda fountain by young men (it didn't ever mention anything about older men).

For some reason, the next year card-playing was removed from the forbidden list and "no sitting on the wall in front of Student Building" was added. In 1927 freshmen were allowed to go shopping twice a week with permission from the home office. That was ever so convenient.

Oh one of the best things was, in 1929, we didn't want to be disturbed, we could get a Busy Sign and put it on the door and a way around the rules to both of anyone then. Isn't that friend — I see it was after the rule-breaking behind closed doors. Silly. In the spring and fall we were allowed to walk on High Street west as far as the pavement extended and on Buffalo Street as far as Appomattox Street until 7:20 p.m.

The 1930 handbook was a momentous one for the Alma Mater — for that was the year House 11:00 I was terribly ecstatic when this rule was changed because I seem to be of an owl's nature and accomplish much more at night. Quite.

I must tell you about some of the things which involved campus around the late 30's — 1939 to be exact: noise during study hour, washing after 10:30, radios on during study hour and after 11:00. For three call down one received one week's campus. If one just happened to get one during exam time it was a week's campus right there. Simply awful, don't you know. The 1939 yearbook contained ers in the shower room of the gym after 7:30, but one could obtain special late permission for play rehearsals, rush parties, etc. Also, after three call downs it was then the policy to be continued to the library for one week from 7:30 to 10:00. I believe this presented some people from going wild. The library could be quite noisy for some back then. Dining room and fire regulations were not yet under HC's jurisdiction (1947). By 1948 they put in the rule that after five call downs the case would be turned over to Student Government. From the original few offenses which House Council took care of, the list expanded to 20 by '48. Two years later it was increased to 38 including: the proper attire rule, smoking in certain places, roof hours, and we still had Busy Signs! In 1951 an ex-officio member joined with the group, and that was the president of the SGA. The next year I thought HC was ever so clever. You see, it was Circus time, and that organization decided to sponsor a booth in the midway Circus night. They featured the expert fortune-telling of the widely-known "Mile. Tippy-Loe Tabb."

Council was born. They had ever so cute separate oval pictures in the yearbook that year, right next to Student Government. And so another organization of major significance was added to the growing college.

Right there at the beginning the House Council girls really didn't have quite so much to do. Their jobs included:

- a) promoting quiet during study hour
- b) turning out the lights at 11:00 (that was when there weren't quite so many dorms you know)
- c) giving all light permissions
- d) keeping records or checks on all permissions
- e) attending HC meetings every Monday night
- f) cooperating with all the other organizations

In 1937 freshmen and sophomores had to be in their rooms by 10:30. Juniors and seniors by this little tidbit — taken in a nice way of course. "In spite of the trouble we cause, we do respect their studying work. And so, here's to the House Council (nicknamed "Mouse Council"). Wasn't that cute?"

Oh, do you know that in 1942 the freshmen captured the last "campus cards"? I have found in my many years' experience that freshmen do tend to win in this particular field each year. How funny it was in 1944 when Judy Eason, leader of the "stone-face brigade" made her way down the halls and, not infrequently, tripped over piles of Coke bottles strategically placed to give warnings. We had such exciting times then!

It was also that year that House Council assumed responsibility as fire and air raid wardens.

Around the same time I remember we couldn't take show-

Varied Jobs Available For Coming Summer

There are 40,000 new summer jobs available throughout the United States in 1965.

Students can begin their summer plans during a spring vacation from information contained in the 1965 "Summer Employment Directory" just off the press.

The outlook for 1965 is bright! There are more jobs than last summer. The pay is up $50 to $100 in many cases, particularly at summer camps. Employers, however, are asking more often for workers who are at least 18 years of age and experienced. Summer camps, resorts, national parks, and business firms offer the greatest number of jobs. The greatest increase is found with direct selling companies offering products from cookware and cosmetics to shoes and made-to-measure skirts; national parks, which are feeling the surge of more vacationers; and employment agencies — many of which do not charge a fee for placement.

Students are also needed at summer theatres, ranches, restaurants, government, and amusement parks, to mention a few.

Name and address of employers, positions open, and details on how to apply are contained in the 1965 "Summer Employment Directory." Students wishing summer work apply directly to the employers who are included in the Directory at their own request.

Ask for "Summer Employment Directory" at the bookstore or send $3 special college student price to National Directory Service, Box 32663, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Candidates: Young Women's Christian Association

What does the real purpose of the Y.W.C.A. mean to you and in what areas do you think this purpose should be carried out in the coming year? What changes in the Spiritual Life Series do you think are necessary in order to reach the students on campus? Does the Y.W.C.A. fulfill a purpose other than what religious groups offer, and could there be a stronger tie between the Y. and the religious groups? These are the three questions made out by Sandra Craig for the Y.W.C.A. candidates.

Olivia Gibson

Olivia Gibson, the first candidate, answers the first question by saying that it is a Christian organization. It is on campus to bring different sides of life to view, say religious, personal, national, international. I believe it should be carried out by having a higher caliber of programs, and more interest. She feels the Spiritual Life Series could be perked up by having the speakers visit different classrooms, before the actual assembly. Hearing them before the formal assembly makes "listeners" attend outside meetings. She answers the third question by saying the Y. also gives interdenominational and international aspects, rather than purely religious ones, like religious groups. It presents both sides of issues, has broader viewpoints on a large scale. It has broader scope.

Francis Lippford classifies the Y.W.C.A. as an organization to bring together different denominations, promote a Christian atmosphere, and rather be a service organization. She addresses the question by saying that the Y.W.C.A. is the one successful Spiritual Life Series to be because of not having a "religious" poster and not real programs. Francis answers the third question by saying that it does things on a large scale, things religious groups could not do. A stronger tie could be made if each would try to show from the Y back to the groups. But there is really no way to structure a way.

Francis Lippford

Louise Mann

The other candidate, Louise Mann, says the Y.W.C.A. purpose is to offer a chance for fulfillment of Christian life through activities that, she adds, it is in its present form, needs broader the. Louise explained that the present Spiritual Life Series is itself a changed method, but points out that it needs further revision. It must be completely reevaluated, perhaps even substituting a completely new program. We don't yet know all the possibilities of speakers, and we need new sources of a wider range. For the third question, Louise answered that the Y. definitely fulfills a purpose other than the religious groups. Not all churches are present in Farmville and the Y. has activities that aren't furnished, like the Christmas, Easter, and the Spirit and Life Series. She feels a closer tie between the two could be accomplished by sharing portions of mutual interest and by greater communication between the groups.

Chi Speaks

The morning of Wednesday, February 24, 1965 a Chi sign was hung above the entrance to the swimming pool. This sign was placed there to encourage the participation and spirit exhibited in the following activities:

1. The Water Passant
2. The Junior Year, Phase
3. The Volleyball Games
4. The Elections
5. The Song Contest
6. The Upcoming Class Games

We had hoped that the sign would stay up through Saturday night.

Chi does not stand for the swimming pool, but we do not submit the sign as a symbol of the student body, or as a symbol of the activities, is aware of their exist here.

The very fact that the sign was hung in an unusual place should have been an indication of its purposes. It is not a sign to be taken as a symbol of the student body, or as a symbol of the activities, is aware of their exist here.

Thus, Chi stands for the student body which lives in the heart of most Longwood students and teachers. We hope that this idea will continue to prevail.

Faculty Grants Provide Chance For New Studies

Six research grants, totaling $1500, have been awarded by the Committee on Faculty Research at Longwood College. Recipients of the grants are: Janice S. Lemen, Rose F. Spicola, Charles E. Butler, A. M. Harvill, Jr., Marvin W. Schlegel, and William J. Sowder.

Mrs. Lemen, Associate Professor of Art, was awarded the grant to continue experiments in serigraphy, a fine art form which has been in existence only about thirty years. Mrs. Lemen has had 10 one-man shows, one of serigraphy alone. She received her M.A. degree from Peabody College and attended Columbia University.

Dr. Spicola, Assistant Professor of Education, was awarded the grant to assist in a programmed developmental sequence of Phonetic and Structural Analysis Skills and Techniques for the Elementary Teacher. A graduate of Tulane University, Dr. Spicola received her M.A. and Ph.D. from Florida State.

A graduate of the University of Denver and the University of Michigan, Mr. Butler, college librarian, was awarded the grant to aid in the writing of a three-act play: "The Embassy." His creative writing in poetry and the novel has been recognized in Poetry, Harper's, New Yorker, and several other publications.

Dr. Harvill, Associate Professor of Natural Sciences, received his grant for phylogeographic studies in Virginia. He received the B.S. and M.S. degrees from the University of Kentucky, and his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan.

Dr. Schlegel, Professor of History, was awarded the grant for a reexamination of Johnson's Reconstruction policies in the light of new developments in social psychology and social reconstruction. The author of numerous books, bulletins, pamphlets, and articles for periodicals, Dr. Schlegel has degrees from Susquehanna University and Columbia, plus post-doctoral study at the University of Vienna, the Sorbonne, and several other European schools.

Dr. Sowder, Associate Professor of English, received a grant for a project entitled tentatively "Existentialism in the Works of William Faulkner." He has received degrees from Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the University of Virginia, and the University of Kentucky.

Driver Education Course Offered To LC Students

A new type of Driver Education program has been instituted at Longwood College in order for students to be certified to teach driving in the public schools in Virginia. Most majors in Physical and Health Education find that when they go out to teach they must teach some part of the Driver Education program in the schools. Generally they teach the classroom phase program in their health classes on the ninth grade level. The students then receive their behind-the-wheel training in either the tenth or eleventh grade.

Until recently the teacher training program called for a college course in Driver Education with instruction behind the wheel of an automobile. The latter part of the training could be fulfilled by having a State Trooper visit the campus once to give the students instruction in the car. Certification requirements have changed for Driver Education. Now it is necessary for each person wishing to qualify for certification to receive at least seven hours of behind-the-wheel experience in addition to a regular three semester hour credit course. A great many organizations and individuals have provided assistance to the College in order to make this program possible.

Chrysler Corporation and the Taylor-Peterson Motor Company of Farmville have provided us with a 1963 Dodge sedan for the year. This car has an automatic transmission. Another car will be in evidence soon, provided by the Newman Chevrolet Sales Corporation of Farmville. This car will have an automatic transmission. Both automobiles will be used by the members of the class to teach non-drivers how to drive. The Automobile Club of Virginia, A.A.A., has provided dual controls for both cars.

Who may learn to drive? Each student enrolled in the course has contacted other students on campus who do not know how to drive. These are the driving "students." Unfortunately it is not possible to give everyone a chance to participate in the program at the present time. Numerous requests have been received from members of the student body to be one of the "learners" in the program. Some of these requests may be answered first semester next year when the course will be taught again by a member of the faculty of the Physical and Health Education Department.

House Council Through Years

be purchased from the hall presidents for 5 cents in 1952. Of course they were only valid from 7:30 till "lights out." The same year (and for awhile afterward), all the phone booths were locked at 11:00 Monday through Friday. If I thought about going back to that rule, well — my goodness.

The 1957 Handbook divided House Council's section into six divisions: Dorm Regulations (for all dorms), Freshmen and Sophomore Dorms, Junior and Senior Dorms, Dining Room Regulations, Fire Regulations, and Laundry Regulations. So you see it was at this point that the last three dorms came under HC's handling.

Weep. We had to say "bye-bye" Busy Sign in '57. Goodness. In 1960 the phone rule was still around; however, there were some changes. They could not be used after 11:00 Sunday through Friday (11:30 for upperclassmen) or after midnight on Saturday except for incoming long-distance calls.

In 1959 House Council for the first time had a group picture in the yearbook. They looked awfully nice.

Remember Ann Howell, Wanda Barnett, Lynn Osteen, Ann Peters, Pam Bullen? Yes, they added their mark to the ranks of House Council, which has come a long way in a short time. Their job has expanded quite a bit — a job that sometimes is not very pleasant.

Looking to the future, I foresee great changes in an even shorter period of time for this organization. And these changes may bring HC up to the really deep respect it once enjoyed years ago.

Candidates: House Council

For the office of House Council President, there are four candidates — Judy Cundiff, Beverly Cutbrell, Anne King, and Jean White. Questions asked them were the following: What do you think can be done to promote a more cooperative attitude of the student body towards House Council? Do you feel the Case Procedure presently being developed by H. C. is important and why? Do you feel any H. C. rules should be changed or altered in any way?

Judy Cundiff

Judy Cundiff feels that the main reason students don't cooperate with H.C. is because they feel that the rules are too outdated; also because of the administration of the rules.

Judy feels that a case procedure is a good idea and important because she feels there should be a pattern of punishment.

The rules ought to be changed, Judy says, because she feels that with the growing of the school, there will be a transformation of H. C. for the future and that the standards of H. C. will be set higher.

She says this can only be brought about by respect and cooperation between the student body and H. C. for its future success.

Beverly Cutbrell

The main thing that is needed is more respect for the House Council by the student body — with cooperation included. This is Beverly Cutbrell's answer to the first question. She also believes the Case Procedure is very important, because it makes for organization and better understanding in and about H. C. Some House Council rules should be changed — those that presently don't fit the atmosphere of the school. Some are outdated, Beverly feels that with student cooperation, H. C. will be glad to make the necessary rule changes.

Anne King

Anne King also feels more respect is needed for H. C. and she hopes to get it through rule changes they are working on now. As to the second question, the Case Procedure, Anne feels it is very important. The student body feels that unless they have a trial they are not getting fair treatment. House Council could get respect if people realized they would be dealt with in a similar manner as Judicial Board. As to rule changes, Anne adds, that some have to be changed because of our growing school. They are hard to enforce. There is so much opposition we must revise them — this is being done, and we will have only one interpretation.

Jean White

The other candidate, Jean White, says a more cooperative attitude can be developed by rule changes, more respect for these rules, and more respect for House Council. She feels the case procedure is very important, for the protection of the student body. As to the third question, she states that it says in the handbook, that House Council should have control over dormitories, fire regulations, laundry, dining hall, and infirmary. I feel it should control the dormitories, fire and dining hall. The rest should be under college regulations. These are changing times, and they mean changing archaic rules.

Blue 'n Whites Romp Over Hollins 57-31, 65-5; Teams Split Victories With Lynchburg College

By "Dixie" Grant
and "Tootsie" Kay

With smooth plays, crack shooting, and solid defense, Longwood Blue 'n Whites grabbed a 57-31 win from Hollins College Tuesday, February 23 on the LC home court.

In the first quarter the LC team capitalized on Hollins' fumbling, and made numerous pass interceptions, but the scoring was yet to come. At the quarter it was 14-10 in favor of Longwood.

The game picked up steam in the second period as the home team began connecting for points. Hollins seemed reluctant to shoot very often and the quarter ended with a lopsided score of 35-15, with Hollins behind.

Rebounding ranked high on Longwood's list in the third stanza as they got off their feet to grab the numerous scoring attempts by the opposition. There was shooting from the outside on the home team's part but the Hollins girls managed to pick up only 2 points in the entire quarter as it ended 50-17, the widest gap of the game.

Going into the fourth period 33 points behind did not keep the team from Roanoke from putting on the pressure. It was a points. Hollins seemed reluctant to shoot very often and the quarter ended with a lopsided score of 35-15, with Hollins behind.

The visiting team got a burst of energy and managed to keep the ball on their end of the court for the better part of the last period. They began to connect with the basket and really concentrated on the game.

Time ran out and the buzzer sounded with the score 57-31 for Longwood.

Members of the LC Blue 'n with some really good plays. The quarter ended 17-0, LC.

Good Plays
In the next period Pat Brown handed a pass to Kathy Still who drove in for a beautiful lay up. The Hollins team left a gap and Nevils Born went in for 2 dricks, Lyle Parker, Sue Powell, and Kathy Still.

Lynchburg

The Blue and Whites of Longwood traveled to the Hill City on Friday, February 26, to play the Lynchburg College team on their home court.

Perhaps the toughest opposition; however, the home team had control of the ball — and the game — for the entire quarter.

The second team consists of Nevils Born, Pat Brown, Diane Davis, Vannie Gunter, Jean Hen-period; however, the home team had control of the ball — and the game — for the entire quarter.

Smooth Play

With their usual smooth plays, the Blue and Whites played a close game, but came out on top by defeating the Hill City team.

This weekend, on Saturday, March 6 (10:00 p.m. in the Old Gym) Longwood faces Westhampton for the final game of the season. Up to this point the first team has a 3-2 record and the second team a 5-0 slate.

BSCS Meeting Includes Talks, Idea Exchanges

The Biological Sciences Curriculum Study is aimed at improving biology education in the secondary schools. A BSCS Area meeting will be held on March 6 in Newcomb Hall at the University of Virginia. The program will be centered around inservice programs now being given within the state for the training of SCS teachers. This meeting will also include open discussion for idea exchanges and laboratory activities. After lunch a panel discussion will be held at which time the important area of teacher preparation will be the topic.

Reservations for a planned laboratory activity were to be made by March 1. The laboratory exercises will utilize a limited number of work groups of twenty to twenty-five persons each. Modified research techniques as applied in such manipulations as the handling of young embryos will be the keynote, and experienced instructors will be in charge of each work group.

This BSCS Area meeting is being held for the benefit of faculty members and students who may be directly concerned with the preparation of science teachers.

Don't forget to support th-round-robin tournaments be-ing played this week.

Monogram Club Selects Members

The Monogram Club has recently been re-established after a lapse of one year, and new officers have been selected, temporarily.

Lurline Lang is president of the club and Nevils Born is the secretary-treasurer. Acting sponsor for the Monogram Club is Miss Olive Iler.

Members are selected from those girls who have earned a seal for participation in campus athletics and who have exhibited sportsmanlike conduct. Prospective candidates for membership must also have a cumulative grade average of 2.2 (on the 4.0 system).

The Monogram Club will be in charge of the faculty volleyball game this year, and the club also has been given the responsibility of securing officials for all class games.

Newman Club Chooses Leaders

The Newman Club held annual elections on February 22. The newly elected officers are Judy Hedrick, president; Suzanne Meek, vice-president; Kathy Castagna, secretary; Betty Stuart Haley, treasurer; and Eva Tinsman, publicity chairman.

Judy is a sophomore English major from Roanoke. She has served the Newman Club as treasurer, and is a member of the Longwood Players. Suzanne, a freshman, comes from Highland Springs and is an elementary education major. She is a member of Phi Beta Lambda and an ex-officio member of the YWCA.

Kathy Castagna, also a freshman, is from Reesburg. She is majoring in business education and is a member of Phi Beta Lambda. Betty Stuart, from Danville, is in pre-nursing and is a member of Alpha Sigma Tau sorority. From Winchester, Eva is an elementary education major. She is working on freshman production. Both Betty and Eva are freshmen.

Whites' first team are: Lynn Baker, Carolyn Burnett, Liz Cobb, Connie Gallahan, Lurline Robertson, Frances Stewart, and Sharon Williams.

The second game of the evening was a complete routing on Longwood's part. They managed to hold Hollins to 5 points for the entire game while they hit for 65.

Sue Powell got the jump at center as the whistle blew and Diane Davis concurred for the first 2 points of the game.

The Longwood Ladies worked well as a team feeding the ball to one another and coming up the second part of the game. Vannie Gunter went on a scoring spree which eventually netted the team 20 more points.

During the third quarter Hollins managed one more point. Vannie sank a beautiful hook shot on her second basket and the defense shined again as the quarter ended 45-2.

The only mistake of the game was the lack of substitutions on Longwood's part when they were ahead by 43 points in the final quarter.

Victory

Hollins picked up its remaining three points in the last

Candidates: Athletic Association

The Athletic Association president, Sarah Jane Lynch, made up three questions to ask the two candidates — Bobbie Allen and Barbara Ragland. They are: What are the goals you wish to obtain as president? What are your views on the size of the council in relation to the needs of the student body? How could you and your council improve in athletics?

haps, she states, if basketball were scheduled at another time, it would be better.

Bobbie Allen

Bobbie Allen stated her main goal as getting people to come and participate in some activity. She feels students on campus, unless enrolled in a P.E. course, do not get enough exercise. Other objectives she defines as being: more publicized sports for the average person, more bicycles, more conveniently located ping pong equipment, and more golf clubs. As for the size of the Council, Bobbie feels it is appropriate, or could even be smaller. Concerning Intramural improvement, she believes it was much better this year, especially volleyball, because it incorporated more people. She feels big improvements should be made in basketball and archery. Per-

Barbara Ragland

The other candidate, Barbara Ragland, has four main goals to obtain as president. They are: (1) to broaden the program to reach more students in Intramural and recreational activities; (2) to keep people more informed of the activities of A.A.; (3) to set up a criteria for membership on the A.A. Council; and (4) to emphasize good use of leisure-time. She doesn't feel too large a council necessary, just the amount of people necessary to do the work. Barbara believes this year's Intramural program to be a great improvement over last year, especially the Round Robin tournaments. Again, if more people can be interested, more would participate.

These are the candidates and their views for the five major offices on campus. Election Day is coming up, and these opinions are important to the student body so proper selections can be made. These are the issues, and the answers.

WATER PAGEANT

H2O Club members and Corquettes perform in annual water show. Theme for this year was "Manhattan in Motion."

Robertson Participates In All Phases Of Sports

Lurline Robertson is a very sportswoman person and also a very versatile member of our student body. She has been active in all phases of sports competition and especially in basketball. Hockey is also one of her favorites, and she has played on the Varsity basketball and hockey teams for four years.

Class Teams

In other sports activity she has been a member of the archery squad and the rifle squad teams. She has also participated in class teams and served on the A.A. Council.

Actually Lurline has had a pretty active time at Longwood for the past three years as seen by the list of sports she has played. She received a white blazer this fall as another well-earned reward for her sports contributions.

Last year Lurline was the editor of our yearbook The Virginian. Also she was tapped into the Pi Delta Epsilon, the honorary journalism fraternity. She is a member of Kappa Delta Pi, the honorary education fraternity, and also was selected for membership in Who's Who this year. She is a health and physical education major from Danville, Virginia.

Lurline did her student teaching in Danville during the second block. It seems that many of her students remembered her when she left because her mail-time blues which have been completely cured since she has been back. Also, some of her return she has turned into quite an artist with a rare talent for the "stipple technique."

Hats off to this busy senior, Lurline Robertson!

Gresham Invited To Institute On Composition

Mr. Peter H. Gresham, associate professor of English at Longwood College, has been invited to participate in the Spring Institute on Composition in Norfolk, March 21-27. This is one of two national institutes sponsored this spring by the National Council of Teachers of English.

Mr. Gresham will serve as consultant to discussion groups taking up the following topics: How can grammar, rhetoric, and logic be arranged cumulatively according to pupils' maturity levels, and what are the guides to defining expected attainment levels at the end of elementary, junior, and senior high school?

The institute is planned especially for teachers of writing and composition in elementary and secondary schools, for supervisors and administrators who direct their work, and for college representatives interested in school-college articulation or in the preparation of teachers.

Farmville Club Sponsors Chorus

On Sunday, March 7, at 1966, the Farmville Rotary Club will sponsor the workmen's Chorus, Chorus and Dancers. The performance will take place at Jarman Hall and the admission will be $2.00.

"The chorus has traveled on a total of one hundred seven ocean liners and visited sixty-five different countries. The Eiffel Tower, Parliament Buildings in London, Pyramids of Egypt, tea plantations of Ceylon, wild beaches of South Africa, elephants of India, rice paddies of Indo-China, earthquakes of Chile, skyscrapers of New York, the holy places of Jerusalem, banyans of Singapore and Java, city streets of towns of Holland, the Tunnel of St. Gothard in Switzerland, the minerals of Turkey, the caves of Madeira, the Thrills of the Hawaiian Islands, at revolution in Brazil — are all common sights to these nomadic singers."

Longwood students and faculty are cordially invited to hear their thrilling songs and spectacular dancing.

Suitable Dress For H-S

Editor's Note: This article is reprinted from the Feb. 19 issue of the Hampden-Sydney Tiser.

by Mike Reid

Recently there has been much discussion concerning the type of dress that Hampden-Sydney students are now wearing. Although there has not been a great change from previous years, more emphasis is being placed on the wearing of ties to class. Some are in favor of this relatively new trend and want it to become the school policy, while others are violently opposed to it. In order that the various feelings be brought to the surface, a poll has been taken in hopes that a general opinion can be ascertained.

In general, the feelings of the interviewed freshmen were somewhat different from those of the upperclassmen. After taking a poll of approximately one-fifth of the freshmen class, it was found that those who advocated the wearing of ties to class slightly outnumbered those who did not. Most of the freshmen are favoring more formal classroom dress expressed these same basic themes: 1 — "It would be a fine idea and a great factor in achieving more pride and spirit in Hampden-Sydney, something that seems to be sadly lacking on our campus." 2 — "Washington and Lee and the University of Virginia wear ties, and while we are equal academically, they do look better. Because of this they seem to gain a higher stature." 3 — "Even if this wearing of ties is not made mandatory, something should be done about the present 'country-bumpkin' mode of dress that some of our fellow students insist upon wearing."

Most freshmen opposed to this formal type of dress supported their side mainly by saying it was a "pain in the neck." Some felt that to wear a tie to class was just a way of "apple-polishing" the professor.

The upperclassmen were as a whole not in favor of changing the accepted mode of dress at Hampden-Sydney. The usual reasons given for wearing ties to class were: 1 — "Wearing a tie is more suitable dress at an institution of higher learning." 2 — "It is conducive to study."

3 — "It lends itself to a more mature atmosphere."

Many more upperclassmen were opposed to wearing ties. There were many arguments supporting this side: 1 — "It would be too expensive." 2 — "If imposed on the student body, it would mean just another 'prepschool' regulation at Hampden-Sydney." 3 — "There is no need to impress anyone out here in the country. If we were in a more urban area it would be conceivable but not here." 4 — "It would degenerate to sloppiness in ties, horrible open collars, and poor combinations." 5 — "It is a bother and very uncomfortable." As a rebuttal to the freshmen's argument for wearing ties because Washington and Lee and the University of Virginia do, one senior said: "The students at both Washington and Lee and University of Virginia are fooling themselves when they dress like children and at times act like children." Also, the emphasis on dressmen to suit the current styles gets out of hand. It is expensive and as someone said: "It is impressive to dress formally, but that doesn't make the man."

The reason for the conflict between the freshmen and upperclassmen has been explained by several upperclassmen. It must be said that freshmen are somewhat idealistic about college life. They feel that they are jumping from childhood to manhood overnight and that they must immediately assume the posture of a mature, responsible gentleman. Along with this idealistic attitude, many freshmen feel that they should dress appropriately. Soon, however, most become upperclassmen and idealism withers.

Zeta Average Leads Sororities For Semester

The sorority averages for the fall semester of the 1964-1965 semester have been announced. They are as follows: Zeta Tau Alpha . . . 2.93; Alpha Gamma Delta . . . 2.92; Kappa Delta . . . 2.91; Alpha Sigma Alpha . . . 2.89; Sigma Kappa . . . 2.76; Phi Mu . . . 2.75; Alpha Sigma Tau . . . 2.70; Delta Zeta . . . 2.61; and Sigma Sigma Sigma . . . 2.47. In the spring, these averages and those of the spring semester will be averaged together for the year's average. The averages are based on the 4.0 system. Sorority girls are required to have a cumulative average of at least 2.2 before they are allowed to be initiated.

Reed Barton Contest Offers Silver Chance

During the months of February and March, Reed & Barton, America's oldest major silversmiths, are conducting a "Silver Opinion Competition" in which valuable scholarships to totaling $2050 are being offered to duly enrolled women students at a few selected colleges and universities.

In the 1964 Competition Miss Sandra Sue Melvor and Miss Missy Bryhill, Class of 1967, were two of the major prize winners of a starter set in sterling silver, china and crystal for their entry form matching Reed & Barton sterling patterns with leading china and crystal patterns.

Miss Stephenson at 110 Wheeler for complete details concerning the competition rules. She also has samples of 12 of the most popular Reed & Barton designs so that entrants can see how these sterling patterns actually look.

Each of you has received an entry form in your mail box. Please fill it out immediately and turn it in to your hall president.

Through the opinions on silver design expressed by college women competing for these scholarships, Reed & Barton hopes to compile a valuable library of expressions of American taste.

AKG Announces Plans For Revision Of Circus

For the last few years the Longwood student body has been increasing in size. Therefore it has become necessary to adapt the old traditions to the new situations.

One of the old traditions at Longwood is Circus. It was designed to stimulate class spirit and cooperation; plus to be a pleasant experience for all participants. With the stress on academics, the rise of other extracurricular activities, and the desire of a large part of the student body to leave for the weekends, Circus has become more of a burden on its participants rather than a pleasurable experience.

In hopes of correcting some of the present weaknesses of Circus, Alpha Kappa Gamma has established the following changes for Circus-1965:

1. Sister class skits. Instead of four separate skits there will be two skits, 20-25 minutes each. Each class will elect one chairman and the respective sister class chairmen will work together with committees composed of members from both classes. Therefore, there will be one winning skit and the prize money will be split between the two classes.
2. Circus Court. Each class will have a representative on the court. At a designated practice at which both sister classes will be present, each student will write down the name of a member of her class and a member of her sister class whom she feels deserves to be on the Court. The Senior who is elected automatically becomes the Circus Queen as is the case now.

3. Booths. Each class and any organization will have a booth. The class booth will be judged and a prize awarded to the winning class.

4. Abolish the animals. For the last two years the animal routine has become "childish" and outdated. The routine tends to be monotonous and therefore weakens Circus as a whole.

AKG will still recognize a Sophomore for her service to the school, but she will be the Head Usherette and in charge of the Midway. The role of head usherette is not designed just to give a Sophomore something to do, but it will be a new job with new responsibilities.

The usherettes are chosen by AKG as recognition for their work and service to the school. With the addition of a head usherette, the usherettes' routine will be modified and lengthened.

As mentioned before the head usherette will be in charge of the midway. In general she will be a barker and announce what the different classes and organizations are selling. It will also be her honor to announce the winner of the class booths.

5. Two performances. In order to alleviate the seating problem in Jarman, Circus will be presented two nights - Friday and Saturday. Friday night will not be a dress rehearsal and it is hoped that many parents, students and faculty will attend the Friday night performance. There will not be a midway Friday night mainly because the booths would have to be redecorated for Saturday night. The skits and booths will be judged Saturday night.

Alpha Kappa Gamma believes that these changes in Circus will work if you, the students, will support them. It will be a challenge to every member of the student body and if every student meets the challenge there will be a lot gained by each individual.

There will be an informal question-answer period about these changes Thursday, March 11, 1965, at 6:45 p.m. in the Freshman Hall. At this time AKG members will be present to answer your questions.

Adams Presents Piano Recital In Jarman

Dr. Sterling C. Adams will present his annual piano recital on Thursday, March 11, at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Associate professor of Music at Longwood College, Dr. Adams is giving the only faculty piano recital scheduled this year.

Immediately following the recital, Sigma Alpha Iota, honorary music fraternity at Longwood, will honor Dr. Adams with a reception to which everyone attending the recital is cordially invited.

Opening the recital with four sonatas by Domenico Scarlatti, Dr. Adams will then present Ludwig van Beethoven's Sonata No. 31 in F Minor, Opus 57. Following intermission, the second half of the recital will feature one selection each from the works of Frederic Chopin, Johannes Brahms, and Claude Debussy.

A member of the Longwood music faculty since 1959, Dr. Adams received his bachelor's and master's degrees from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, where he studied from 1946 to 1951. His doctoral degree was received last June from Indiana University. He is a member of Phi Kappa Lambda music fraternity.

the Legislative Board. Theresa Albright is presently serving as the Junior representative of the Activities Committee, chairman of the Elections committee, and president of the Newman Club. Janet Gormus is treasurer of the Legislative Board, and vice-president of her sorority. Last year she was elected Dorm President and has served as an orientation leader.

Candidates for secretary of Legislative Board are Sophomores Nancy Brown and Kerry Young. Nancy Brown was freshman representative to the Legislative Board. She was secretary-treasurer of her sorority's pledge class and is secretary of the Nathaniel Macon Society. Kerry Young is serving as her hall president. She is an active member of the Wesley Foundation working on the Freshman Council and Drama Committee. She served as vice-president of her sorority pledge class.

Three students are candidates for Treasurer of Legislative Board. These are Susan Goodes, Ann Toombs, and Kay Moore. Susan Goodes was freshman representative to Legislative Board, a member of Freshman Commission, and Circus Booth chairman. This year she is Freshman Counselor and was

Mack The Knife Licens Jarman For Spring Play

Oh, the shark has pretty teeth, dear . . . These familiar lyrics will once again be heard around the campus as the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jangleurs begin work on their spring production, Berold Brecht's "Three Penny Opera." This presentation will be a unique experience for the college and the community of Farmville because it will be the first musical that the college has produced in Jarman. The actors, therefore, will be demonstrating their dramatic and musical abilities.

The cast and crew of "Three Penny Opera" have been drawn from the students of Longwood and Hampden-Sydney, and will also have the services of members of the Longwood faculty. Dr. Paul Lockwood will direct the production with the assistance of Mr. Ivan Olson, who will be in charge of the musical portion of the show.

Dr. Lockwood and Mr. Olson will be assisted by Marcia Steinfeld and Martha Spitzer. The technical director will be June Wilson. The crew chiefs under the technical director are as follows: stage manager, Pat Wall; set; lights, Anita Osbourne; costumes, Shirley Gunn; properties, Judy Hedrick; sound, Rusty Stevenson, and director of public relations, Nancy Wells.

Taylor Speaks On South For Institute Lecture

The fourth in a series of lectures for Longwood College's Institute of Southern Culture will feature Dr. Joe Gray Taylor on Friday, March 12, at 4 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

Dr. Taylor, Professor of History at McNeese State College, will lecture on the topic, "Family Loyalties in the South." Dr. Taylor is an authority on Louisiana history, and he has written a book entitled Negro Slavery in Louisiana. Most of his other publications relate to his association with the Institute.

The Institute of Southern Culture was established at Longwood College in 1956 to promote the study of traditional aspects of Southern civilization through academic course work, special lectures, and through the publication of research in the field. The Institute is currently sponsoring a series of lectures by visiting scholars and members of the Longwood faculty. Course work on both undergraduate and graduate levels also provides a means of exchange of ideas about various aspects of Southern regionalism.

DR. JOE GRAY TAYLOR

From 1953 through 1957 he served as an Air Force historian at the Air University, Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama.

Dr. Taylor is the author of five monographs dealing with Air Force history, including "Close Air Support in the War Against Japan" and "Air Support in the Burma Campaigns." The government subsidized his publishing of a book for college use entitled Freedom Versus Tyranny.

Highly-Tighties Present Concert

By Marcia Catoe

Sigma Alpha Iota will present in Jarman Auditorium, March 12 at 7:30 p.m., the Concert Band of Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Under the direction of J. Devereaux, the "Highly-Tighties" will play symphonic and show tunes. Also included in the program will be some march music. Some of the selections to be presented will be Henry Mancini's "Pink Panther," Meredith Wilson's "Music Man," and Anton Dvorak's "Finnale from the New World Symphony."

This promises to be a very lively concert, and there will be no admission charge to Longwood students. School attire may be worn. Cokes will be sold during intermission by Sigma Alpha Iota. Members of Sigma Alpha Iota will also have the members of the concert band as dinner guests in the dining hall following the concert. There will be a private party which may be attended by any.

Walker's Interests Seen In Many Lights

The spotlight is on Jackie Walker for this issue and it has found Jackie all over the campus doing all sorts of interesting things.

The green and white spotlight finds her playing on several of her class teams, the hockey team, in particular. She has been working with Circus for four years, both on and off stage.

A purple light finds Jackie in her letorads dancing in the new gym. She has been a member of Orchestras for four years, last year holding the office of secretary. This year she is President of Orchestras, and spoke at a recent assembly. Jackie finds much pleasure in her work with dancing; she is "out on a limb," so to speak.

A red and black light finds Jackie in Jarman as a member of the Longwood Players. She was in charge of the scenery crew for "Blithe Spirit" and has also held other crew positions backstage on past performances.

A maroon light finds Jackie as a member of Sigma Kappa sorority. Jackie has continental tastes when it comes to men—it seems she has one in every port. If you ask her two days in a row who she is dating, don't expect to get the same answer. Jackie spends her summer elected Circus co-chairman. "Tombles" Kay has served as hall president and Dorm President. This year she is co-chairman of scenery for May Day. Kay Moore, who is secretary of the Spanish Club and a member of the A.A. Council, was manager of class hockey and a sophomore assistant.

Juniors Mary Lea Shoulters and Frances Stewart are candidates for vice-chairman of Judicial Board. Mary Lea Shoulters, a recently tapped member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, is secretary of Judicial Board. She was a Circus co-chairman her sophomore year and on Freshman Commission. She is treasurer of her sorority. Frances Stewart is presently Junior representative to Legislative Board, ex-officio member of the Publications Board, and on the Assembly Committee. She served as Sophomore Representative to Judicial Board. An active member of the A.A. Council, she is manager and co-captain of the basketball team. She is first vice-president of her sorority.

Karen Walton and Rebecca White have been submitted to fill the secretarial position of Judicial Board. Karen Walton is Secretary of the Sophomore Class and her sorority pledge class and an active participant of class and campus activities. Becky White, who is Sophomore Representative to Judicial Board, is a member of the A.A. Council and class tennis manager. She was named first vice president and is now first vice president. Anne King is a dorm president and treasurer of her months working on the playground near her home in Newport News. She also frequents Virginia Beach in the summer and the Florida beaches during spring breaks.

Miss Walker did her student teaching in physical education at George Wythe High School in Richmond. Let's drink a toast to Jackie Walker, the Sports Spotlight of the Week!

Round Robin Volleyball

The Student Building Gym has been busy this past week with the various teams knocking volleyballs all over the courts.

Monday night, the Court beat Sigma Kappas and the 006's lost to the C's. The Anchors pulled a victory over the B's. Tuesday night the action was on again with Second Floor Tabbs pulling away from the O's. The Group and the Spastics winning over the 006's.

Once again on Wednesday night, the volleyballs were being hit back and forth across the net. And under the net! The Group had another victory as did the Sigma Kappas. The Jolly Volleys and the Penguins were the losers on this particular evening.

Thursday night, Sigma Kappa won over second floor Tabbs and Jenny and the Majors outscored the 006's. The Group pulled another victory out of the net with a win over the Anchors.

Several teams have an unbeaten record and it remains to be seen just how long they will stay in the winners column. The Sigma Kappas, the C's and The Group are all unbeaten.

If you get a chance to attend one of the games this week, you are sure to enjoy yourself. The excitement runs high and everyone involved seems to have an exciting time.

sorority. She has been a member of the Y Cabinet since her freshman year and has served as hall president. She is an active participant of class activities. Jean White is secretary of House Council, a past dorm president and hall president. She is a chair member and Y Cabinet member.

Candidates for Secretary of House Council are Sandy Byrum, Pat Perego, and Anne Quaff. Sandy Byrum, dorm president, participates in many class activities. Pat Perego has served as hall president and assistant hall president. She was selected soph Circle Representative and was president of her sorority pledge class. Anne Quaff is a hall president and a member of Panhellenic Council. She helped write the Circus script and the sophomore's song for the song contest.

Joan Crenshaw, Beth Ottwell and Nancy Spain are candidates for treasurer of House Council. Joan Crenshaw has served as a hall president and is sophomore representative to the Activities Committee. Beth Ottwell is treasurer of her sorority and a member of the Virginia staff. Nancy Spain, a member of the Executive Council of House Council, is an assistant dorm president. A participant in class sports, she is the sophomore representative to the A.A. Council.

Olivia Gibson, Louise Mann and Jenny Turner are candidates for vice-president of the YWCA. Olivia Gibson served on the Virginia staff for two years and is presently co-program chairman. She is treasurer of the Junior class and vice-chairman of the Activities Committee. Olivia is an active member of the Wesley Foundation and many campus organizations. Louise Mann, a past member of Freshman Commission, is co-chairman of the Student Spiritual Life Series and assistant head of Religious Emphasis Week. She is co-chairman of "Y." Jenny Turner is presently chairperson of public affairs in the Y Cabinet and was chairman of the Christmas Pageant.

Around The Campi

What's this about hearing the sound of a super-sonic faghorn echoing through the halls of Wheeler and in front of the Rotunda?

File a petition, anyone?

And then there are those who think the drinking rule could be stricter!!

What's this about a telephone in every room—providing you live in the "right" dorm?

Upon eavesdropping on a junior, "Oh no! I've been asked to Danville first block!!"

Also, "What do you mean, you won't change my student-teaching assignment?"

About the junior in Astronomy class who saw a star; and when asked, "Where?", replied, "On my way back from dinner."

Lecturers and Lettermen should adopt the old saying, "Better late than never."

Beware of "naturals!"

Those V-8 engines ought to be really humming by now.

In answer to last week's mention of the infirmity comes this report, "Sometimes it is HARD to tell when a student is sick. We do have a few who 'goldbrick'!"

About the smashing volleyball record of the 006's and the Penguins!

Words for the week: Adventure and raucous.

There certainly seems to be a prevalence of Kennedy half dollars around lately.

Are red ants really Communist infiltrators?

lation only. Those who wish to attend this party for the Highty-Tighties may apply to a Sigma Alpha Iota member for a ticket. The Highty-Tighties consist of approximately seventy-five boys who attend VPI. As there is no music department at Tech, the members of Band Company and the Concert Band are all volunteers. It is of interest to note the source from which this unique band derived the name "Highty-Tighties." Shortly after World War I the Concert Band of VPI was marching in a parade in Richmond. The drum major chanced to drop his baton. Someone in the crowd shouted, "Highty - Tightie" at him, which then was a colloquialism for "Stuck-up." The name "stuck."

Twice the Concert Band of VPI has taken first place in the Annual Parade. The band marched again last year, but there was no contest. Nevertheless, they have received honors which speak highly of their skill and talent. Those who remember Highty-Tightie concerts from previous years remember the water pagent and participated in color rush. Connie Spradlin is also a member of the A.A. Council. She plays varsity hockey, is class basketball co-manager and participates in class basketball, tennis and volleyball. She is also a hall president.

Diane Davis and Pat Lyddane are candidates for Treasurer of the A.A. Diane Davis, a member of the A.A. Council, is varsity hockey manager and on the varsity basketball and archery teams. Pat Lyddane is on the varsity hockey team; she is class archery manager and plays class archery, basketball, tennis, and volleyball. She is also a member of the A.A. Council.

Westhampton Splits Wins With Longwood LC Ends Season

Longwood's Blue 'n White team played its last game of the season Friday, March 5, in the Old Gym. Westhampton took an 11 point win from LC in the first game, but the Blue and White gang routed the Richmond team 67-21 in the second game.

Fast Game
In the first quarter Westhampton went ahead by 8 points as they stole a number of passes from the home team. The game went fast as Longwood tried to pull ahead. Vannie Guter, playing Westhampton's lead by a few notches by the end of the half—score: 21-16.

As the next quarter opened, the LC defense started to click, but they were still missing a good percentage of the shots. The home team was not getting rebounds as they usually do; however, Frances Stewart did an outstanding job of defense.

Big Effort
Going into the final quarter 4 points behind, Longwood again tried to muster enough points to pull ahead. Vannie Guter, playing in this first game, proved a real threat to Westhampton on both offense and defense.

The visitors played a beautiful game, hitting on quite a few outside shots. The game ended with Longwood bowing 47-36.

Second Game
The second game proved a different story as Longwood's powerful second team stomped Westhampton by 46 points to emerge with a perfect 6-0 slate for the season.

Completely outplaying and outshooting the visitors, LC's lead was never in doubt. Although the home team's passing proved sloppy at times, they were scoring and pulling down most of the rebounds.

Pat Brown and "Gung" Manson had a free-for-all scoring spree as they popped baskets in, right and left.

The final buzzer sounded with the score 67-21.
Longwood's first team ended with a record of 3-3, the second team with a 6-0 slate. This was also the last game for Miss B' and Miss Lier as varsity basketball coaches.

Rockefeller Gift

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller has presented to Longwood College a gift of Beethoven recordings, done by Arthur Schnabel. There are 32 of his sonatas in the set.

Contact for the presentation was made by Mrs. Rockefeller through correspondence with Dr. Lankford, John W. Molnar, head of the Music Department, said the gift is a very fine one, and that he is very pleased to receive it.

Art News

"Watercolors by Members of the California Watercolor Society" is currently on exhibit in the Art Corridor of the West Wing. They will be here during the month of March.

The pictures are from the California Watercolor Society, which now has 300 members. It was founded 36 years ago, and presently sponsors competitions and exhibitions. The exhibit was circulated here by the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts.

Of particular interest is "Women of Maxilian," by Millard Sheets, a Californian with certain fame. Another is "Out of Doors," by Dorothy Broadway Kushner. It has many brilliant and varied colors. An unusual treatment is also shown — "Woman," by Carol Tolin.

Field Trip

Art Students in Graphics and Art 122 will make a field trip to the Virginia Museum on March 16. There they will view prints from the Rosenwald Collection, entitled, "Master Prints from the Rosenwald Collection."

Leslie Rosenwald has a collection of over 20,000 prints, and has selected 145 for the show. Included in the display are prints by Dürer, Rembrandt, Hogarth, Blake and Goya.

Snack Bar Changes Announced By Slater

Since the change in management the Snack Bar in the main Rec has made several alterations in operations and prices. The Snack Bar was formerly operated by the Alumnae Association, and has been taken over by the Slater System.

New machines have been added both to the Main Rec and to the Rec. in South Cunningham. In addition to the Coca-Cola, there are now Pepsi and Diet Pepsi machines. The Recs. now equipped with the necessary toppings, are selling sundaes and parfaits, not sold before. Milk shakes are now made thicker with an additional scoop of ice cream.

Several changes have been made in the prices of the sandwiches. Egg salad, formerly 30c, is now 20c; tuna fish, formerly 35c, now 30c; chicken salad, formerly 35c, now 30c; BLT's, formerly 40c, now 35c; lettuce and tomato, formerly 25c, now 20c. A reduction has also been made in the price of ice cream, from 7c and 13c cones to 6c and 12c cones. The cost of the paper cup, formerly included in the price of soft drinks, has been eliminated.

Specials are now run in which you may buy for the original price of the sandwich the sandwich with potato chips or with a salad, and pickle. All salad sandwiches are now made fresh, with no salad house left over a period of thirty hours.

No changes have been made in the hours of the Recs, but the Slater System has said that they will endeavor to open on time, and will always be open on the times specified. They have also said that they are open for criticisms and suggestions, and will try to make all desired changes which are economically feasible.

Secret Groups History Interestingly Unusual

realized a big change in Mu Omega. Remember what I said before? I mean about it developing into something quite different than what it originally started out to be. To go on, I believe it finally became an honorary organization of some sort. It was quite a drastic change, heavens.

The 14-member ZT's came around the year 1921. Nell McArdle and Madeline Fitzgerald were some of the outstanding members if I remember correctly. Also in '21 there was a group under the title Quo Vadis Ignoramus. Need I say more?

About this time, too, the OWLS, W.A.N.K. and D.I.R.K. all increased their membership while many of the other groups were going out.

"Awful Anne", "Pokey Pookery" and "Mouthy Meade" were members of C.A.L.S., begun in 1925. It wasn't a very long-lasting group, but from the names I think you can see they were lots of fun if nothing else.

Well, heavens, in 1936 CHI returned - at least as far as the yearbook was concerned. All the members' backs were turned except one and her name was the only listed. They still did not use the robes in the picture. The next year five members' faces were shown.

In 1931 the first picture of CHI with robes appeared, except only the six junior members had them on. It wasn't until 1935 that all the members had on the robes in the picture.

By this point in history most all the original secret groups had disappeared.

In 1939 the CHI members added the big red X to the robe and under the picture in the yearbook was: "Composed of girls who are considered influential leaders in various circles, CHI is an organization having a newly adopted plan of working in coordination with the Honor System; trying to prevent breach of rules; and, through individuals, working to obtain and preserve high standards of the college."

And in the '40 Virginian this appeared: "People wondered perhaps just where these clandestine meetings were held... did they ever stop to consider the clock tower of the library, or the roof of the swimming pool? We often marveled at the lack of imagination of some persons."

A yearly event was the hanging of a CHI sign in Shannon's on Founder's Day. I suppose you don't remember Shannon's. It was ever such a nice place. We had such beastly good times.

Something a little different appeared in 1945. The CHI members were dressed in their senior robes instead of the usual white ones. Himmumum. And in '46 too. The next year they were back to the usual.

On to 1950 I remember seeing this somewhere: "... take one skull, two crossbones, eight white-robed individuals, add a dash of excitement, and brew well to the tune of 'Chae'."

By 1956 the CHI picture in the yearbook had progressed to the type which has been seen in the past several years. The cut line in the 1961 book read simply: "The spirit of Longwood walks with CHI."

Oh I must tell you of the group called SWORD, started in 1942. It is a secret disorganization on the campus and the leader of the group is called the Head Tyrant. This is ever such a nice group of individuals don't you know.

As you can see, all the secret organizations which were such the rage way back in our school's history passed away. All except CHI. I suppose that means the spirit of Longwood is still walking, and hasn't passed away. True?

NEW MISS LONGWOOD

Linda Pritchard Wins Miss Longwood Title

By Kay Young

Miss Linda Rae Pritchard of Virginia Beach was crowned Miss Longwood 1965 in Jarman Auditorium on Saturday night. She was crowned by Honey Johnson, Miss Longwood 1964. Linda was sponsored by the Concert Choir of which she is a member. A sophomore music major, she sang her way to the hearts of the judges and won the title.

Linda will go to the Miss Virginia Pageant in Roanoke July 6-10 as Longwood's official representative. She was awarded $100 travel expenses for this occasion. Also, Linda received a General Electric travel train, an American Tourist overnight bag, a $5 gift certificate and a $3.50 gift certificate, an artificial flower arrangement, and a decorated cake; the Slater Food System presented her with a silver Revere bowl.

Runners-Up

First runner-up and elected "Miss Congeniality" by the other contestants was Miss Gail Adams Derivation from Richmond, Ga., sponsored by the Sophomore class, danced as her talent.

Miss Jeri Carylie Rawles of Chesapeake was second runner-up. Jeri is a senior and was sponsored by Sigma Sigma Sigma social sorority.

Miss Carolyn Mae Gates, an organ playing freshman from Rice, was third runner-up, and Miss Jennifer Beesa Camper of Virginia Beach was fourth runner-up. Jennifer had a dance and baton twirling act.

The other contestants included: Misses Swanna Kaye Catron of Pulaski, Myrtle Diane Cross of Portsmouth, Carol Lynn Dedischew of Waynesboro, Barbara Joan Hall of Salisbury, Maryland, Linda Lee Hunsicker of Richmond, Pamela Ann Kerber of Virginia Beach, Martha Frances Muir of Newport News, Mary Karen Ruder of Washington, D. C., Judith Linda Tate of Richmond, Sarah Ann Wohlford of Roanoke, and Nancy Lee Young of Richmond.

The judges arrived on campus and began interviews with the contestants at ten o'clock Saturday morning. The judges included: Jim Geary of Gentry Studios in Salem. He is vice-president of the Virginia Photographers Association and has judged several pageants in the past. Harvey Hudson is manager and vice-president of WLEE in Richmond. He has acted as both judge and emcee of pageants of this kind. Arlet Levin of WLSL-TV Roanoke, is seen statewide as "Mr. Physical Fitness." He has judged many pageants in relation to the Miss Virginia pageant. Betty Jo Patel from Roanoke is the producer-director of the Miss Virginia Pageant and is the associate producer of the Miss America Pageant. Bernice Ward is hostess of the War Memorial in Vinton. ## Publications Board Selects New Editors; Choses Catron, Weatherly, Hanken, Melton

By Marcia Catron

Recently the Publications Board, with the approval of the Legislative Board, elected editors for the three college publications:

Kaye Catron and Donna Weatherly will share the responsibilities of the co-editorship of the Colonade, the college literary magazine. Kaye is a junior from Pulaski who will receive her B. S. in English and Speech. She was the Short Story Editor of the Colonade last year. Kaye is a member of Orchestis, Beorc Eh Thorn, Kappa Delta Pi, and the Longwood Players. She has served as Assembly Committee Chairman, Circus co-chairman, Trainee Conference with her new staff in Richmond on the 15th of May. The next Virginia should be somewhat different since a different technique may be used in layout and printing. Barbara Melton, a junior English major from Norfolk, has been elected to serve as editor-in-chief of The Rounda. Although she had never worked on a newspaper before, she served as a reporter during her sophomore year. At the end of the year, she was awarded a certificate for being outstanding overclassman staff member of the year.

This past year Barbara worked as managing editor of The Rounda. She was also selected for membership in Beorc Eh Thorn.

In answer to a question concerning her aims as editor of the newspaper, Barbara replied, "Besides covering adequately all phases of campus activity, I hope to do all possible to increase the awareness of the students, especially in terms of the Longwood College student and her relationship to other college students all over the country."

Schlegel Speaks At CCCC Meet Held In St. Louis

Dr. Dorothy B. Schlegel, professor of English at Longwood College, was a speaker on the program of the Conference on College Composition and Communication to be held in St. Louis, April 8-9. Dr. Schlegel's talk was on "Administering the Freshman Program: College and University" during a panel discussion of administrative problems of the college freshman English course.

The CCCC is a constituent organization of the National Council of Teachers of English. "Appraisals and Prospects" was the theme of the sixteenth annual meeting of this conference.

Dr. Schlegel is chairman of the Freshman English program at Longwood and is the author of Writing From Research, one of the texts used in the course.

Wall Resigns As Registrar After 9 Years

Miss Virginia L. Wall is retiring as registrar of Longwood College, effective July 1, it was announced by President Francis G. Lankford, Jr., following a recent meeting of the board of visitors at which her retirement was announced to members of the board.

President Lankford stated that no successor had yet been named to the position Miss Wall has held since 1956 when she was elevated from assistant registrar to registrar.

A native of Farmville, Miss Wall attended Longwood while the institution was known as the Farmville State Teachers College. An elementary education major at Longwood, she also attended Hollins College for one year of undergraduate study.

After graduating from Longwood in 1924 with the B. S. degree, Miss Wall taught in the elementary schools of Winston-Salem and High Point, N. C., until 1942 when she returned to Longwood as a member of the staff of the registrar's office.

In announcing Miss Wall's retirement, Dr. Lankford commented that the college is losing one of its most loyal and dedicated staff members. "We all wish for her great happiness in her much deserved retirement," he said.

Legislative and Judicial Boards last Tuesday, April 6.

Also while visiting the campus, Pete held several conversations with various members of the student body in an open meeting of the Legislative Board, and with various members of the administration, such as Dr. Lankford and Dr. Brown.

Pete's visit to our campus was part of an effort, especially on the part of the Legislative Board, to obtain information on the feasibility of Longwood's joining the National Student Association.

The National Student Association was created with the idea in mind that being a student gives birth to special problems, and that a national organization of students could accomplish things that no individual student or student government could do alone to alleviate these problems.

NSA works with member student governments in holding conferences and seminars concerning national affairs, cultural affairs, and other areas that are conducive to debate among students.

What NSA attempts to do is provide a means and communication among its member student governments, as well as provide them with resources and services which no single student government could afford.

NSA provides member students with discount services and an international travel service. In addition to these services, NSA provides member student Government Information service, which is a clearing house of information on the programs, and problems of student governments.

A member student government may make any number of SGIS requests, and no fee is charged for the use of this service. Information can be obtained on a lending basis on such subjects as the following: academic policy formation, campus courts, community service programs, cultural programming on campus, drink regulations, honor systems, leadership training, and several other subjects too numerous to list here.

Biologists Meet

The Association of Southern Biologists will hold its annual symposium April 15, 16, and 17 in Charlottesville, Virginia. The general theme of the meeting will be "Man's Pollution of His Environment."

Attending from Longwood College will be Robert T. Brumfield, Professor and Chairman of the Natural Sciences Department. The Commission on Undergraduate Education, a sub-division of the ASB, will hold three panel discussions on specific aspects of undergraduate biological education.

English Airs, Robin Hood Invade Campus May Day

Longwood's Dell takes on an Old English May Day air as Robin Hood and his band of Merry Men invade Sherwood Forest and the Nottingham Festival.

Narrated in "cockney" English by Milly Gwiltney, the program this year (beginning at 2:00) features a fencing match, archery and cudgeling match, and various types of dancing, including the traditional Maypole Dance, an old English custom. As an added attraction, the Highland Springs Band and the Longwood Choir will perform.

Everyone is invited to join in the festivities of the day as Robin Hood rides again!

Committee heads for May Day include Ann Hutchinson, script; Elaine Iselin, costumes; Nina Ryan, master; Pat Peterson, and Longwood Choir will perform. Ann Coleman, sound; Pat Peterson, technical director; Gerry

Magnifico Goes To Detroit For Math Meeting

Josephine H. Magnifico, will attend a math convention during the week of April 20, in Detroit, Michigan. The meeting is of the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics.

Attending will be teachers from all over the United States, who will hear discussions in sections on the elementary, secondary and college math levels.

Longwood "Y" Presents Easter Sunrise Service

Tomorrow morning, April 15, at 6:45 A. M. the Y.W.C.A. will present an Easter Sunrise Service in the Sunken Gardens. "The Resurrection" by Ernest K. Emurias will be the play presented at this inspirational service. It is the story of the crucifixion of Christ and his resurrection from the dead. The setting is the tomb in Joseph's garden on the first Easter. Cast members are: narrator, Mildred Gwiltney; Joseph of Arimathea, Ginny Daugherty;

May, mother of Jesus, Nancy Young; Mary of Magdala, Brenda Donovan; Angel, Patsy Dietrich; Peter, Bonnie Abbott; John, Peggy Wells.

Chairman of the program is Susan Marsh. Co-chairman is Sara Pickett and Doris Harwell is music director.

The service is to stress the religious, meaningful aspects of the season, not the commercial, and for this reason the "Y" urges all students to attend.

FROM THE BOARD

The results of the questionnaires concerning drinking rules distributed recently to the student body have been tabulated by the Legislative Board. This questionnaire concerned the drinking rules on page 42-43, 1964-1965 Student Handbook and enabled students to write in their personal comments on rule changes they deemed necessary. There were 593 forms turned in with the following results to these questions:

1. Do you think the drinking rules as now stated should be changed? Yes-474, No-90.
2. Do you think they should be more permissive? Yes-454, No-112.
3. Do you think they should be more restrictive? Yes-222, No-514.
4. If the drinking rules were more permissive, would you accept a stricter punishment? Yes-433, No-108.
5. Which punishment do you consider most appropriate?
  - 302 A. First offense-Strict campus
  - Second offense-Social Probation
  - Third offense-Suspension
  - 236 B. First offense-Social Probation
  - Second offense-Suspension
  - 10 C. First offense-Suspension
6. If rule permitted, would you drink at these places?
  1. Approved parties at Hampden-Sydney? Yes-379, No-189.
  2. Public eating places within the city limits of Farmville? Yes-289, No-270.
  3. Picnics or outings with chaperones? Yes 346, No 223.
  7. Would you accept the present drinking rules with the omission of "A-4" and "B-5"? Yes-299, No-232.
  8. If the rules were modified, would you accept occasional spot checks by Judicial Board? Yes 426, No 124.
  9. Would you attend group conferences to further discuss the drinking rules? Yes-415, No-91.
  10. Have you at any time broken the drinking rules? Yes-255, No-297.
  11. Would you turn in anyone who has violated the drinking rules? Yes-108, No-411.

On the discussion questions, there were numerous comments. In response to why they felt the rules should be changed, the consensus of the students was as follows:

1. Girls can drink at other colleges; therefore, Hampden-Sydney is penalized. Hampden-Sydney is no different from any other college with the exception that it is close of Longwood.
2. Parents allow them to drink so the school should do likewise.
3. College girls are old enough to think for themselves and should be treated as adults.
4. It seems inconsistent that a girl can drink past the corporate limits of Farmville but not within the city limits itself.
5. The rules should comply with state law.
6. The rules as now stated are unenforceable.
7. The rules do not take Hampden-Sydney's own standards into consideration.
8. The school does not have the responsibility to control personal honor in such matters as long as lady-like conduct is displayed.

Those who felt no rule changes were necessary stated that further advantage would be taken of any new drinking rule and that drinking reflects on the college's standards.

In regard to the question of what areas in the drinking rule needed revision, comments concerned the rules in all drinking rules except the ones concerning possession of alcoholic beverages on campus and the sobriety of girls returning to campus. The rule concerning drinking within the town limits of Hampden-Sydney and at Hampden-Sydney was mentioned in the majority of comments.

In answering whether or not they would turn people in who violated the drinking rule, 411 stated they would not turn them in for these reasons: "It is up to the individual to turn herself in. The social rules do not come under the Honor Code but should come under a girl's 'personal honor code.' The rules are broken by too many people and are outdated.

Some stated they would turn people in if they could prove a girl was drunk and if certain areas of the rules were changed. Those 108 who would turn girls in felt it was their duty to uphold the standards set by the college.

Olson Publishes Articles In Professional Journals

Dr. Ivan Olson has recently had two articles published in professional music journals. One article, concerned with German music teaching methods, appeared in the Virginia Music Education Association Notes. The other article, concerned with the German influence upon music instruction in 19th century Richmond, will appear shortly in the Journal of research in Music Education.

A musical composition by Dr. Olson has been entered in an international competition sponsored by the Catholic Church, Archdiocese of Pittsburgh. The composition, a sacred choral work, was begun in 1959 when Olson was a student of Leslie Bassett, Prix de Rome winner in 1960.

A member of the music faculty of Longwood College since 1961, Dr. Olson received his bachelor's and master's degrees from Northwestern University, where he served as assistant director of the University Chapel Choir. He received his doctor's degree in music from the University of Michigan, where he served on the faculty as a teaching fellow in music. In 1956 Dr. Olson received a Tanglewood Scholarship for a study with Charles Munch, Hugh Ross, Lukas Foss, and Boris Goldovsky, under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Since 1952 he has performed professionally in Chicago, Minneapolis, New York, and Washington, D. C., including appearances on radio and television, and was invited by Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg to take part in the Freedom Foundation Festival established by the late President Kennedy.

Dr. Olson will join the faculty of the School of Music of Eastern Illinois University in September.

Gonzales Accepts Post As Longwood Physician

Have you met Longwood's likable new physician? Dr. Jose M. Gonzales is the newest addition to the college staff and his background before coming here to Farmville is an interesting one.

Born in a small town called Pena Rubia near Elche de la Sierra in Spain, Dr. Gonzales grew up on a farm. Until he was 19 he lived there in the country of Albacete and worked as a teacher and assistant doctor. It was also during this time that he served in the Spanish army for several years, and was on the front lines during the war.

From Albacete Dr. Gonzales said he is "very happy in Virginia and for two years he attended the Medical School of Valencia."

In 1955 he came to the United States - Chicago to be exact - and was a member of the medical staff at a community hospital for 15 months. He remained in the Windy City three years altogether and while there he met and married his Cuban wife, Eva.

Dr. and Mrs. Gonzales moved to the Old Dominion in July of 1961 and Dr. Gonzales spent 8 1/2 years on the medical staff of De-Jarmette's in Staunton. Two years ago he became a citizen of the United States.

Just a month ago, in February, he and his wife settled in Farmville where he has started a private practice.

In his own words Dr. Gonzales said he is "very happy in Virginia and for two years he attended the Medical School of Valencia."

NSA For Longwood

For several weeks the Legislative Board has been considering the possibility of Longwood's joining the National Student Association. Student Government has sponsored two visits by representatives of NSA, Mike Lawler and Pete Wales.

In terms of the beliefs of NSA, it has consistently supported student action on those issues which have aroused the student community. It has consistently supported academic freedom and the freedom of the students from unreasonable intellectual and social control by his college. However, the main value of NSA is that it affords leaders of various student governments and opportunity to establish a free-flowing exchange of ideas.

Member student governments are entitled to send delegates to the annual National Student Congress held each August in the midwest. These delegates participate in seminars, committees, and finally in the legislative plenaries which consider resolutions affecting the Association's programming and policy for the coming year. Among other services, the Association provides a Student Government Information Service which is a sort of library of written information about programs and projects. Such a service as this could be of unlimited value to the Longwood Student Government. Many times it is not deciding what to do that creates problems, but how to go about doing it.

It is hoped, therefore, that Longwood will decide to join with more than 350 other colleges and universities throughout the country (including Mary Washington and Sweet Briar) and become a member of the National Student Association.

Policy In The Making

It is traditional with each new editor of The Rotunda to present a statement of objectives or aims for the coming year, as well as a preview of the editorial policy that will underlie forthcoming editorials.

The Rotunda fully intends to cover as thoroughly as possible every phase of campus activity. Therefore, we on the staff ask your help in relaying to us possible sources of news stories.

In terms of editorial policy, The Rotunda will strive to be a lively and thought-provoking newspaper. A conscious effort will be made to set forth new ideas and stimulate thought on issues both within and without the campus. Emphasis will be on making the Longwood student aware of her position not only in relation to the immediate campus and the community, but also in terms of her as one of thousands of other students throughout the country.

Nevertheless, it must be emphasized that the editorial column reflects only the opinion of the writer. Unless otherwise stated, one editor on the staff is not necessarily a spokesman for all.

It is imperative, therefore, that readers of The Rotunda submit their views via the Letter-to-the-Editor column. The Rotunda cannot fulfill its function as a student newspaper without knowing how other students feel about certain issues.

Let it be said that The Rotunda hopes to contribute to the educational experience of Longwood students by constantly striving to broaden their scope of awareness, to increase their depth of understanding of the issues at hand.

Athletic Association History Shows Evolution Of Sports And Activities Through The Years

By Maria Grant

Perhaps one of the most interesting and encompassing histories is that of the Athletic Association. It starts long ago and has seen a most fascinating evolution. AGELESS takes you to the year 1898, at which time there was a very small part of the annual devoted to a section called Gymnastics and Athletics.

I certainly do hope you have quite a bit of time today, because I think I may really go on about this. It is a most exciting. In the annual this year '98 appeared the cutest picture of the Tennis Club with their old rackets and wild hats — one of them had H-SC on it.

If I remember correctly we had golf back then because in 1900 there was a drawing of a girl with golf clubs. Well, Oh, and the Skater's Club — We had the nicest times, when we were on our skates, don't you know.

In a 1901 picture I remember the girls who were on the basketball team (the main sport for the longest time) had uniforms. '98 appeared the cutest picture of the Tennis Club with their old rackets and wild hats — one of them had H-SC on it.

My Nannie Turner had a dissertation in the 1902 annual called "The Gymnasium." It went along quite nicely and ended this way: "... the apparatus with which we work consists of different weights for the development of the chest and lungs, dumb-bells for the muscles of the arms and also for the chest, and ladder walls for the chest and different muscles of the body. These exercises are taken in the hall. Encircling this room is the race track where exercises in running are taken."

Around 1904 the Archery Club came into existence and the club in life was the Bull's Eye. Clever.

Oh, I must tell you — It has nothing to do with the athletics, but it is so terribly catchy. It was a club that came about 1905 called "The Anti-Matrimonial Mutual Tontine Benefit Association" with the motto: "This better to have loved and lost than to be married and be bossed." In '08 the name Athletic Association appeared for the first time. Between then and the early twenties there were so many cheers (we went quite wild over cheers and such) I remember the pyramid title holders with the head bands. We did look wonderful.

The AA put on a better health campaign in 1921. In the past we didn't have any way to know true school spirit in athletics so this year we State Normal School girls started playing inter-school basketball. The first opponent we ever had was Harrisonburg Normal. In two games we lost both but had hopes for a better record the next year. That same year we started the Hiking Club. Where.

You know in '22 we played Radford and the three burgers (Fredericksburg, Harrisonburg, and Lynchburg) in basketball. A splendid games they were. Quite.

In the 1923 annual I saw a nice picture of the Monogram Club with their black bloomers, black stockings, and white sweaters with a big PT for Farmville Teachers' on them.

Our basketball record for 1924 was 5-4. Pretty nice, hey? Especially since it was still such a new experience to play other schools. We had forwards, jump centers, guards, and side centers then.

A landmark in our athletic history was reached in 1927. A new sport was introduced — hockey came to FTC! An honorary varsity was selected, representing the pick of the four class teams, since it wasn't advisable to engage in intercollegiate combat so soon.

Another first came that year also. The senior basketball team won the championship — the first senior class team in the history of the college to win the honor.

At the 1927 field and track meet we had the hop-step-jump, discus, 50-yard dash, high jump, running broad jump. By that time, too, we had class baseball, tennis, hockey, volleyball, and of course basketball.

In the handbook of this year I remember something rather important — the objectives of the AA. By the way, old Given-dolyn Hardy was president then. "The AA has as its purpose the promotion of the highest ideals of good sportsmanship through various games and activities which it sponsors. The aims are to instill into the girls readiness to adapt themselves to the convenience of the group as a whole, the resolution to count failure only as a step in the next attempt, and the love of sport for its own sake and not the personal glory which may be derived from it."

Class colors have been the same through the years, Dear. And the jolly good Color Cup seems to have been around for simply ages and ages. Well, as far back as I can remember, for heaven's sake. Even as far back as '27 we had the Thanksgiving tournament in hockey. Oh, it was such fun.

The same year and for numbers of years surrounding it the colors having the largest number of girls on the varsity were awarded 10 points toward the Cup.

About 1928 the blazer and mineral awards were introduced. They weren't quite exactly like ours today although they were modern then, don't you know.

Well, the hiking Club may have gone out of existence, but we still had the walking bug. In 1929 we could even get at points toward a physical efficiency test for walking on six-mile hikes a year. Pant. Pant.

In 1928 Miss Ler became advisor to our Athletic Council. The next year the Monogram Club had new uniforms. I ro member. They were white skirts, shoes, blouses, and sweaters (with STC emblem).

The same year our hockey team played one game against William and Mary and it ended with a 1-1 tie.

By gosh, the very next year we played Westhampton and lost 6-2, which was before we got to be awfully good in the sport. Of course dear old basketball was quite different you know. We won the pants off Richmond Normal 45-6 and Lynchburg, 39-14. You should have been there, by Jove.

Then for two more years in a row we won nine straight games in our favorite sport, which meant we had a perfect record for three years and 11 games later. Jolly well showed them, so to speak.

In '33 Farmville kept two teams scoreless while taking both the singles and doubles in tennis. We've always been quite good with the rackets. Ho, ho. Lacrosse was a popular sport around 1935. I never could seem to do too well in it, but it was fun to watch. Two years later swimming was represented by a manager on the Athletic Council. There were two meeters, there was a carnival in which the classes put on stunts, and the other was a contest to show individual skills in the sport, Oh, do love to swim, except for the two times I nearly drowned. Heavens.

Undefeated in seven basketball games in 1938, our school played such teams as National Business College in Roanoke, Notre Dame College of Baltimore, Panzer College in East Orange, N. J., William and Mary, Blackstone, and Harrisonburg STC. As a result, we won the state championship!

The next year (1939) the H2O Club sponsored an intercollegiate meet and we won first in the South and third in the national Telegraphic Swimming Meet. I How exciting. We were marvelous, you know.

Opening the 1939 basketball season our alma mater was undefeated for three years in the state. But when we played Madison I How exciting. We were marvelous, you know.

For just ages and ages the freshmen and sophomores have played a hockey game to determine whether or not the freshmen will have to wear their rat hats through Thanksgiving. All the way back in 1940 this was true, all the way to the early 60's and heaven knows what happened. I rather hated to see the old tradition go.

My goodness, 1941 was a busy year. The new AAA new field and tennis courts were obtained; we had a varsity swim team that was really very good; life-saving was offered at all times during the year; two girls went to hockey camp; 12 varsity members attended the State Hockey Tournament; our basketball team was undefeated again; the council sponsored bridge, checkers, etc. in the Student Lounge on Saturday nights in the winter; and last but not least — the Hunt Club was introduced — a better known as Pegasus ("The White Winged Horse"). Pegasus was such a great club. It provided training for those who wanted to instruct in summer camps, there was show-biz, and of course they learned all about the care of horses which might come in handy at ever so many occasions.

Orchestra, the honorary dance group, was not under the AA but was open to anyone interested in dance, and served as a form of physical exercise. During the year the members usually had a conference with another college, presented a recital, and performed in May Day. Back then they had these terribly funny looking outfits, sort of flowing things, you know.

On January 27, 1943 (War Emphasis Day) a physical fitness program was started at STC and the council provided all sorts of activities for everyone. The next year this program was accelerated under the motto: "Class Volleyball Awards Points For Color Cup"

Class Volleyball Awards Points For Color Cup

The class volleyball tournament ended last night with the Juniors playing the Seniors at 10:00. At 6:45 the Sophomores played the Freshmen. Monday night at 10:00 the Juniors and Sophomores played.

In the sister class games the Sophomores beat the Seniors and the Juniors defeated the Freshmen. The third game of the tournament was between the Freshmen and the Seniors with the Freshmen winning. Ten points toward the color cup were awarded to the winning color.

HOCKEY TEAM

to "A wartime world has little place for lazy bones." Our basketball team only played one game that year — against Camp Pickett — and we won over the WAC's.

Golf became rather popular around the middle forties for some reason, and there was much action in the fall and spring over at Longwood. Oh, do you know that in '48 the basketball varsity members used to play games in New York and New Jersey. Oh yes. During the hockey season that year the green and whites and red and whites met behind the library for a p.p rally, supplied with chemicals from Charlie Hop to add color to the bonfire. Terribly nice event.

The years '50 and '51 proved ever so interesting. Our school got a new name — Longwood. And it was co-ed. We had both men and women on the Athletic Council and there was a men's varsity basketball team called the Pioneers ('cause they were the first, see). Their opponents were such such as RPI, Lynchburg, Mary Washington (?), Madison, the MCV Medics, and Ferrum.

In '55 we still had horseback riding, color rush was quite a big event, and so many sports were popular that it's quite hard to remember something about them all. The council still chose a cheerleader who was in charge of selecting her cheerleading squad at the beginning of the fall semester. They used to lead a wonderful and beautiful yell we had back in the good old times. '58 was the last year I can recall seeing the cheerleaders. Even then Orchestris still had their flowing things.

Around the middle fifties less and less space was devoted to athletics in the annual. Where it used to seem such a big part of the year it was now becoming less and less so. But in '59 the LC hockey team won 6 and lost only 1 of its games. It was still a winning sport. Our good old basketball team went undefeated again.

For the first time in 1950 I remember Orchestris members in leotards. I thought they looked much more modern, of course. Last year's new swimming group was born — the corynettes, synchronized group and part of the H2O Club. The same year Blue and Whites won 11 out of 14 basketball games and the hockey team tied 6, won 4 and lost 1.

Many members have come and gone, many sports have come and many dropped, uniforms have changed in style, and pass competitions have become little less important to most. The Color Cup remains, and there is still an Athletic Association which has added much to the college throughout its years of growth, but this quote from one of the annuals (which was quoted from somewhere else) has always meant the same from 1888 to 1965: "For when the great Soccer comes"

To write against our name. It matters not whether we won or lost. But how we played the game."

Varsity Tennis Needs Support Of LC Students

The Longwood Varsity tennis team for 1965 has been selected. The members are: Linda Brooks, Carolyn Cline, Henrietta Gilliam, Kay Moore, Marsha Moorefield, Barbara Ragland, Rosemary Rudy, and Sharon Williams.

The manager of the team, Carolyn Cline, said that Longwood should have an excellent team this year. She also said that in order to have a winning team they needed the support of the student body.

The coach of this year's team is Mrs. Harris.

Seniors Defeat Faculty: Byrnside, Rubely Star

The Seniors met with stiff competition Monday night in the Senior - Faculty Volleyball game. The starting line up for the Faculty consisted of Miss Huffman, Mrs. Bobbitt, Mr. Byrnsides, Mr. Clements, Mr. DeWitt, and Mr. Rubely. Backing the Faculty team were Miss Hood, Mrs. Harris, and Miss Smith. Playing for the Seniors were Sarah Lynch, Barbara Agee, Carolyn Ramsey, Mary Jones, Millie Woodward, Betty Wright, Tod Sykes, Lurline Robertson, Earlene Lang, Melody Saunders, Jackie Walker, Lynn Guerin, Judy Wilson and Marcie Hynes.

The Faculty took the honors in the first game with a score of 8 to 4. The second and third games were won by the Seniors with scores of 13 to 11 and 11 to 7 respectively.

Highlights of the game were presented by the Faculty which appeared in top form. Mr. Clements dwarfed the Seniors which gave him the advantage for spiking. Miss Huffman ran into trouble.

In spite of the score averages, the Seniors had a rough time of defeating the Faculty. A round of applause is due these faculty members for a demonstration of skill and good sportsmanship.

Does Joan's profile resemble a favorite movie actor? Paul Newman, for instance.

Miss Virginia Pageant.

Behind the Scenes

Those behind the scenes who made possible the 1965 pageant included: Honey Johnson, Miss Longwood 1964, who was the producer-director for this year's pageant; the assistant director was Pat Finn, who was assisted by Carolyn Prillman, and Doris Ko-hier was secretary.

The House Committee, who took care of tickets, programs, and ushering was headed by Olivia Gibson who was aided by the Freshman Commission. Publicity was cared for by Carolyn Jean Cleary. Lights were operated by Anita Rosser. The scenery crew chief was Ginny Anderson 1965!

Morton, sound was made by Theresa Albright; and props were secured by Judy Hedrick. Julia Lookahl and Bev Cutler were in charge of securing judges. Music was furnished by Sally Tosi Putague. The tea and reception were taken care of by Elaine Dalton and Vicki Doas. The theme of the 1965 pageant was "A Re-enactment With Beauty." The contestants were judged according to their beauty, talent, personality, and intellect. The Miss Longwood Pageant was a preliminary to the Miss America Pageant. Linda Pritchard, Miss Longwood 1965, could become Miss America 1966!

Calisher Reads "May-ry" To Longwood Students

Hortense Calisher, one of the country's best short story writers, was at Longwood Thursday, March 25. Miss Calisher, who spoke at 4:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge, read one of her stories, "May-ry."

Miss Calisher has published stories in many well-known magazines, including the New Yorker and Mademoiselle. She has published three collections of short stories. In "Absence of Angels, Tale for the Mirror, and Extreme Magic."

Miss Calisher has published two novels, False Entry and Texture of Life. Both books have been well-received. A third novel by Miss Calisher will appear next year.

This spring Miss Calisher will be the Writer-in-Residence at the University of Pennsylvania. In the past she has been associated with Brandeis University and the State University of Iowa. Miss Calisher is married to the writer Curtis Hornack.

Elliot Attends NEA Meeting

The National Education Association sponsored a symposium in Washington, D. C., on Thursday, April 8, and Dr. George P. Elliot, instructor in Education, was attended. "The Changing Face of Teaching" and had as its guest speaker Hubert H. Humphrey, Vice President of the United States, who gave an address on "Teaching and the Great Society."

The symposium was called to examine changes and put them into perspective, and analyze and evaluate their impact on the profession and public, and the student.

In addition, the conference launched its eighth annual Teaching Career Month, an event sponsored by the NEA to focus the public's attention on the necessity of careful selection, preparing and retaining of the best teachers for our schools and colleges.

During the afternoon Dr. Elliot attended a discussion on "Teachers and the War on Poverty." All during the day the conference kept in touch with Congress concerning the recent bills about elementary and secondary schools, in hopes it would be passed on that date. The bill was passed on Friday, April 9.

Art Committee Makes 1965 Print Selections

Longwood College has a small committee with a big name. The "Committee for the Purchase of Art by Virginia Artists" has only seven members who decide on all the art work to be purchased for the college.

Their latest selection consists of nine prints from the recent campus exhibit in the Lancaster Library entitled "An Exhibition of Prints by Five Virginia Print Makers," sponsored by the committee.

The prints chosen were: "Moon Among Trees" by Barbara Bishop, a Longwood alumnae; "Ocean City Inlet," "Wild Forest," and "Chincoteague Trawlers" by Carson Davenport; "Evening Shorescape" and "Man Waiting" by Beverly Furman; "Rocky Land" and "Low Tide" by Edward Porter; and "Field Flowers" by Hartwell Priest.

After the prints are framed, they will be exhibited as a group in the library. Following this the committee will meet again to decide on more permanent locations where each can be seen and enjoyed by all students and faculty.

Members of the committee are Janice Lemen, Annie Lee Ross, Nancy Leitch, and George Chavet, all of the Longwood Art Department; Charles E. Butler, Longwood Librarian; Dr. Charles H. Patterson, Jr., chairman of the department of education; and Betsy Taylor, student representative.

The 1965 selections will join 11 other paintings that already belong to the Longwood collection. The college's major art works are exhibited on a rotating basis at points on the campus where they may be seen by a maximum number of students and faculty.

Student Government Installs '65 Members

Tuesday, April 6, the newly elected officers and representatives of the Legislative and Judicial Board were installed in an assembly.

Milly Woodward, outgoing president of the Legislative Board, turned over the gavel to James McCoy, Jimmy Green and Jean White, the initiators of the Legislative Board. Janet Gorman, Nancy Brown, and Susan Goodes; the senior class representatives; Theresa Albright and Jean White, the junior class representatives; Tootsie Kay and Sandy Byrum; the sophomore class representatives; Patsy Diehr and Elinor Waines, the day student representative; Peggy Gee; and the ex officio member, Judy Cummings.

YWCA Sponsors Religious Art

Dr. Graves H. Thompson, professor of Latin and Fine Arts at Hampden-Sydney College visited Longwood's campus on Wednesday, April 14, as guest of the YWCA. He presented a program at 5 p.m. in the Student Lounge comparing religious art slides by using two projectors simultaneously.

The slides were comprised mainly of medieval art—stained glass windows and wall murals. This program was attended by faculty members and students, especially those interested in art and art history.

Colonnade Announces Winners Of Contest

The winners of the annual Spring Literary Contest sponsored by The Colonnade were selected from five divisions of poem, short story, prose impression, essay, and play. The winning writers were: Mrs. Carolyn Rice, first place short story; Marcia Catoe, second place short story; Virginia Petty, first place prose impression; Carol Tingley, first place poem; and Freda Richards, second place poem.

To the first place winners a $10 cash prize was awarded, and to the second place winners an award of $5 was given. All of the winning entries will be published in the 1965 Spring edition of The Colonnade which will come out the end of May. Prizes were not awarded in the other categories because the judges felt there was insufficient merit to warrant those awards. The student judge for the contest was Junior Barbara Garrison. Faculty judges were Mr. and Mrs. David W. Wiley and Mr. Herbert Blackwell.

The Colonnade staff wishes to thank all those who made this contest possible by entering the competition. A time will be announced when all those who entered the contest and did not place may confer with the editors, advisor, and student judge to receive criticism on their work with regard to improvement which can be made.

College Choirs Present Annual Spring Concert

By Phyllis Hamner

The Longwood College Concert Choir and the Randolph-Macon Glee Club will jointly present the annual Spring Concert on Wednesday, April 28, at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

The program will consist of several selections performed by the separate choirs, and then a finale, which will be performed by the combined choirs. The first portion of the concert will be presented by the Longwood Choir, under the direction of Dr. John W. Molnar. This first part of the program is devoted to rather serious works, both classic and contemporary in nature. The choir, accompanied by Doris Harwell, Gail Milstead, Sally T. Postage, on piano, will sing "Lift Up Your Hearts, Sing Ye," by Gretchanoff. The Gretchanoff is a song of exultation followed by two predominantly soprano works by Faure. Mozart's "Kyrie," with clarinet accompaniment by Sue Pearce and Penny Livingston, and the "Bell Chorus," with percussion accompaniment and solo Judy Hester.

The combined choirs will follow with Brahms' "How Lovely is Thy Dwelling Place." Mezzo-soprano Joyce Johnson will be soloist in Schubert's "To Music," to lead off a selection of light numbers, including a beautiful Celtic lullaby and a rousing ballad inspired by the Irish.

"Follow Me Down to Carlow," The Randolph-Macon Glee Club will present the second part of the program, performing a group of familiar "songs of yesteryear." Their selections will consist of "Stars of the Summer Night," "When You and I Were Young, Maggie," "Seeing Nellie Home," arranged by Parker-Shaw; "Lili Liza Jane," arranged by Hunter-Shaw; "Lorena," and "Love's Old Sweet Song," arranged by Hunter-Parker-Shaw.

The conclusion of the program will be the presentation of Offenbach's "La Vie Parisienne" by both choirs. Parisienne is a very lively, contemporary work, relating the life of tourists in Paris.

The members of the Longwood Concert Choir are: Soprano 1 Betty Jane Bone, Mary Louise Brooks, Elrene Drayton Plaburne, Susan Margaret Fuller, Carole Jean Gibson, Karen Templeton Gibson, Catherine Anita Holmes, Carol Mae Lee, Phala Ann Lesgette, Margaret, Charlotte Loftham, Christine Ann Mannina, Ruth Ellen Morehead, Mary Ann Neal, Linda Rae Pritchard, Mary Patricia Rose, Jean Rhea White, Elise Emlie, and Maria Konovloff.

Soprano 2: Billie Sue Board, Ann Montgomery Chappell, Myrtle Diane Cross, Margaret Ella, Joan Yeager, Emerson, Sandra Lynne Ferguson, Ann Courtney Fox, Doris Bruce Harwell, Judy Elaine Hester, Marlan Robert Hogan, Mildred Smith Johnson, Bette Meade Jones, Judy Irene Lang, Terry Patricia McCarthy, Gail Elizabeth Milstead, Sue Carolyn Pearce, Sharon Sue Powell, Susan Dent Ramsey, Martha Carole Rex, Jessie Elizabeth Sledge, Kathleen Elaine Slusher, Elizabeth Lindsey Spicer, and Ruth Lavon Wilson.

Alto 1: Martha Beavell, Sylvia Elizabeth Butler, Daila Armstrong deKrafft, Sandra Jean Elliot, Carolyn Mae Gates, Garnette Virginia Poindester, Sally Tadd Postage, Mary Evelyn Powell, Mary Ruth Roy, Jennie Enola Raye Ryan, Arnee Joanne Stowell, Phyllis Jean Utz, and Ann Willie Waseche.

Alto 2: Mary Evelyn Allen, Phyllis Rae Boykin, Carol Page Carter, Patricia Elizabeth Clifton, Joy Rosalie Cronise, Thelma Louise Dowdy, Guelia Ann Heavens, Judith Ann Koch, Ruth Anne MacNeil, Frances Anne McCoy, Marshall Overby, Jean Carroll Seay, Judith Noel Yarroll, and Janet Elisabeth Dunn. The Randolph-Macon Glee Club will arrive on the Longwood campus about 4 p.m. Wednesday to rehearse, have some free time, and have dinner in the dining hall.

The Longwood Choir performed at Randolph-Macon with the Glee Club on April 20 before a well-sized audience. They hope the attendance will be improved at the return concert, as they present a "very ambitious program, bringing in many different phases and kinds of music."

Longwood Students Celebrate May Day

The Longwood Dell will take on a festive air Saturday, May 1, at 2:00 p.m. as the annual May Day Pageant is presented. Opening the festivities, the Highland Springs Dance Band will present a short concert. The band will play during the presentation of the Court and the skit which follows. The Longwood College Choir will sing several selections.

As the skit, ROBIN HOOD, begins, the narrator, Mildred Gwaltney will set the mood by giving an account of the May Day Festivities of "Merri Old England." The trumpet next will sound, announcing the presentation of the May Court. Members of the Court will be escorted by their fathers. For the entertainment of the Court and audience, Robin Hood and his men will hold a tournament of cudgeling, archery, and fencibles. This type of tournament is typical of those that might have been seen in the time of Robin Hood. Live horses will be played in the performance. Much preparation has gone into making this May Day especially successful. There are to be elaborate costumes and romantic scenery. The main cast is as follows: Robin Hood - Brenda Gibson, Little John - Gail Nolan, Lady Marian - Barbara Keil, Dukes - Barbara Hall, Sheriff's Dame - Donna Schultz, Duke - Diane Davis, Sheriff - Mary Sheets, Master of Tournament - Marian Mowbray. Also in the cast are Phyllis Leslie, Susan Stone, Carolyn Cline, Brenda Gibson, Carolyn Keyes, Karen Ruder, Susie Bowles, Judy Rice, Judy Wilson, Jean Wilson, Ginny Morton, Eve Lockner, and Phyllis Cails.

The skit promises to be sophisticated enough for the old and light enough for the young. Highlighting the May Day Activities will be a concert to be presented by the University of Richmond Glee Club at 7:30 in Jarman. A series of one-act plays will follow presented by the Dramatics Department.

AKG Sponsors Auction; Competition For Mascot

By Candy Thomas

"Going once, going twice . . . Sold to the little lady back there in the last row." This was the sound that echoed through a Main Room, Monday night, April 26, as Alpha Kappa Gamma held their auction. The auction began at 7:00 p.m. and the country auctioneers were Mr. Woodburn and Mr. Rubley aided in overalls and their straw hats. To complete the country atmosphere were Judy Wilson dressed as Longwood's own Mini Peeper and Dixie Grant as a true country gentleman to display the articles.

Some of the unusual but sought after items included:

AKG members to wash cars, polish shoes, give manicures and set hair. Also, Mr. Rubley offered a cook-out for 10 girls, Miss Smith - golf and dinner for three; Dr. Brunfield - a shooting trip for three; Mrs. Bobbitt - steak dinner for four, and Mr. Chavet - a carcade from life. Other professors offered various items, and stores down town donated things like a cake from the bakery, a record album, coffee percolator, jewelry, tickets to the movie, and dinner.

Two of the most unusual items offered for auction were the Green and White mascot Garretson and the Red and White mascot Sally Red and White. The opposing classes bid for the mascot. The winning class got to have the mascot in the Rotunda for a week. Also of interest was a drawing for door prize.

Institute Holds Culture Lecture On Life In South

The last in a series of lectures designed for the promotion of study of the traditional aspects of Southern civilization, the Institute of Southern Culture, will be held on April 30 in the Student Lounge. There will be two lectures, one at 4 p.m. and the other at 8 p.m.

The speaker for the 4 p.m. lecture will be Dr. Selz Mayo, who is currently head of the Department of Rural Sociology and Social Anthropology at N. C. State. Dr. Mayo will lecture on the topic, "Changing Patterns of Migration in the South."

Dr. Mayo has studied at Atlanta Christian College, North Carolina State and University of North Carolina. He holds membership in the American Sociological Association, the Rural Sociological Society, and the North Carolina Adult Education. He is also a member of the American Men of Science and Phi Kappa Phi.

The 8 p.m. lecture will be by Dr. Charles Roland, head of the Department of History at Tulane University. His topic will be "The South, America's Wilderness Eden."

Donald Davidson Poet And Critic, Lectures At H-S

Hamden-Sydney College will be presenting April 29 and May 6 a series of lectures by noted scholars of Southern life and customs.

Featured speakers will be Donald Davidson, poet, critic, and scholar, and Clifford Dowdley, historian, novelist, and journalist.

A number of modern poetry students from Longwood College will travel to Hamden-Sydney on April 28 to hear Mr. Davidson's lecture entitled "Allen Tate: The Traditional Southern As Modern."

Hamden-Sydney cordially extends an invitation to all those interested to attend these lectures.

MARCIA CATOE AND CAROL TINGLEY

Brecht Cum Laude

"The theater esthetic of Bertolt Brecht often strikes audiences with surprise, dislike, even horror."

This statement was taken from the opening paragraph of the program for the Longwood Players-Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs' production of "The Three Penny Opera." There is no doubt that the performance evoked all expected reactions.

The Rotunda takes this opportunity to commend the Players and Jongleurs for their very fine production. This production was by far the greatest undertaking by these two dramatic organizations in the past few years.

In terms of set design and special effects, the cast and crew are to be especially congratulated. Nothing of this type of design has ever been presented to the current Longwood audience.

To further quote the program, "You will not approve of what you see tonight. You are not supposed to." It was quite evident by the departure of several members of the audience during the first act that various people did not approve of the play. To use a contemporary expression, this action had about the same effects as a book's being advertised as "Banned in Boston." The house was almost filled to capacity during the Friday and Saturday night performances.

The production should be received as one of the best cultural and intellectual opportunities Longwood has had to offer this year. It presented a challenge to the religious, moral, and social codes of those in the audience. Brecht's purpose is to alienate the viewer from the action in order that one may "objectively see and hear it, understanding its full implications." The point of Brecht's approach is to eliminate a subjective, emotional approach to a dramatic work. Instead emotion and subjectivity are replaced with objective thought. And doubtless, "The Three Penny Opera" provoked thought on some of man's most fundamental beliefs—religion, morality, and society.

It is in these terms, therefore, that The Rotunda congratulates the Players and Jongleurs on their magnificent endeavor. It provided an intellectual and cultural challenge to Longwood students as well as provided a truly unique experience in entertainment.

A Word On Censorship

Literary censorship is an issue that is becoming more and more controversial with every book that rolls off the press. The students' right to read is a controversy in which we are directly involved from the standpoint of our being Longwood College students and from our future role as teachers (the majority of Longwood students are prospective teachers).

The National Council of teachers of English has recently published a pamphlet in which are explored many questions involving the students' right to read. Those contributing to the pamphlet are nine noted scholars from various colleges and universities throughout the country.

One of the main points of the pamphlet defends the student's right to read in terms of our society. "The right of any individual to read is basic to democratic society. This right is based on the only tenable assumption for democratic living: that the educated free man possesses the powers of discrimination and is to be entrusted with the determination of his own actions." To deny the student his right of discrimination is to mistrust him. And to not trust his powers of discrimination is indirectly expressing a lack of confidence in the American system of education.

The act of censoring a literary work of any kind by individuals or groups is "to limit the freedom of choice of others or to impose their own standards or tastes upon a community (either college or high school community) at large."

Writers have often been referred to as the "mirrors of the age" since their works reflect the religious, cultural, moral, economic and political ideas of the times. Therefore, "censorship of books can leave American students with an inaccurate grasp of the values and ideals of their culture."

Ageless Recaptures Publications History

By Dixie Grant

Editor's Note: Since there have been many, and since they each have histories of their own, the history of publications will be broken down into a 2-part series, this being the first.

If there is one thing which reflects the spirit and feeling of the times more than anything, it is the various publications found in each era. AGELESS is back to give us an account of some of the more prominent ones that have been a part of our college's history. It's 1897.

It was in this very year that the Normal Record came out for the first time. It was longer than our present Colonnade and the cover was made out of less heavy paper.

The Normal Record, published quarterly, contained a few poems, various literary, scientific, religious, and educational notes, editorials, humorous items, plus a list of recent marriages of both former and present students. There was no art work, however.

As far as I can remember, the Record was only published in '97 and '98.

Another thing was a section called Normalisms—sort of an old-time Round the Camp or gossip column.

From 1905 till 1910 a book called the Guidon came out. It was similar to the Colonnade in construction and was full of editorials, jokes, exchanges from other colleges, and more prose than poetry. There were no pictures or art work in this, either.

Following right behind the Guidon was Focus. It seems to me it was a continuation of the same magazine, with just the name changed, for it came to the campus in 1911. In 1914 there were ever so many articles written on child labor.

Also that year the Ballad Club had a feature in one of the issues about the song Barbara Allen. It seems some of the members found two versions of the song—one from a 30-year-old ex-slave named Isaac Carroll who learned it from his mistress before the war, and one

AKG Selects Juniors For Spring Tapping

Alpha Kappa Gamma, Longwood's honorary leadership fraternity, recently tapped nine rising seniors into its organization at a regular assembly program in drama Auditorium. Among those tapped was Bobbie Allen, a biology major from Roanoke. A member of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority, Bobbie is the newly-elected president of the AA Council.

Also from Roanoke, Judy Cundiff was selected for membership into AKG. Judy, an art major, is a member of Alpha Sigma Alpha and is president of House Council. Janet Gormus, an English major from Richmond, was also tapped. A member of Delta Zeta social sorority, she is vice-chairman of Legislative Board.

Fran Lipford, a Spanish major from Bassett, was also tapped for membership. Fran, a member of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority, is the recently-elected president of the YWCA. Jenny McCoy from Chesapeake received membership into AKG. Jenny, a biology major and a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority, is chairman of Legislative Board.

Louise Mann, an English major from Colonial Heights, was vice-president of the YWCA. She was also tapped into AKG. Barbara Ragland, a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority from Richmond accepted membership into this fraternity. Barbara is serving as vice-president of the AA Council.

Mary Kay Richardson, an elementary education major from Alexandria, was tapped into this time. Mary Kay is president of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority.

Jean White, an art and elementary education major from Bayview, was also among those selected for membership into AKG. Jean White, a member of Alpha Sigma Tau, is senior representative to Legislative Board.

Social Science

The Virginia Social Science Association held its annual meeting on April 24, 1965 at Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg. Dr. James M. Helms, Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss, and Dr. Marvin W. Schlegel from Longwood were included on the program.

Dr. Schlegel's topic was Myth of the Critical Year. The book Critical Year dealt with the Reconstruction year of 1866. Dr. Moss and Dr. Helms participated in a discussion of the social revolution in America today.

Pi Omega Pi

Pi Omega Pi, national honorary fraternity in Business Education, has selected its new members, with the initiation service to be held on April 29. The new inductees are Gail Gooch, Catherine Hamilton, Virginia Hartz, Judy Phelps, Nancy Schrum, and Les Wilson. These girls were pledged last Thursday.

The society has also elected its new officers. They are: president, Jackie Leath; vice-president, Gail Gooch; secretary, Shirley Mann; treasurer, Barbara Gillespie; and historian-reporter, Pat Meekins.

"Three Penny Opera" Takes Audience Aback

By Mary Lynn Lander

On April 22, 23, and 24, Longwood students and friends enjoyed something a little different than is usually seen on Jarman's stage. "The Three Penny Opera" was a big success and congratulations are due Dr. Patton Lockwood, director. Dr. Ivan Olson, musical director, and Mr. David Wiley, scene designer.

Alumna Retires After 23 Years Faithful Service

by Linda Dyer

On July 1, 1965, Longwood College will be losing its most loyal alumnae from the campus scene. Miss Virginia Langhorne Wall, Registrar, is retiring after twenty-three years of faithful service to the college.

Miss Wall takes pride in the fact that she is one of the oldest alumnae. A native of Farmville, she attended kindergarten in the basement of West Wing as a student of the Training School. In 1924 Miss Wall received her Bachelor of Science degree in elementary education from Longwood. She was a member of the Mu Omega Ribbun Club, of the Argus Literary Society, and of the

On The Word "Honor"

To the average individual honor is a very important word. A man without honor, is a man lost. My first question is—What constitutes an honorable man? And if you can answer that question, then—Is an honorable man ever dishonorable? Or does he just go on and on forever, being honorable that is?

To me, everyone has a different sense of honor and therefore, any "true definition or way at looking at this word is sheer nonsense. Furthermore, there are degrees of honesty, or if you will, dishonesty. For instance, there is a great deal of difference between a man who jaywalks across a street and a man who embezzles money.

The either-or attitude which many people have of looking at honor and other things, is horrifying to me. What's more, the correct honor of a man can only be determined by himself and not by others, because only the individual, himself, has a relatively complete knowledge of what he is. And as everyone knows, history is full of people who were condemned unjustly by others.

I do not say anything against the need for codes of honor. They are necessary for the existence of society. This either-or attitude toward honor, however, is unjust. Personally, I have never believed it right that men judge one another. True it seems necessary in any society, but that still does not make it morally right.

Board Reviews NSA

It suddenly occurred to the members of Legislative Board that the majority of the student body probably does not know why N. S. A. has been discussed so thoroughly during the past few months. The reason is really quite simple. The Board has been considering the possibilities of Longwood's affiliating with this National Student Association.

In November representatives from the Legislative Board attended a regional conference of N. S. A. The girls were very impressed by the work N. S. A. was doing and by the services it could offer member schools. Since the girls returned from the conference, Longwood has been visited by many students connected with N. S. A. Visitors have included Mike Lawler, vice president of N. S. A.; Pete Wales, member of the National Supervisory Board of N. S. A.; and the president of student government and the N. S. A. coordinator from Mary Washington College.

These students have spoken to the Legislative and Judicial Boards explaining the advantages of membership in N. S. A. All of these meetings have been open to the student body.

Now the Legislative Board is preparing to make a decision on N. S. A. membership. The matter will come to a vote at tonight's meeting.

English Meeting

Dr. Rinaldo C. Simonini, Dr. Dorothy Schlegel, and Dr. Johannes Pastoor attended the 15th Conference of Teachers of English at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville.

Dr. Simonini, as editor of Virginia English Bulletin, also attended on April 3 the executive committee meeting of the Virginia Association of Teachers of English.

Students Display Works On Library Exhibition

by Cookie Hlati

The Annual Spring Exhibition of the Art Department is now on display in the art corridor and the Exhibition Room of the library.

The works on display were done by students in Miss Bedford's crafts and enamels class, Miss Letch's sculpture class, Mrs. Lemen's water color, oil, and printmaking classes, Miss Ross's graphics and jewelry classes, and Mr. Chavale's art education and freshman art classes.

Painting (water colors and oils), sculpture (woodpieces, carved plaster and assemblages) and crafts are on display in the Library Exhibition Room. In the art corridor are prints, etchings, silk screen, jewelry, collages, graphics, ceramics, pierced and tooled copper, and aquatints.

The purpose of these exhibits is to show Longwood students what is being accomplished in the art classes. The exhibits are a culmination of student effort throughout the year.

The art department feels that an artist conveys a message and if no one receives the message, the work is only half complete. The art works on display are not for sale as such; however, anyone interested in a particular work may contact the student who did it.

The Art Department Faculty Exhibition will replace the Spring Exhibit in the library May 15 and will continue through the summer.

Orchosis, Modern Dance Classes Perform Several Arrangements

Lychnos Selects New Members

One of our newest honorary societies, Lychnos (Greek for "Lamp of Learning"), is rapidly expanding. Founded in 1958, Lychnos is devoted to promoting interest in mathematics and science. The society is composed of science and mathematics majors who have acquired (under the four-point system) an overall average of 2.5 and a 3.0 in all math and science courses.

Monday, April 12, twenty-seven new members were initiated into the society. The science majors are Diane Schmid, Harriet Rebecca Anderson, Patricia Delona Berkey, Ann Montgomery Chappell, Carole Jean Cleary, Carolyn Cole Elliott, Frances Leane Heath, Eliza Anne Kling, Woodfin V. Ligon, Jr. (the only boy), Carolyn Gene Mohr, Carol Jean Schneider, Mary Lee Shoulters, Jessie Elizabeth Siedge, Beverly Jane Butler, Anne Ferrell Smith and Ann Willis Waesche. Math majors are Carolyn Virginia Cardwell, Marlene L. Moorefield, Marianne J. Wyatt, Virginia Ann Beard, Sally Fuller Pulton, Olivia Justina Gibson, Nancy Marie Hopkins, Elizabeth L. Sykes, Mary Anne Thomas, and Virginia Evelyn Thompson. The officers for the ensuing year were elected the following Monday, April 19. They are Betsy Schneider, President, Virginia Beard, Vice-President, Ann Chappell, Secretary, and Marianna Wyatt, Treasurer.

Next year Lychnos plans to have numerous speakers, a tea for incoming freshmen who are majoring in math and science, and field trips to various scientific meetings. On May 7 of this year the society will attend a meeting at the Virginia Academy of Science in Richmond.

Class Soft Ball Gets Underway

By Pat Brown

Class softball practices will begin Monday, April 26. Practice sessions, held on the new hockey field, will be from 4 to 5 o'clock, 5 to 6 o'clock, and from 6:45 until dark the first week only. Practices from May 3 to 6 will be held from 4 to 5, and from 5 to 6 o'clock.

Members and apprentices of Orchosis with students of the modern dance class will perform in the 1965 Spring Concert of Dance, which will be staged in Jarman Hall at 1 p.m. on May 4. Five different works relating to the contemporary scene of dance as an art form will be related to contemporary music slanted especially for the idiom of modern dance.

Apprentices will perform in the first work, which traditionally is always more or less defined as a dance of invitation or greeting. Titled as a Galopade, it develops a sprightly dance, reminiscent of pre-classic dance forms but within the modern idiom. From a percussion beat that simulates curvetting and scalloped motion, a sense of urgency or going and coming becomes a problem of keeping up with the pace of the music. As one dancer leaves the stage, another appears or reappears in another sequential pattern of movement from basic techniques in modern dance. The pace is relentless except for the beating percussion phases. The hurrying and meeting leave the onlooker caught in the pace of directional changes, or the spectator finds himself involve in the actual coming and going of the dancers.

The second work, "The Selves of Woman" also reflect the contemporary scene from a quasi pop art attempt through modern dance. Through clarification of an individual as a three-part entity, the spectator may identify his own emotional feelings, self. Students from the modern dance class will choose two or three of the best studies developed in the class as examples of relationships of understanding dance through human movement patterns that are transposed into dance form. After each showing, the two works will be combined as one dance for the spectator. The juxtaposition of two works may become emerged as one theme when structural form as to both music and movement phrase elative to a relative three base theme.

The third work, which is entitled "Two Images: East and West," is based upon a problem of sculptural form in dress and in set form. The spectator senses relationships of basic patterns of movement as one culture relates to another. From a broad basis, the East defines set patterns or symbolic gestures, while the West relies upon a movement basis that has not become solidified. This is apparent in all art forms, and especially significant for dance as an art form that relates the modern dancer with that dancer of the temple in the Orient.

Basic positions of the body, as envisioned in the East, become universal sculptural forms that become arrested or frozen motion. The free patterns of the West stress a beat, more force and less symbolism, through texture in its movement phase, as it reflects a younger culture. Angular patterns of movement define the Eastern set forms. These same angular patterns may become balletic to the Westerner, who does not conceive of ballet as basically Oriental. America's modern dance is as codified as the academic ballet, but it frees the body for movement in space and time.

The fourth work is revealing through the title, which is taken from the work of Denny's "Ebb and Flow." Begun as a problem for Orchosis as well as for the modern dance class, it had to render in class where students are able to work out three periods a week. Consequentially apprentices and students are working in groups chosen of their own choice. From these groups two works will be performed as chosen by vote of the class and Orchosis.

Athletic Association Selects New Council

The 1965-66 Athletic Association Committee has been formed and the Council announced. The committees and members are as follows: Varsity Hockey Manager — Connie Galician and Jean Hendricks; Class Hockey Managers — Nancy Fey and Rusty Stephenson; Varsity Basketball Managers — Sharon Williams and Vannie Gunter; Class Basketball Managers — Ruth Limbrick and Lucy King; Class Volleyball — Patty Dole and Vada Condry; Class Softball — Sandy Long and Pat Brown; Varsity Tennis — Kay Moore; Class Tennis — Pat Borkey; Varsity Archery — Karen Rud; Class Archery — Carolyn Burnett; Golf Manager — Kathy Kolva; Class Swimming Manager — Eleanor Trubshaw; Historian — Ginny Padgett. The Publicity committee will be headed by Judy Hicks as Chairman, Alberta Duman, Jo Ann Dayne, Judy Bateman, Joan West, Hilda Jones, and Ginny Morton. The chairman of the Association Committee is Pat Lyddane; the Committees consists of Helena Hall, Nevis Born, Mary Group, Brenda Donovan, Carolyn Cline, and Kathy Harsh; Lyons Howard is Chairman of the Social Committee, with Margaret Robinson, Mary Long, Margaret Lawson, Heidi Hilden, Jayne Eddy, and Karen Engdahl serving on the Committee. The Senior Class Representative is Phyllis Lasley; Junior Representative is Kathy Sill; Sophomore Representative is Peggy Wilkins. The Freshman Representative is to be elected.

Red And Whites Win Tug Of War At AA Fun Day

The Athletic Association sponsored a successful carnival on Thursday, April 15. Because of rain the carnival was held in the Old Gym from 5:00-9:00. Features included pie eating contests, balloon stomping contests, wheelbarrow races, three-legged races, as well as various other relay races. Also on hand were two connoisseur fortune tellers. A tug-of-war between the green and whites and the red and whites climaxed the events of the hour and proved another victory for the red and whites.

Installation of the new A. A. Council for the 1965-1966 session was held Wednesday, April 21, at 6:45. The new officers are: President, Bobbie Allen; Vice-President, Barbara Ragland; Secretary, Connie Spradlin; and Treasurer, Dianne Davis. Next year the council hopes to interest more girls in the many and varied activities sponsored by the A. A.

Persak Attends Swimming Meet

On May 8, Ann Persak, Geri Gerhardt, and Kathy Kolva will attend the Fourth Annual Intercollegiate Synchronized Swimming Meet at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The meet is sponsored by the Amateur Athletic Union.

Geri and Kathy will swim a duet called Sea Fever, in competition; while Ann will swim a solo called Carousell. Grace and Majesty, Ann will also enter the competition. She must do three required stunts and then three optional ones.

The girls will be accompanied by Miss Smith.

from a girl's father and relatives who lived in Buckingham County. It was quite interesting how the same song changed in the different localities.

The last issue of Focus came out in 1920.

Around 1917 is when I first recall anything that resembled a Handbook. It was then called the Constitution and Regulations of the Student Association—State Normal School, and was composed of 10 pages.

In 1926 it was called the Constitution, By-Laws, and Regulations for Student Self-Government and had 37 pages. Twenty pages were added the following year, and it was then entitled Student Handbook.

The Handbook contained the constitution, items of interest, a map of the campus, rules and regulations—much the same as the present one—except it wasn't as big as the present one.

In '43 came the fuzzy-covered books, still small in size. By 1947 a heavy paper cover was in style and it was back to the original larger size. An even larger book came in 1954 when it was named the Longwood Handbook.

The year 1920 came to our campus and at the same time came two new publications—the Voice and the Tributum. The former was published by the Cunningham and Ruff Literary Societies, but believe it or not, it proved rather easy reading. It contained only prose and poetry and one of my favorite poems at that time was one called "The Dream Peddler." The Voice was discontinued around 1931 after a worthwhile contribution to the school.

The Tributum, published by Sigma Pi Rho and the Sodalitas Latinas at the State Teachers College, lasted some time longer—to 1943. It was composed of articles in Latin, and such things as Vergil's Prophecy of Imperialis, Sketch of Leonardo da Vinci, etc. The Tributum came out only three times a year—in the fall, winter, and spring. There was one item that amused me ever so much. It was a poem in Latin and the poem was hic porculus ut meretur, (translation—This little pig went to market—). This piece went to market—.

Beginning in 1949 and running through 1952, the Farmville Quarterly Review was put out by both students and some faculty members. It had book reviews, poems, essays, and poems. An interesting poem by Lillian Anderson (39) was entitled "Isms".

Is it super-sensitivism
That makes me miss you so,
Or just this terrible awfulness
I feel when you must go?

Is it transcendentalism
That makes you go away,
Or just some little nothingness
That I forget to say?

As you can tell, old alma mater has never lacked written material. Next time AGELESS takes us on a tour of the history behind the three major publications of today—the Colonnade, Rotunda, and Virginia.

person that follows her. It creates an image of being involved with a setting that is strange because people do not work as a group. One has a self and does not want it too closely related to others.

Several years ago modern dancers called "A Happening" an improvisation. In the state, the term has spread to painting, drama, music, and other arts. This is a period of improvisation or change in form of arts. This may be defined as a period of in-orientation of self related to others.

HomeEconomicsClubSpringFashionShow

Features Student Self-Made Garments

Last night the Home Economics Club held its annual spring fashion show in Jarnan Auditorium. This year the show was the largest ever with a total of 36 girls modeling garments they had made. The production was narrated by its co-chairmen, Cynthia Edwards and Bernice Newman, and was based on the theme, "Dress Rehearsal."

To present specific types of clothing, the show was divided into four acts. The first act, "Scene Stealing Casuals," introduced light and bright cotton blouses, skirts, jumpers and shirt waist dresses. "Suits in the Spotlight," act two, emphasized cotton and wool suits, varying styles and colors. Act three, "Dress Review," displayed an assortment of stylish fashions equally suitable for date wear and other dressy occasions. The last act, "Grand Finale Formals," was the highlight of the evening. It featured sophisticated cocktail dresses and elegant formal and was a fitting conclusion to the parade of fashions.

All the participants modeled garments made under the supervision of Miss Lora M. Bernard, Clothing and Textiles Instructor, at Longwood.

After the show, faculty members, other invited guests, and participants attended a reception held in the Home Economics building.

Rukeyser Reads Modern Poetry To LC Students

Muriel Rukeyser, an American poet and biographer, held a reading of her poetry in the Student Lounge April 22 at 1:00. Miss Rukeyser came to Longwood under the University Center Visiting Scholar Program. Miss Rukeyser read a number of her published poems, including "Effort at Speech Between Two People," which was written while she was an undergraduate. Also among the poems were "Song," "Are You Born?", and "Double Dialogue," which was written in homage to Robert Frost. Miss Rukeyser closed the readings with a new poem, "The Outer Banks."

Miss Rukeyser attended Vassar College and Columbia University. She received her Litt.D. in 1961. She is now on leave from her position on the faculty of Sarah Lawrence College. Miss Rukeyser began publishing in 1935. She has published 13 Fire. She has also published four prose books, One Life, The Life of Poetry, Walter Gibbs, and Gray. Gray, published this year, has received much attention from the critics as a first novel. Miss Rukeyser prefers to call it a "three-day's journal" rather than a novel.

Beorc Eh Thorn Sponsors Moore At Two Lectures

Dr. Virginia Moore, author and biographer, spoke to two groups of Longwood students Tuesday, April 20. Invited to the campus by Beorc Eh Thorn, Dr. Moore spoke to the 1:00 assembly and again in the Student Lounge at 4:00.

"Literature and the Crisis of Our Time" was the topic of Dr. Moore's speech at the assembly. Later in the day she discussed "Writing Problems and Writing as a Way of Life" and answered student and faculty questions.

Dr. Moore received her Master's degree in English from Hollins College and her doctorate from Columbia. She is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Dr. Moore began writing at the age of ten. She has published twelve books, including several volumes of poetry and one novel. One of her best known works is Virginia is a State of Mind.

Dr. Moore is currently working on a double biography of James and Molly Madison.

Jazz Concert

Phi Gamma Mu, the honorary social science society, will sponsor a Dixieland jazz concert May 4 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarnan Auditorium.

The concert will feature The Dixieland Strangers, a jazz group that has performed several times in the Tri-County Room in Richmond.

All students and faculty members are cordially invited to attend the concert, and admission will be $1.00.

This concert has been sponsored in an attempt to promote an interest in jazz among Longwood students, and to bring to the Longwood audience an entertaining opportunity not available to this campus.

NSA Provides Service For Member Students

The National Student Association provides several services for the individual students in its member schools. Among these services are the Student ID or discount card, special travel program, and a student life insurance plan.

Student ID cards are available to all students attending NSA member schools for $2. Students in non-member schools must pay $4 for this card. A student ID card entitles the holder to discounts on food, lodging, museum fees, theatre tickets, etc., in the United States, Canada, and 20 other countries throughout the world.

Planning to travel abroad this summer? NSA can help you there also. NSA sponsors a unique travel program, Educational Travel Inc. ETI arranges special low cost student tours of Europe and Latin America. These are not the ordinary church - museum - landmark - type tours. They are designed to understand the students of other countries. The Latin American tour is a good example. Student leaders from the U. S. travel through the major cities of South and Central America. While in the various cities they meet with Latin American students for informal discussions and seminars. ETI programs provide study tours from all over the world. If you do not like the idea of a planned tour, NSA provides campus travel information centers to help students travel on their own. In addition, two fine books, Work Study, Travel Abroad, and The Travelling Student, published by NSA, give complete information on where and how to go at the lowest possible prices with the student ID card, of course. The student life insurance plan is also very valuable. For $20 per year NSA provides a student life insurance policy. This may not sound too important now, but once out of school you'll be happy for the security this policy can provide.

No examination is required for this policy, and it is easily converted to low rate life insurance after graduation. If a student wishes to convert his policy upon graduation he receives a four-year discount to compensate for the amount he has already paid on the policy while in college.

Club Announces New Officers

The H20 Club has elected their officers for the year 1965-66. They are: President—Gert Gerhardt; Vice-President and co-chairman of the Water Pledge—Kathy Kolva; Secretary—Nancy Fey; Treasurer—Lucy Flanagan; Historian—Susan Clites; Publicity—Dede Holden; and Swim Meet Chairman—Ellnor Umbdenstock.

The club has also taken in new members. They are: Nancy Fey, Pat Finn, Ellnor Umbdenstock, Dede Holden, Ann Lancaster, and Peggy Wells.

Initiation of the officers and new members will take place on April 28 at the H20 Club Banquet.

the Delta Sigma Chi social society, now Alpha Sigma Alpha.

In the ensuing years, Miss Wall lived in High Point, North Carolina. In 1942 she returned to Longwood to assume the position of registrar. There were three reasons for her return to the campus: (1) she wished to be at home; (2) she loves her Alma Mater; and (3) she was influenced by her deep admiration for Doctor Jarman.

In 1949 Miss Wall was tapped into Alpha Kappa Gamma as an honorary member. She is a member of Delta Kappa Gamma, an honorary teachers' organization, advisor to Alpha Sigma Alpha from 1944-1963, and advisor to the Granddaughters' Club.

When asked about her work here, Miss Wall said, "I enjoy my work here, enjoy the contact with the faculty, administration, and students. I will still be interested in the college and its welfare. I've enjoyed watching the students grow from freshmen into seniors, and have kept up with a few of them after they graduated. It has been very interesting watching the school grow and the many changes on campus. Miss Wall said that it has been most interesting meeting the daughters of acquaintances.

Miss Wall intends to take every opportunity for enjoyment after her retirement. "I like people and I want to renew my contact with people I haven't been able to get around to see. I'll just be free to do what I want with my leisure." She further stated that now she would have more time to spend with her family and friends.

Southern Institute Presents Lectures

by Reverley Roark

On Friday, April 30, Longwood held its last two lectures in a series of six sponsored by the Institute of Southern Culture. In the afternoon session Dr. S. C. Mayo, department head of Rural Sociology at North Carolina State University spoke on the topic, "Changing Patterns of Migration in the South."

Dr. Mayo in introducing his subject quoted figures to illustrate world-wide population; he pointed out that the annual rate of growth is two percent and that at the present rate of expansion the world's population doubles every 35 years. With today's population explosion 63 million are being added every year.

In describing mobility Dr. Mayo divided resident changers into groups of "movers" or "migrants," the "movers" being those who move within county lines and the "migrants" being those who move outside of county lines. Some of the points Dr. Mayo made were that more men move than women, more white people than Negroes, more mobility lies in people under 34 years of age, and that the higher the salary the higher the mobility rate and vice versa.

In terms of Southern mobility, in the past decade while eleven of the thirteen Southern states have lost a total of almost one and one-fourth million people only Virginia and Florida gained in population. Dr. Mayo defined the degree and type of Negro migration; he said that for 100 years the Southern Negro has been migrating away from the South. Some of the forces driving the Negro from the rural South are a shift in cotton production, development of mechanization, and government controls in agriculture.

Information Dr. Mayo passed on concerning present facts and coming trends included many facts. He said interstate Negro migration in the South was high, the more highly educated Negro leaves the South, and the present Negro population in South and non-south areas is predominantly urban. The facts lead up to a small Negro Southern population by the year 2000 than in other areas and a total of 11 million Negro residents in the South by 1970.

In closing, Dr. Mayo cited five consequences of Southern migration. These are (1) the South is becoming increasingly white; (2) social and political power is being redistributed in the South; (3) there is a power struggle for representation within states; (4) state representation in the legislature and efficiency of county governments have become a problem; and (5) the South of the past is no more — the South is becoming more like the nation.

The evening speaker was Dr. Charles Roland, head of the Department of History at Tulane University. He spoke on "The South, America's Will-O-the-Wisp Eden." His lecture dealt with reasons why the South has never realized its economic potential.

Dr. Roland cited incidents to show that the South is still a colonial area, while other areas of the nation have exhausted natural resources the South is still in want in the midst of abundant riches. Reasons he gave for the lack of economic stability are the crudeness of Southern industry, ownership of businesses by non-southerners, loss of manpower in common laborers and a heavy loss of well educated trained men. The weakest area affecting the economy is the education system which has not been able to keep up with the rest of the nation.

He closed by saying that the South is a land that is becoming less of a land and more of America's will-o-the-wisp Eden.

Students Visit Speech Center

Students of Longwood College studying under the cooperative program in speech pathology and audiology with the University of Virginia will make a field trip to the Speech and Hearing Center of the University on May 6. The Center is having an open-house for students working in this field. Interested students should see Mr. Robert J. Woodburn, instructor in speech at Longwood College for details of the trip.

The cooperative program in speech pathology and audiology between Longwood College and the University of Virginia was established in 1962.

Students spend their first three years at Longwood College and their last year at the University. After four years of study, the student may receive either a Bachelor of Art or a Bachelor of Science degree with a major in speech pathology and audiology from Longwood College.

Senior Class Stages Years-end Assembly

On Tuesday, May 11, the Senior Class will present the last assembly of the year. All seniors will participate in singing, and approximately 50 will perform in skits. Songs will be those from circus skills, productions, and the song contests. There are 29 songs and acts, plus songs to the classes at the end.

The theme of this program promises to be different and surprising. It will be carried out by the help of mysterious props.

Dixie Grant and Marcy Hynes are co-chairmen for the event, and are also the writers of the script. Nancy Via is song leader and Susie Mays will accompany on the piano. Each portion of the program has its own committee head. According to Miss Grant, these "heads" were told at the beginning if their group is a " flop." It is their own fault.

The program will be humorous until the end when the seniors dedicate songs to the classes. Then a few Kleenex may be required.

The Sophomore class—class class to the seniors—will hold a banquet for the seniors on May 10. With much entertainment in store, this promises to be a gala and memorable occasion.

"Colleagues" Organize; Replace Rating Program

There is a new organization on the Longwood campus. The Colleagues, consisting this year of the Top Rate of the Class of 1968, headed by Margaret Bridges, and sponsored temporarily by Dr. Carolyn Wells, are initiating a program to replace rating. The purpose of this program will be to welcome freshmen to Longwood and to help them adjust to life here.

The Colleagues will choose thirty-five assistants from their class who will be called the Associates. The Associates will be selected on the basis of their ability to work with others and their outgoing personalities. The Colleagues will also choose The Colleagues for the following year from the freshman class. The chairman will be elected by the freshman class. The Colleagues will dress alike in caps and dresses in their class color.

Each of The Colleagues and Associates will be in charge of a small group of freshmen, serving the same purpose that the sophomore assistants previously did. They will write to the members of their groups during the summer and will welcome them when they arrive.

Special activities and programs are being planned to welcome freshmen next September. In addition to parties given by the classes and church groups, there will be a sing in the Rotunda, a movie in Jarman, a capping ceremony, a picnic at Longwood Estate, and a banquet. The highlight of the activities will be a concert for which The Colleagues are now negotiating with The Brothers Four.

The Colleagues hope that this plan will be helpful and enjoyable to the freshmen and that it will be approved of and supported by the entire student body.

WFLO Sponsors Radio Contest For Students

The Virginia Association of Broadcasters, of which WFLO in Farmville is a member, will award the third annual VAB Scholarship grants following competition to be held in May. National Radio Month. Two grants will be given, one to a high school senior and one to a college upperclassman who chooses courses indicating interest in broadcasting careers. To qualify, a student must be a Virginia resident, must show need of financial support, must have better-than-average grades, and must complete a brief essay and questionnaire. Both young men and women are eligible. Entry forms and other details may be had by writing to Scholarship, WFLO, Farmville, Va., or by visiting the station during weekdays from 8:00 a.m. to 5 p.m.

All applications must be completed and returned by May 24. The VAB Scholarship grant was originated in 1962 when a committee headed by John Wilson of WFLO initiated the plan.

Recipients of the grants will be announced June 17 at the annual meeting of the VAB.

Sophomores Road Show

Today, from 50 to 60 sophomores presented their Road Show at the Children's Rehabilitation Center in Charlottesville. The co-chairman for the show were Lucy Flannigan and Susan Fix.

Board Votes To Join Student Association

by Theresa Albright

The Student Government Room was filled with smiles Thursday night as the Legislative Board voted unanimously in favor of affiliation with the United States National Student Association. This action was a result of months of study and consideration of the Association's policies and services.

Membership in N. S. A. brings two-fold benefits to Longwood students. First, N. S. A. benefits individual students through student discount, travel and insurance programs. (These programs were outlined in last week's Rotunda.) Second, N. S. A. benefits the whole campus as a whole by providing information and resources for Student Government and other organizations.

Aid is given to campus organizations through the Student Government Information Service (SGIS). By simply writing a letter to SGIS Longwood's student government can receive information on such pertinent topics as "Campus Courts," "Class Activities," "Course Evaluation," "Drinking Regulations," "Freshman Orientation," "Student-Faculty Relations."

discussions: "In Loco Parentis," "Due Process and Student Discipline," and "Student Involvement in College Policy-Making." Longwood may send as many delegates as she wishes to this conference without cost.

Longwood will also be represented at the National Student Congress to be held in August. The events of this congress include student government workshops, seminars and plenary sessions. At this conference the Longwood delegation will be able to meet students from all over the nation. Meetings such as the National Student Congress provide an unequalled opportunity to share in the policy-making of the country's largest student organization and to learn from other schools.

Information provided on these topics included work done by other colleges and universities throughout the country in these fields. Results of student polls and inter-campus surveys are also available through SGIS. In short, SGIS can relay to Longwood the knowledge and experience on its 350 member institutions in a matter of a few days. Another advantage to membership in N.S.A. is the regional and national conferences it provides for member schools. Longwood will be able to send representatives to this spring's regional conference to be held this week-end May 7-8, at Chapel Hill, N.C.

The topic for this meeting is "Student Rights and Responsibilities." Three divisions of the campus will be covered in seminar programs.

In order to draw the maximum benefits from N.S.A. membership, it will be necessary to have a student N.S.A. coordinator. This person, appointed by the President of Student Government with the approval of the Legislative Board, will keep in constant contact with the national office of N.S.A. and relay its programs to the various campus organizations.

Madrigal Singers Give Sunken Garden Recital

The Madrigal Singers, under the direction of James McCombs, will present a program in the Sunken Gardens on Tuesday evening, May 4, at 5:10 p.m.

The program will begin with the Madrigal Singers singing various sacred selections such as "Jesu, Salvator mundi," "Non nobis, Domine," and "Cristus Iustus rex." Karen Gibson, soprano, will sing an Old English song, "I was a lover and his love," accompanied by Joy Cronce on a baritone solo. "Summer is a coming in," a song dating to about A. D. 1250, will be sung by Joy Cronce, contralto. The Singers will continue the program with numbers such as "Now is the Month of Maying," and "The Nightingale." Mildred Johnson, mezzo-soprano, will present "Lord Rensel," accompanied by Billie Sue, soprano, will accompany herself while singing. "Let us dance, let us sing," "Ye banks and braes o' Bonnie Doon," and "Four anses, two weeks, one wreathling."

New Directions

The office of the Dean of Women has recently issued a directive which was entitled "Administrative Policy Regarding Selection of Sponsors and Advisors." This directive outlined a new procedure which is supposed to be followed by all campus organizations in the selection of their advisors and sponsors. In most cases, students are not aware of the terms of this new policy, the implications of it, or perhaps that a new policy even exists.

The Longwood chapter of the American Association of University Professors has compiled a report on this new advisor-selection policy, and it also includes some of the implications of this policy. Since most students are affiliated with one organization or another, this policy will directly affect us. The following are the terms of the new procedure:

1. By May 1 of each year all campus organizations must submit to the Dean of Women the names of two or more persons who are regarded as qualified to serve as advisor. The nominees should not be approached by representatives of the organization.
2. The Dean of Women will submit these names to the President of the College and his Faculty Advisory Committee.
3. One of the nominees whose name was submitted will be selected by this Committee and the person will be asked to serve.
4. If neither nominee is willing to serve, the organization will be notified and asked to submit further names.
5. Once the selection has been made, the Dean of Women will notify the organization and the selected advisor.

Several objections can be raised over this new policy. In the first place, the directive never did state under whose authority this new policy would operate. It simply stated that on May 1, "all campus organizations must submit." At the time the new policy was developed, a meeting of the heads of all campus organizations was held. At this meeting the policy was discussed. However, several campus organizations were not represented, not because of a lack of interest, but because they were never notified that such a meeting was to take place. Consequently, these organizations had no say in the matter what-so-ever. In addition, the faculty was not notified that such a policy was being considered, and it was not put to a vote of the faculty.

Under the former plan of selecting advisors and sponsors, selection was mostly in the hands of the students and the faculty members themselves. Many organizations concern themselves with activities that are closely related to particular academic areas. For instance, The Rotunda, is naturally connected with Journalism while Alpha Psi Omega is concerned with drama. Who would be more aware of the qualifications of faculty members to sponsor such organizations as these than the chairman of such department? Therefore, selections were made mostly from chairman student agreements. Also, there were a few appointments made.

If the new policy is enacted, the privilege of selecting advisors will be taken from both the faculty and the students and placed completely under administrative authority. Students will not even have final approval, while the faculty will be by-passed altogether.

Therefore, as students we would be wise in joining with the American Association of University Professors in its feelings that "any policy of selecting advisors should be a faculty matter rather than an administrative one and as such should be approved by faculty before it is put into effect." The AAUP "further suggests that the final approval of an advisor should be the prerogative of students rather than either the faculty or the administration."

An Olde English May Day Features Merry Men Skit And Traditional May Pole Dance

By Susan Woltz

With the rising of the sun, a beautiful May Day was set in action last Saturday. The festivities started at 2:00, and played to a large crowd in the dell at Longwood Estate.

The program started with a welcome by Judy Cudiff, chairman of May Day. Next came selections by the Highland Springs High School Dance Band, led by Wade H. Arledge. "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing" and "Back in Your Own Backyard," the pieces, seemed to fit the tone of the day. The Longwood College Choir sang next, led by John W. Molnar.

Mildred Gwaltney, the narrator, wore a long green and orange dress with pointed hat. She set the pace for the introduction of the Court, the next activity. The attendants were escorted in, and wore long white dresses, of a simple design, with green ribbon marking the empire waist. They carried sprays of large white daisies. Suzanne Ballard, the Maid of Honor, had a dress of the same design, only with a yellow ribbon. She carried a spray of yellow daisies. The May Queen, Wanda Old, wore a long white full skirted dress, with a lace top. She carried a bouquet of red roses. They took their places and the program continued.

Robin Hood's Merry Men, in costume, danced a jig, and then

Robin (Brenda Gibson) appeared on the scene with Little John (Gail Nolan). The peasants came and danced on the Green, and then the guards marched in and cleared the way for the Nobility.

Feats of strength were presented for the Nobility to view, including Cudgeling, Archery, and Fencing. Robin Hood, disguised as the Black Knight, won all the contests, but had to flee to escape detection of his identity. The Sheriff of Nottingham, determined the celebration should continue, commanded it to go on and the May Pole Dance started.

This was the culmination of the Festival, also of Longwood's May Day. The blue and white streamers almost perfectly entwined during the dance. It preceded the finale.

May Day has always marked the death of winter and the birth of spring, and here at Longwood the tradition is well carried out.

Following the activities in the dell, students, parents, faculty, dates and townspeople enjoyed a concert presented by the University of Richmond Glee Club. This was followed by a one-act play entitled "A Marriage Proposal" under the direction of Dr. David Wiley. The play featured an all-girl cast of Carolyn McAdoo, Mary Ann Chinn, and Ellen Miller.

Ageless Reiterates Publications History

By Maria "Dixie" Grant

Concluding the history of publications, AGELESS takes us back to 1938 when the first issue of the Colonnade was put out:

"Hi there, I was just looking at one of the old Colonnades. Do you know that it's almost as large as the yearbook in length and width? Oh yes, the '38 issue contained letters from abroad with pictures, poems, short stories, personality spotlights (other than students), and book reviews."

During the 40's, through stories, ads and features, our magazine caught the spirit of the war effort. In 1954 there was an insert in one of the copies — a farce called "Real Scream". It was ever so funny.

In the late 50's the Colonnade seemed to stick more to short stories and poems as far as I can remember. But there was never an end to the numerous anecdotes.

Around 1962 a parody issue came out called "Ye Olde Colonnade".

The very oldest of our publications is the Virginian which is about as old as our alma mater. At first it wasn't the Virginian at all, but the Normal Light, containing a dedication, much writing and few pictures, class songs and histories, clubs and organizations, feature stories, a faculty department, and of course senior pictures. The book itself was wider than it was long.

Finally, in 1960, the yearbook became known as the Virginian, and also assumed its present shape, except for being somewhat smaller. From 1966 to 1968 the cover was made of soft leather.

In 1927 I recall there were more pictures and less writing than usual, and in 1932 the first pictures of Circus appeared. By 1935 many informal shots were included in the annual and it began to look more and more like our present edition, especially in '37 when it finally took on its present-day size.

In the late 40's a spell of terribly wild informal shots could be seen, by Jove, in '51 a joint committee chose the first senior personalities whose pictures appeared in the yearbook. There were six of them by the way. The next year Who's Who was included and the senior personalities were only two. By 1956 the annual got away from so much writing and stuck mainly to pictures.

A picture of the Rotunda back in '37 showed that our main hall lacked a rug and the furnishings it now has. My god, it looked quite bare, don't you know.

By the late '50's the Virginian was definitely divided into distinct sections and wasn't as wodge podge as it had been for awhile.

One of the most interesting annuals was the one which came out in 1959 — celebrating the 75th anniversary of our college. Today the Virginian continues to reflect, through its pictures, the many episodes of the year in review. It's come a long way from the 1890's.

Last but not least I present you with the Rotunda, by far one of my very favorite publications. Its history is a history of the college itself as it reflects through editorials, pictures, and news items the changing ways of life of the Longwood Lady of yesteryear and today.

On October 29, 1950 the first issue of the Dummy, the Normal School Weekly, came out. It was quite a bit smaller than the present newspaper, but had the usual four pages. From the printer's term for a "blank, business-like thing," we got the name Dummy, because we had no name for it yet. In that first issue, we explained the purposes of a weekly paper and also included items of interest from around the campus.

On November 28, 1920 the Rotunda was the name decided upon for our official college newspaper. The first picture ever printed was of our beloved president, Dr. Joseph L. Jarman.

Around The Campi

It's about the third block studen teachers who finish their exams on Saturday. Guess they look forward to a wild final week.

What could be worse than a six o'clock fire drill? Barring horns, screaming seniors roaring out for a day of freedom (at six o'clock, of course).

Whatever happened to that picture on second floor post office?

Rumor has it that a good supply of Kleenex should be on hand for next week's Senior Assembly.

It seems that Mr. Rubley's horse stole the title of the Junior Circus skit at May Day — "The One That Got Away."

The AKG Auction went rather well this year, thanks to several items which went amazingly high.

Only 25 more days 'til graduation seniors!

Congratulations for all those involved for a well planned and much enjoyed May Day.

FROM THE BOARD

The following report is a list of the new rule changes that will go into effect in September of 1965. These changes have been made through the cooperation of the Legislative Board and the Administration for the benefit of the student body.

1. HONOR

The following statement will be placed on page 2 before the last sentence in the paragraph entitled "Honor" and also on page 28 before the last sentence in the first paragraph:

"Honor is not limited to the points covered by the Honor Code pledge. In addition to the items which constitute Honor offenses, it is expected that each girl maintain personal honor."

Also on page 28, the following sentence will be inserted in the second paragraph after the first sentence:

"Lying under oath before the Judicial Board or the Executive Council of House Council in any matter is an honor code offense."

11. DAY STUDENTS' RULES:

The following rules will be classified in a separate section entitled "Day Students."

The Day Students will be subject to the following rules and regulations:

Page 28—The Honor Code

Page 30—Student Conduct

Page 79—All College Regulations

1. Assembly Regulations
2. Artist Series Regulations
3. Class Regulations
4. Student Activities
5. Library Regulations
6. Infirmary: Day students enjoy all the privileges of the Student Health Service except admission to the infirmary as bed patients.

A Day Student confined to her home because of illness must have some member of her family telephone the infirmary on any day that she is absent from class in order that the College may know the reason for her absence. When she returns to classes, she must obtain an excuse for her absence from the College Physician.

DRINKING RULES APPLICABLE TO DAY STUDENTS:

1. A Day Student may not drink under the following conditions:
  - a. at any social function sponsored by Longwood College or any Longwood College Organization
  - b. within the town limits of Hampden-Sydney or at any Hampden-Sydney College function.
2. A Day Student may not have alcoholic beverages in her possession while on campus.
3. If a Day Student's sobriety is questioned at any time, or if any of the above drinking rules are broken, an immediate investigation will be made and the matter dealt with severely and her parents notified.

A Day Student must leave any dormitory by the regular sign-in time of her hostess.

GENERAL TERMS APPLICABLE TO DAY STUDENTS:

Page 41—h, m, n, o, p, q, r, s. WHILE ON CAMPUS DAY STUDENTS ARE SUBJECT TO ALL REGULATIONS GOVERNING STUDENTS AT LONGWOOD COLLEGE.

A DAY STUDENT'S PLEA OF IGNORANCE WILL NOT EXCUSE HER FAILURE TO KEEP THE STANDARDS SET BY THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION.

III: PICNICS AND LAKES:

This entire section on page 43 and 44 will be omitted and will be replaced by the following:

3. "PICNICS AND LAKES"
  - a. "All picnics sponsored by Longwood College organizations must be registered in the office of the Dean of Women three days prior to the event."
  - b. "These picnics must be chaperoned by someone approved by the Dean of Women." Rule 3a. and 3b. will also be placed on page 83.

IV. RIDING AND CARS:

On page 45, rule 5. e. has been omitted.

V. DATING:

On page 45, these changes have been made in section 6.

- Rule 6. a. has been omitted and will be replaced by: "On weekends, girls and their dates may visit those Hampden-Sydney fraternities holding approved open house. The names of these fraternities will be posted each week in the dorms."

***This rule will be on "trial basis" and can be repealed by the Legislative Board.

Rule 6. c. has been changed to 6. d.

Rule 6. c. will read as follows:

"May not visit Hampden-Sydney fraternity houses during the week with the exception of special occasions when invitations have been sent through the office of the Dean of Women and approved by her."

Rule 6. e. will read as follows:

"Girls may not visit in men's dormitories at any college or university."

Rule 6. j. will read as follows:

"No dating is allowed in the areas behind Ruffner, Student, Tabb, Wheeler, and Cox dormitories at night."

Rule 6. k. will read as follows:

"Students may not date in men's homes or apartments within a 15-mile radius of the college." (Continued on Page 4)

SENIORS

Horns blasted loudly this morning starting at 6:00 a.m. as the seniors roared off for their traditional "Sneak Day."

Simonini Speaks At VEA Meeting

Dr. R. C. Simonini, Jr., chairman of the department of English, speech, and dramatic art at Longwood College, spoke on English certification requirements at a meeting of the VEA Department of Teacher Education at the University of Virginia on April 30. Dr. Simonini's talk was based on a report of a college committee which had made a two-year study of certification regulations for teachers of English, speech, drama, and journalism.

Recommendations for certification revision include a minimum of 36 semester hours of English including courses in linguistics, literature, and composition. Specific courses in advanced expository writing, modern English grammar, history of the English language, and the teaching of English are cited. Separate endorsements in speech, drama, and journalism are listed as well as combination endorsements with English.

The VEA meeting also heard reports on certification recommendations for history, government and social studies, psychological foundations and professional studies, mathematics, and science.

SCENE FROM ONE-ACT PLAY, 'A MARRIAGE PROPOSAL'

Schlegels Visit College For Scholars Program

Dr. and Mrs. Schlegel went to Bridgewater College Sunday, May 2, as part of an informal visiting scholars program.

Sunday night they spoke to a church group about communism and religion in Russia. Monday morning they lectured to the student body as a whole about their trip to Russia.

During the rest of the day both Dr. and Mrs. Schlegel talked to various classes on subjects pertaining to their respective fields; e. g., Mrs. Schlegel spoke to English classes about James Branch Cabell.

The Schlegels were first asked to speak about their Russian trip by Dr. Raymond Andes, head of the language department at Bridgewater College. His invitation developed into the idea of an informal lecture program.

The Schlegels feel that such exchanging of professors to speak of their experiences to the various groups on campus is an idea which could be carried out in the future. A program like this would be more personally rewarding than regular lectures and would benefit all concerned.

Beorc Eh Thorn Elects Officers For Next Year

Beorc Eh Thorn, Longwood's English honorary society, has elected its officers for next year. The new president is Barbara Garrison, a junior English major from Alexandria. Beverly Roark, a junior English major from Chase City, was elected vice-president. Betty Clegg is the new secretary and Sue Ball is treasurer. Historian for next year will be Anne Wenger.

An installation service was held Tuesday, May 4, at 7:00 p.m. in the Cypress Room. New members were initiated during the same service.

VEA Meeting

Last weekend, from April 30 through May 2, the Department of Teacher Education of the Virginia Education Association held their spring meeting. The place was Charlottesville, at the University of Virginia.

Attending from Longwood College were, from the Education Department, Charles H. Patterson, Chairman, George P. Elliott, Helen L. Page, Rose P. Spicola, Kate G. Trent, and Edwin H. Vassar.

Blanche C. Badger, Chairman of the Department of Mathematics, Charles F. Lane, Chairman of the Department of History and Social Sciences, and Rinaldo C. Simonini were on the program.

THE WAR ON POVERTY:

a message to the Nation's college students...

Inspiring causes have always fired the imagination of students.

Today the United States is committed to the greatest humanitarian cause in its history—a massive counterattack on the causes of poverty, which are robbing 35,000,000 Americans of the opportunities most of us are free to pursue because we had the advantage of a decent start in life. That start has been denied to one-fifth of the nation's people. Thirteen million of them are children.

This is a moment in history for the fortunate to help the least privileged of their fellow citizens. You can help this summer, or for a full year if you choose, as a volunteer in the War on Poverty.

In July and August, 30,000 volunteers will be needed in their own communities to assist four- and five-year-old children of the poor through Project Head Start Child Development Centers. Thousands more are needed to live and work among poor families by enlisting in VISTA, the domestic Peace Corps.

In Head Start, volunteers work side-by-side with teachers, social workers, doctors, and other professionals to give pre-school children advantages which can change the patterns of their lives. Many of these children have never held a doll, never scribbled with crayons. Meager environments have blunted their curiosity. Some are spoken to so rarely that they are unable to form sentences.

Head Start volunteers will read to children, take them on outings to zoos and parks, organize creative play for them, and help build the security and self-confidence they need to succeed in school. The rewards come when a withdrawn child begins to ask questions or responds to the affection for which he has been starved. Without such help, many of these children would be headed for school failure and the poverty cycle which trapped their parents.

Many young people who are 18 or older and can serve for a year enroll for training in VISTA—both to help others and to enlarge their own capacities for teaching, social work, or careers in sociology, economics, law, and other fields.

Home base for VISTA volunteer groups can be a city tenement row, a struggling farm community, an Indian reservation, a migrant labor camp, or a mental hospital. Volunteers may counsel school dropouts, organize recreation programs, tutor children who are behind in school, explore job opportunities for the poor—in short, do whatever is needed to help people find their way up from poverty. Volunteers become respected members of the communities where they work.

The pay is nominal—living expenses plus $50 a month paid at the end of service. But the opportunities are great: you can help pave the way for an America in which the democratic ideal is big enough to encompass everyone.

Will you lend your abilities to people who live in need? Join the War on Poverty today!

VHEA Selects Poole For State President

The Virginia Home Economics Association Convention was held in Roanoke on March 25, 26, and 27. Margaret Poole, attended with other delegates from the Home Economics Club here. Following a breakfast on March 26, the nominating committee met to select the state officers for the coming year. Margaret was chosen along with six other candidates to run for president. After a statement of their qualifications and a question and answer period concerning the candidates' ideas concerning improvement of the state organization, the candidates were presented to the delegates. Another brief question and answer period followed, after which the delegates voted. Margaret was elected President and will select a Secretary to work with her. Margaret stated that she hoped to work out a program involving more chapter members to excite participation.

Margaret reports that the Virginia Home Economics Association Work Shop will be held here at Longwood in October. Members from chapters all over Virginia will attend the work shop.

Pi Omega Pi Banquet

Pi Omega Pi, the national honorary fraternity in Business Education, held a banquet yesterday, on May 4. The guest speaker was Art Walker, from Richmond, formerly of the State Education Board. Currently he is teaching at the Richmond Professional Institute, and is in charge of the Commonwealth Business School.

Phi Beta Lambda Chooses Mann State President

Shirley Mann, Rose Mary Street, twelve other delegates and Phi Beta Lambda's sponsors, Mrs. Taliaferro and Mr. Meyers, attended the State Phi Beta Lambda Convention. The convention was held in Norfolk and took place during the Azalea Festival, April 23, 24, and 25. Shirley was elected by the Longwood Chapter to compete for office. She was elected President by an open election during the Convention. As President, Shirley chose Rose Mary Street as her Secretary.

As president, Shirley will attend the National Phi Beta Lambda Convention which will be held in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 13, 14, and 15. In July Shirley will attend the Massanetta Leadership Conference.

McCombs Pupils Perform Modern Songs In English

In conjunction with the spring music programs that are being presented under the direction of the Music Department of Longwood College, Linda Pritchard and Maria Konvaloff will present a joint vocal recital tomorrow evening in the Student Lounge at 8 p.m.

Linda, who recently won the Miss Longwood contest, is a music education major. Maria, a senior, is majoring in both English and French. Both students are sopranos and students of Mr. James McCombs.

The girls will be accompanied by Karen Gibson and Sharyn Powell. An open invitation is cordially extended to the public.

Music Students Present Recital

An hour of contemporary songs in English was presented by the Longwood music department last Thursday evening in the Student Building lounge.

All those on the program were students of James McCombs, assistant professor of music at Longwood.

The sopranos included Karen Gibson, Phala Legette, Susan Fuller, Lavon Wilson, Gail Milled, Nancy Via, Christine Manning, Billie Sue Board, and Linda Pritchard.

The contraltos were Susan Ramsey and Arnee Sowell. Mildred Johnson, mezzo - soprano, also performed.

Accompanying on the piano were Sharyn Powell, Sylvia Bulter, Elizabeth Spicer, Virginia Poundexter, Joy Cronise, and Sue Pearce.

per we included news, poems, quotes, songs, ads, etc. The headlines were usually one liners which I'll have to admit the layout page plans left something to be desired. In 1923 the paper jumped from three to five columns, and was still not quite as big as our present one. Pictures were quite rare, you know. In November of '23 I remember the big story on the dining fire that destroyed the great hall. Many times the front page spreads showed class spots to be of outstanding interest and importance.

The first time the nameplate had a picture of the Rotunda was back in 1925, and by this time more and more pictures were included, usually of faculty and staff members.

For many years it was the policy of the Rotunda staff to dedicate each issue of the paper to someone. Many people were quite popular for they had ever so many issues dedicated to them.

Even in the 30's the style of writing was rather flowery, but the page plans became more varied. In 1931 the student body voted unanimously to vote for a revised constitution and I recall one time that on page three were listed the names of S. T. C. girls attending H-S-C opening dances.

A 1932 banner head read: Classes Tie In Clash for Color Cup. The greens and reds received 65 points each for the first (and only) time in the college's history that the points came out even. It was quite exciting.

S. T. C. received $40,000 for a swimming pool in 1934 and in that year also the college celebrated its 50th anniversary.

There have been ever so many columns in our pages over the years, such as Busy World Bits, Rotunda Reverberations, Pickings from Pickett, Puddin' 'n Sauce, Sportspourri, and on and on.

The first six-page issue I remember came out in 1940 and it looked quite good if I do say so. Pages two and three finally got away from so much print by breaking up the pages with pictures, etc. Also that year Booré E. H. Thorn sponsored a visit by Robert Frost which was given a very nice write-up.

As in the other publications, the Rotunda's writings expressed the student body's concern for the country and their fellow Americans during the war years. By 1943 the headlines were much more imaginative and the pictures were better.

On January 30, 1946 one of the biggest stories hit the front page — Dr. Jarmar's retirement after 44 years as president of the college. He was one of the most well-loved persons the school had known and it was quite a sad time.

Again in '45 came another 6-pager — the second I can recall in all our years of publishing. The same year, in December, a headline read: She's 87C Take a New Name? President Lancaster stated that the students should have a say in it, so these were some of the suggestions: Patrick Henry College, Dominion College, Jefferson-Henry College, Jarman College, Commonwealth College, Longwood College and Virginia Southern College. At that time Longwood was the name of the college a mile from the campus.

In 1949 the State Board of Education named our college Longwood, the favorite choice of the majority of students, alumni, and faculty members.

The late '40's carried a somewhat awfully good cartoons and the editorials were becoming better and better and reflected more of the student opinion of campus topics.

The Senate, in 1950 killed a bill designed to make Longwood a coed college, so we said goodbye to any further thoughts along the line, by golly. Also that year the paper got still another nameplate.

One page was devoted to the '51-'52 major election nominees, which was the first time I can remember anything like that. And not until the mid sixties did the Rotunda print similar news again — except for encouraging students to vote.

In April of '52 a campus mock election resulted in Eisenhower for President. Then there was the headline that year which showed that rating was still quite a big thing: Rattlers Reveal Rugged Rules for Righteous Rodents Day.

Not played up as much as World War II, but of much consequence, was the news on the Korean War in 1953. By '54 the page plans of the Rotunda looked terribly nice.

The national election was given a front page spread in 1956 as the student body showed a great and growing interest in politics and world events.

In '57 the Little Man on Campus, came to Longwood's campus as the paper became more interesting and varied. The same year there were 195 cases of the flu on campus at one time as the epidemic hit.

By 1959 page two was set up pretty much as it is at present. In '60 a mock election voted Nixon as president. In '61 the first comments were expressed in regard to the county education problem.

'Around the Camp! was added about 1962, and since then the Rotunda has definitely become a more outspoken type of communication, yet not any more audacious than past ages. It reflects a more worldly position than ever before, in keeping with the attitude of today's college students.

If one history had to be cited as the one which most reflected the eras of our school, it would have to be its publications.

"Cotton Candy & Capering Clowns"

German Students Establish Club

Under the direction of Lucilla Kopany, a senior foreign exchange student from Argentina, Longwood's first German Club will become active on the campus.

The sponsor for the new club will be Miss Schorer who is from Germany and is currently teaching courses in both French and German.

The goals of the new club will be to arouse interest in German as a language, to provide a means by which students can become more familiar with the various aspects of the German culture, and to bring German students closer together.

The first meeting will be held tomorrow, Thursday, with the time and place to be announced.

LC Circus Season Commences; Classes Vie For Color Honors

Circus 1965 will unfold as an extra special event as planned by this year's AKG. The format of the traditional Circus has been changed to render a real unified Red n' White - Green n' White Circus.

Chosen to serve as General Chairman for "Cotton Candy and Capering Clowns," is Harriet Anderson, a Biology major from Radford, Virginia. Harriet has served her class as Circus Co-Chairman both her freshman and sophomore years, and her sophomore year she was given the honor of representing the Class of '66 as Animal Trainer. As President of the Junior Class, she worked with her class to help establish a new tradition at Longwood, the Junior Ring Dance. Her senior year finds Harriet once again president of her class.

As General Chairman, Harriet is working with her AKG co-chairmen and class co-chairmen in reorganizing this year's Circus into unified Sister Class Productions.

Each member of AKG has a particular job. Skits are under the direction of Linda Bassford and Jenny McCoy while the clowns will be rehearsed by Bobbie Allen. Barbara Ragland and Judy Candiff have the job of publicity for Circus. Judy has an additional duty in working with the circus and booth judges, and Fran Lipford is in charge of the usherettes. Mary Kay Richeson will direct the Circus Court, and Janet Gormus and Mary Lea Shoulders will oversee the Midway activities. AKG's sponsor, Miss Allen, has the additional duty of advising, encouraging, and providing ready assistance for all the activities.

Circus is planned to continue for two nights this fall, October 22 and 23 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. The skits will not be judged until Saturday night. The Midway, in addition, will not be opened until Saturday night after the final performance.

It is hoped that "Cotton Candy and Capering Clowns" will capture the spirit and enthusiasm of each class and every Longwood girl.

Players, Jongleurs Select Cast; Plan For Semester Productions

by BEVERLEY ROARK

This semester proves to be a very busy season for the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs. They will present William Shakespeare's As You Like It under the direction of Dr. Patton Lockwood and The House of Bernada Alba by Garcia Lorca under the direction of Mr. David W. Wiley.

Both plays have been cast and rehearsals and cast work have begun on As You Like It which will be presented November 4, 5, and 6. Playing the role of Orlando will be Warren Fulton, a Hampden-Sydney freshman. Adam will be played by Terry Hall, also a freshman. Jim Bradner will portray Oliver and Martex. Tom Bradley will play both the parts of Charles and Jacques.

Playing the humorous role of Touchstone is Jim Rhodes. Lebeau is portrayed by Edward Ayers who will also appear as a forester. J. P. Rogers is playing the dual role of Duke Frederick and Duke Senior. Arthur Cox is also cast in a double role as Humen and the Second Lord.

Corin will play dby Don Jones; Amiens by Bill McGuire; and Silvius by Tim Savage. Simmons Armstrong will portray William; and Jerry Butler will play the part of the Second Brother.

Veteran Mary Ann Chinn, remembered for her role as Juliet, will play the female lead, Rosalind. Pamela Richard is cast as Rosalind's cousin, Cecelia.

The other women's roles will be portrayed by Mary Prolifka as Audrey, the rustic country girl; Patti Springman as Phoebe; and First and Second Page by Doris Jenkins and Patsy Stryker respectively.

The House of Bernada Alba scheduled for December is an unusual play in that there are only women's roles. New faces will appear in Jarman as freshmen take the stage for this play.

Playing the role of Bernada is freshman Linda Long. Other freshmen include Donn aBarnes as Magdalena; Joanne Black as the Beggar Woman; and Margaret Lantz as the Little Girl. Cheryl Rose will portray Prudence. The First, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Women will be played by Sarah Wooten, Maribeth Nichols, Carol Porter, and Corma Uhde respectively.

Juniors Carolyn McAdoo and Pat Holmes add to their list of roles by playing Maria Josefa and Augustia. Millie Walker remembered for her role in Blithe Spirit is cast as Poncia. Lynn Gardner will play adela.

Amelia will be played by junior Shirley Timberlake; Martirio will be portrayed by Marian Mowbray, a sophomore. Carole Gibson, the Players' president, is cast as the First Servant. Juniors Courtney Fox and Vicki Jester play the Second and Fifth Women.

Technical work has commenced on As You Like It. Pat Dugger, the technical director for this year, has filled all the crew chief's positions. Rosemary Stone is crew chief in charge of costumes. Joyce Albro is heading the lights crew. In charge of house is Gloria Joyner. Scenery is being headed by Loretta Pridgen. Mary Lou Brooks is in charge of props.

Sound crew chief is Rusty Stephenson. Onda Overbey is heading the make-up crew.

Serving as assistant director is Patsy Thomas. Sharyn Powell is stage manager.

Simkins Lecture Initiates Tenth Annual Institute

Dr. Francis Butler Simkins, Professor of History at Longwood, will be the kick-off speaker in Longwood's tenth annual Institute of Southern Culture. The Institute will begin October 15 at 4:00 p.m. with the place to be announced at a later date.

Dr. Simkins has spoken in most of the past Institutes and is a noted historian of Southern history. Besides writing several chapters for various text books on the history of the South, Dr. Simkins has written several books including The South and The Everlasting South.

The Institute of Southern Culture was established at Longwood College in 1956 to promote the study of traditional aspects of Southern civilization through academic course work, special lectures, and through the publication of research in the field. The lecturers are delivered by both Longwood faculty and visiting professors.

Each year Longwood College published a book containing the Institute lectures for that year. Copies of all past Institute speeches are available in the Library.

Course work on both the undergraduate and graduate levels also provides means for exchange of ideas about the various aspects of Southern regionalism. Among the courses offered are History of Virginia, Southern History, Virginia History, The Old South, Geography of Virginia, The South, Landscape and Folk Culture, the Literature of the South. Anyone who would like further information on the Institute should contact Miss Virginia Bedford, Chairman of the Faculty Committee for the Institute.

Dr. Newman Is New President; Delivers Speech

by SUAN WOLTZ

Early in September, Dr. James H. Newman assumed the presidency of Longwood College. He is the seventh president at this institution, replacing Dr. Francis G. Lankford, who resigned after ten years to accept a position at the University of Virginia.

Dr. Newman comes with a long list of credits. Previously he was executive vice president at the University of Alabama. Also at the university, he has served as dean of men, 1938-42, dean of administration, 1950-56, and interim president in 1957.

He carries 30 years of distinguished service in the cause of higher education. He has been president of the Association of Alabama College Administrators, vice president of the Southern Association of Land-Grant Colleges and State Universities, members of the Southern Regional Education Board and also the Marshall Scholarships Committee for the Southern Region of the United States, a trustee of

New Additions To LC Faculty Include Four LC Graduates

By Phyllis Hummer
Among the new additions to Longwood's faculty this year are four Longwood graduates: Miss Barbara Bishop, art professor; Miss Frances Hamlett, business instructor; Miss Pat Hudson, English professor; and Miss Faye Ripley, physical education instructor.

Miss Bishop, a native of Roanoke, Virginia, is teaching Art Education and Art 111-112. She received her M.F.A. Degree at the University of North Carolina, Greensboro. After graduation from Longwood and before returning as an instructor, Miss Bishop was Chairman of the Art Department at Southern Seminary Junior College, Buena Vista field County, Virginia. Her hometown is Williamsburg, Virginia. As you would expect, Miss Ripley plans for furthering her education, but she may eventually return to school to do work on a doctorate degree. She teaches business subjects: typing, shorthand, and money and banking. Miss Hamlett hasn't had time to pursue any hobbies or activities in the past few years while working on her Master's Degree, but she does enjoy singing in the choir at the Farmville Baptist Church and reading. Speaking about the College, she says . . .

"Longwood hasn't really changed at all. A few relations are different, perhaps, but the same spirit of friendliness and cooperation still prevails. Physical facilities have expanded and improved a great deal in the four years I've been away."

Another Longwood graduate, Miss Pat Hudson, is a new addition to the English department where she teaches English 111, 112, and Linguistics 505. She is extremely interested in the field of linguistics, "a new field which still needs convincing." A native of North Garden, Virginia, just outside of Charlottesville, Miss Hudson spent several summers working with a law company, and as a playground director for the Recreation Department. Leading a highly academic life, she also spent two summers studying speech therapy and linguistics at the University of Virginia. Her student teaching was at E. C. Glass High School in Lynchburg, Virginia, where she continued teaching for 1½ years. She hopes to further her studies in the field of education. Spectator-wise, Miss Hudson is an avid sports enthusiast. Of interesting note — her fiancé is a sports writer! American contemporary novelists top her reading list. Miss Hudson believes the girls at Longwood are better prepared today than when she attended the College. She commends the code of behavior prevailing on the campus — the spirit of the "Longwood Lady" is returning.

Miss Faye Ripley, a 1962 graduate of Longwood College, received her M.S. in Physical Education at the University of Tennessee in 1963. Prior to returning to Longwood, Miss Ripley taught physical education at Matavia High School in Chesterley is very sports-minded. She enjoys playing golf, and plays hockey with the Petersburg Club. Trooper fish and her dog — Grand Oriele also interest her. Miss Ripley commented on the outstanding progress made in the returning upperclassmen. Many girls have gone to the district playoffs, and an increasing number of girls are attending hockey camp in the summer.

AKG Restates Its Objectives To LC Students

With another year unfolding on Longwood's campus, the members of Alpha Kappa Gamma would like to introduce the purposes of AKG to all new students and to restate its purposes to the returning upperclassmen. Alpha Kappa Gamma is a national fraternity giving recognition to those women who have shown outstanding ability in the field of leadership here at Longwood. Its objectives are fourfold:

- (1) To foster high ideals and set up high standards for those women who have prided themselves most eminent in constructive leadership among their fellow students;
- (2) To promote desirable coordination of various college activities and organizations;
- (3) To preserve the ideals and traditions of the institution;
- (4) To bring together the students and faculty on a basis of mutual interest and understanding.

In an attempt to accomplish the above objectives, AKG will sponsor certain events during the coming year. Circus is the major event sponsored annually in the fall, and while this year's Circus will greatly differ from Circuses in the past, it is not a break with tradition but a modernization of one. In addition to Circus, Alpha Kappa Gamma will sponsor "Faculty Firesides" in an effort to acquaint faculty members with students outside of the classroom. This semester, it will also see the selection of new members into AKG from the senior and junior classes at a tapping assembly.

Thus, Alpha Kappa Gamma challenges each of you to take advantage of those activities that will afford an opportunity to develop the rewarding characteristics of leadership. Only by the giving of yourself — your time and your talent — will this goal be achieved.

MISS BISHOP

ta, Virginia. In the summer of 1964 she taught art at Longwood. Outstanding in leadership qualities, Miss Bishop has served as National President of Alpha Kappa Gamma, a national leadership fraternity. In her professional field, Miss Bishop especially enjoys painting and printmaking. Commenting on the College, she says, "Longwood is a special kind of school, with its very friendly atmosphere. It is an excellent education system which is growing day by day."

The Business Department at Longwood has added Miss Frances Hamlett to its staff. A 1961 graduate of Longwood College, Miss Hamlett is a native of Crewe, Virginia. She has resided in Farmville for the past two years. In 1963 she completed the requirements for the Master of Science Degree in Business Education at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. At the present time Miss Hamlett has no immediate

Sprague Writes Book On Life Of Browning

Rosemary Sprague, associate professor of English, has published a book, Forever In Joy. It is a biography of the poet Robert Browning.

Since 1963, Dr. Sprague has worked on her book. She started her study with her previous volume of his poetry. Her current book is the first complete biography of Browning since 1932. Forever In Joy appeared September 15, from Chilton. Dr. Sprague was asked by Chilton to write the non-fiction, aimed especially at young adults of the college and high school levels.

Concerning Browning, Dr. Sprague has this to say: "To me, he speaks to our age in the most vibrant voice of the Victorian poets. He remained optimistic, I mean real optimism, not sentimentalism. He felt there was a plan in this world, and that is why his poetry has a positive tone."

"Browning was thoroughly acquainted with art, music, the theater, all culture. He knew everyone in London of importance during his era."

Dr. Sprague stated that she has tried to "get behind the beard." She also fully covered his marriage to Elizabeth Barrett. She also fully covered his Hollywood fashion. Browning was quite a dashing young man, who died at 35 years of age to be a great poet. He kept at it, and 30 years later, had achieved his goal.

The authors earned her A.B. in Bryn Mawr, and her M.A. and Ph.D. at Western Reserve University.

Longwood Home Ec. Club Sponsors Picnic

The Home Economics Club, of which all Home Ec. majors are members, will sponsor its annual "Get Acquainted" picnic October 12th. In keeping with the nature of the department, the picnic will be held on the lawn of the Home Management House at 5:00 p.m.

The primary function of the picnic is to introduce all of the new freshman home economics majors to the faculty members of that department and to familiarize them with older majors. This is only one of the many activities sponsored by the Home Economics department each year, and all majors old and new are invited to attend.

Beorc Eh Thorn Honorary Group Holds Fall Tea

The members of Beorc Eh Thorn, local honorary English society at Longwood College, will give a tea October 12, in honor of the new freshmen English majors. A short program will be presented, after which refreshments will be served.

The purpose of the tea will be to introduce freshmen to the English faculty, to acquaint them with upper-class majors, to extend their knowledge of the scope of the field of English, and to encourage them to strive for academic excellence with special respect for English.

Many Campus Constructions Raise Numerous Questions

By Janet Fairies

The many constructions taking place on campus have raised numerous questions and one in particular has created slight confusion.

Have you had the frustration of being told in your attempt to circumvent the hungry crowd in the Rotunda, by no less than a well-placed scaffold on the steps leading to the smoker? Or were you among the freshman group who rushed anxiously to dinner at 2:00? Not being sure of the needs to the sons every-one around you was singing, and having nothing better to do than clean your hands, you probably spent thirty-five minutes in quiet contemplation of why the windows were being blocked up with these blocks and cement.

When you finally found out they were adding on an extra entrance to the dining room, you were amazed. "They need another two," or did you smile complacently and say, "they that are good'll be of trouble to go to the last one day." Admittedly, the construction taking place at the additional space in the dining area, as well as the music room.

Although this work is to students' greatest handicap, it is only a small part of the construction work taking place. Two new buildings have been started — a Freshmen's dormitory and a Student Activities Building. The Freshmen's dormitory will house the new campus students. This group will have a separate suite, which will include rest facilities, a kitchen, living room, and living quarters to accommodate approximately twenty girls. Construction of this building is expected to be completed by the end of September.

Because of the differences in structure, no definite date for the construction of the Student Activities Building has been set as yet. This building will have a pool and conditioning unit.

Because the rising of new buildings, new additions are being made to the existing facilities. A second hockey field will be placed beside the new gym and more tennis courts are being added. These courts will eventually be given a hard top. So, one morning if you wake up in an unfamiliar surrounding to find your bed has been trans-

Ageless Reiterates Ratting History

Editor's note:

The following is a continuation of the contributions of Dixie Grant in the form of histories of various organizations and traditions of Longwood. In view of the drastic revision of the "ratting" tradition, we feel that this article would be of special interest to the freshmen.

"Save your nickels, save your dimes, remember all those good old times cause rats aren't ours anymore."

This thing we call freshmen ratting either was not publicized extensively, or it did not fully develop until rather late — as compared with other campus activities. AGELESS is here again to take us to the year 1903, when the first indication of some sort of ratting occurred:

Hello, there. I haven't quite decided whether or not we truly had such a thing as ratting this year. I do remember a terribly funny picture in the annual in which a group of students called Rough on Rats appeared in white sheets, carrying lanterns and pitchforks.

Their motto was: "Teach new girls to be old ones." Their aim: "To do others as we have been done." Their colors: rat gray and new girl blue and green. And of course their yell: Who is that? Who is that? It's a rat!! Catch him! Do him up! Scat!! And there were seven members altogether.

Perhaps the group was merely a glorified anti-rat society (the rodent type of rat, that is.) Oh well. I can't seem to recall.

It wasn't until the early 30's that pictures appeared in the yearbook showing freshmen in the proverbial hat and dressed in some ridiculous costume. When the class of '37 arrived on the campus they were presented shortly thereafter with striped beanies, and under a picture of some of them was the caption: "Freshest of the fresh, greenest of the green-but, what fun!"

In the '36 annual I saw the cutest picture of some rats standing on a wall, by heavens. I really don't think they had any intentions of jumping at all.

The familiar name tags (extra large size of course) were even used back in '37. They gave the little rat's name and where she was from. We had such fun trying to memorize all the names.

During Rat Week in 1942 May Winn was selected the Best Rat. And the rat courts were held right before lunch back then, and of course we had the rats cleaning rooms, etc. Two years later, in '44, we couldn't get the rat caps till January because of the war. But this failed to stop the traditional capping ceremonies — we simply used stocking caps instead.

Do you know that on Rat Day in the late '40's the freshmen used to perform out on front campus? Oh yes. And it was ever so hysterical.

Because of the Thanksgiving hockey game between freshmen and sophomores, the wearing of rat caps caps was quite a big thing around our alma mater awhile back. And the game usually made the front page of the paper by golly. Even as late as 1951 the hockey game was one of the biggest events of the year.

Under a beastly funny picture in the annual in '52 was a caption: "Whatta we praising?" They went absolutely mad over pictures, you know.

Oh, in '53 I remember the rats were dressed as angels and wore halos and robes. They were ever so cute. The next year the freshmen performed in front of the library for Rat Day. They were hula dancers that year.

In '61 the rats carried huge green lollipops with a big '63 on them and were dressed like little kids. The next year came along and with it the class of '65 who were true rats — complete with 64-inch long tails, red ears, red skirts, and pieces of "cheese" with the names of 64 sophomores on them.

All the way up through that year and the next it was not uncommon to see freshmen rats lined up against the wall spouting off some almost incoherent phrases of praise to the sophomore ratters.

I terribly enjoyed counting out the correct number of peas on my plate and stating that the different kinds of food on the table were all one color and trying to keep all the names of the Top Rats straight and performing numerous crazy stunts.

Oh, it was so frightening on Hell Night when the sophomores would wind their way around the Rotunda and yell at the rats, then run through the halls making them count posts, recite poetry, and sing laundry lists, etc., etc.

But the week ended at last, and sadly, with the song "Rats aren't ours anymore."

Gone are days of ratting. Gone are the Top Rats. Gone is Hell Night. Gone are the rats.

Library Paintings

Each year the library makes available to the students art reproductions which may be rented for the duration of one semester at the nominal cost of one dollar each. Although some of the reproductions have been rented, there are still several available. Students may inquire about the paintings at the main check-out desk.

NDEA Sponsors Eng. Institute Last Summer

The end of the summer brought the end of Longwood College's summer institute for Virginia teachers of high school English, which was sponsored by federal funds through the Office of Education. From over 300 proposed summer institutes from various colleges and universities throughout the nation, only 105 were selected to receive funds. Longwood and the University of Virginia were the only two in Virginia to participate.

The Institute was designed to provide summer training for Virginia English teachers taking courses for either graduate or undergraduate credit. Fifteen of the 35 participants are furthering their graduate study at Longwood this year.

The professors who conducted the Institute were Mr. Ellington White, Dr. Dorothy B. Schlegel, Mrs. Foster B. Grehsam, and Dr. R. C. Simonini, Jr., director of the Institute. Courses offered included literary criticism, advanced composition, teaching of English, and linguistics.

On the basis of all evaluations and statistics thus far compiled, the summer Institute was a definite success, and plans are already being considered for next summer's Institute.

Organ Students Attend Concert; Heiller Plays

A group of sixteen Longwood organ students were in Richmond on Friday evening, October 1st, to hear the Bach concert played at the University of Richmond by Anton Heiller. Heiller, now in his early forties, is acknowledged as the finest Bach scholar-performer of the present day. American Fulbright students have been able to study with him during the past fifteen years; however his teaching is now restricted to ten students at the Vienna State Academy of Music.

The Longwood students were guests of University dorm residents who supplied a great deal of hospitality — and clean sheets! After attending a sell-out E. Power Biggs Master Class in Arlington last year, the organ students were "camped" in the chair closets to the organ bench at 8:00 a.m. on Saturday morning! The class began at 9:00 but anyone who came that late was compelled to perch on the railing of the loft.

For three very concentrated hours, Heiller lectured and performed the entire group of Chorale Preludes which organists call "The Liturgical Year." The instrument at the University is frequently referred to as the first organ in Virginia. The builder — Rudolf von Beckerath — is presently contracted to deliver a similar one to the Presbyterial Church of Farmville in 1968.

Welcome '69ers

The staff of The Rotunda is dedicating this first issue of the newspaper to the Class of '69. The purpose of this issue is threefold: 1) to welcome you to the Longwood campus, 2) to introduce you to some of the standards and ideals of Longwood, and 3) to attempt to help you realize that we understand the problems you will encounter with "campus shock," and perhaps provide some helpful advice for your first year.

You may discover, as you become acquainted with your fellow classmates, that you are a widely varied group. However, there is one common problem facing you all: you must learn to balance your newly acquired freedom with the confinements of academic demands in an atmosphere totally unfamiliar to you.

Perhaps the most difficult part of your education will come when you find that your deep-rooted prejudices, moral, religious, and intellectual ideas will be constantly exposed to scrutinization and questioning both on your own part and on the part of others. Your classrooms, recreation rooms, and dormitories will be the arenas in which you will be forced to examine and defend yourself.

Undoubtedly, this will be a painful part of your education, but in the future, it will prove to be the most vital part. Nothing is more valuable in the educative process than self-introspection.

You will contact and converse with fellow students who represent different areas of the country, maintain varied standards of values, and follow numerous standards of morality. Because of your friends and the challenges they pose before you, you may be forced to revise your previously maintained ideas, cast out some of them completely, and perhaps incorporate some new ones.

The result of all this, we hope, will be a thorough and accurate awareness of yourself. Education is awareness, and the starting point for awareness of anything (be it the complex problems of science, history, philosophy, or literature) is an awareness of oneself.

Nevertheless, we the upperclassmen, want you to know that we understand the conflicts and problems with which you will be confronted during your first year as a college student. And we hope that you will accept to the fullest advantage your opportunity for an education of yourself as well as of your courses.

A Word Of Thanks

We would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Colleagues and the Associates for the wonderful Freshman Week-end that they planned to substitute the former ratting program. We also wish to extend special thanks to Dr. Carolyn Wells, who worked many long and hard hours with the Colleagues and Associates.

We feel that the week-end took a long step in the right direction in instilling the freshmen with the spirit of Longwood and made them ever aware of the "college atmosphere" to which it will be their greatest challenge to adjust.

Seniors Elect Temporary Reps

by Mary Edgerton

The Class of '66 held its class meeting in Wheeler Rec September 27, where it elected three members of the class to offices. Helena Hall and Anna M. Chappell were chosen to serve on the Legislative Board for nine weeks while the regular representatives are student teaching. Madelyn Roethke was elected to represent the class on the Elections Board.

Helena, an energetic Physical Education major, keeps herself busy with many activities on campus. Besides playing various intramural sports, varsity hockey, participating in Circus, representing her class in the May Day Court last year, she is also president of Orchesis. Because of her past experience of serving on House Council, her present membership on the A. A. Council, and other activities, her class feels that she can serve them well.

The Class of '66 also has an able representative in Ann M. Chappell. Ann has worked on Circus, May Day, and participated for three years in the Choir of which she was secretary. She is presently secretary of Lychnos, the honorary organization in Science and Mathematics, and first vice president of Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority.

Plus a double major in Elementary Education and History and Social Science, Madelyn Roethke is an active member in Kappa Delta Pi, Pi Gamma Mu, and the Student Education Association. She is also treasurer of Sigma Sigma Sigma Sorority and was chairman of Founder's Day last year.

Senior Capping Officially Held In Auditorium

Dr. James Newman, president of the college, capped the members of the senior class in ceremonies held at 7:15 on October 4 in Jarman Auditorium.

Sylvia Butler played the Alma Mater as the seniors marched in, accompanied by their little sisters. The program began with a duet sung by Carol Gibson and Tinky White. Following the duet Reverend Orner led the devotional portion of the program. At the conclusion of the devotions, the seniors and their little sisters filed on stage led by the class officers. Dr. Newman took the senior's cap from her little sister, then each senior knelt as he placed the cap on her head. After the 135 seniors were capped, Dr. Newman spoke to the assembly. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the officially capped class of 1966 marched from the auditorium as the Alma Mater was played.

The senior capping ceremony officially marked the opening of the senior year for the class of 1965-1966. The senior capping preceded the fall Convocation held Tuesday, October 5, 1965.

Longwood Assumes NSA Membership

BY ANN CASTEEN

Longwood College will assume an active membership in the National Student Association, an association of some 300 colleges and universities throughout the country. After thoroughly investigating all phases of the Association and attending the Carolinas-Virginia Regional meetings, the Student Government Association feels that it would be to the advantage of the student body for Longwood to become a member of N. S. A.

Briefly N. S. A. is a "national student organization concerned with improving opportunities and conditions for the college student." The advantages to member schools are numerous. The Student Government has access to the Student Government Information Service (SGIS). This is a library of government affairs and covers problems of student governments and solutions to such problems obtained from over 500 member schools. In addition, faculty and students can find thorough information on national and international affairs. The 30 member staff of N. S. A. is available to visit member schools through N. S. A. publications.

Available to individual students through N. S. A. are the services of Educational Travel, Incorporated (ETI) and the N.S.A. Insurance Trust. ETI makes available educational trusts as well as International Student ID cards purchased at a reduced rate.

NSA offers services to specific organizations by supplying literature and active outlets for talented and interested students.

Joseph S. Clard, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, says "With the rising level of student interest in the social, economic, and political problems surrounding their academic world, I salute the National Student Association for their leadership as a vital and constructive voice for the American student." Longwood College can now claim a part of this student leadership.

Newman Club Plays Host To World-Famous Speaker

The Newman Clubs of Longwood and the University of Virginia will have Brother Humberto Almazan as their speaker tonight at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

Brother Humberto Almazan, of the Missionaries of the Holy Apostles, is a fine dish-washer, painter, floor-scrubber, chauffeur, student, and seminarian. Ten years ago, he was hounded and harassed, just as the Beatles, for his autograph, for a piece of his shirt, for a hank of his hair, for any of the treasures hoarded by ardent fans.

And how does one account for this strange descent from the stars to the earth? From the dazzling premier in Paris, Rome, Mexico City to the humbling tasks of housekeeping near Catholic University? From overstocked closets full of beautiful suits to a simple black cassock?

The call to work for God, to serve as one of His priests came to Brother Humberto when he was at the peak of his career as an actor, just after he received a Mexican Academy Award for his performance in the movie, "The Young Juarez," and on call to perform in another movie in the States with Anthony Quinn.

His vocation did not strike like lightning. A long struggle with himself and his conscience finally convinced him, and God was the winner.

Humberto Almazan is descended from an aristocratic line of Mexico; his late father was an architect, his mother a brilliant businesswoman. His brother serves in the diplomatic corps of Mexico, his sister, married to an American, is one of Mexico's great beauties.

While attending the University of Mexico, Humberto switched classes from the study of architecture, to the school of drama, much to the distress of his parents. Eventually, a thrilling performance as "Puck" in an outstanding production of "Midsummer Night's Dream" brought him an offer to receive an irresistible scholarship to study at the Conservatoire Dramatique in Paris, which he promptly accepted, not knowing a word in French. After a few months in the City of Lights, he spoke the language fluently, and later performed on the state with some of France's most talented stars. From there to Italy, with roles in pictures with Sophia Loren, Anna Magnani, and Ingrid Bergman, then back to the stage in Paris, to London for a half year, and then back to Mexico City, where he starred on television, on the stage, in movies.

When Humberto decided the priesthood was for him, he gave everything to the poor. Sold his home in Cuernavaca, his swimming pool, the wardrobe, cars, everything. When he left Mexico for the seminary in Peru at the age of 35, he had the clothing on his back, and for the first time in his life felt truly free and happy. Now he would no longer be working for himself, but for God.

The story of his eventual transfer from the seminary in Peru to Canada, and to the order of priests made up of men with belated vocations is one Brother Humberto will tell you himself. His adventures are enough to write a book about, but they are only the beginning, for he still hopes to make just one more movie before he is ordained to the priesthood. Work has begun on a movie of the life of Padre Pro, the martyred priest of Mexico, and the star will be, God willing, Brother Humberto.

Brother Humberto has spoken in the past years to many audiences, in schools, Army posts, in Churches, in homes. Last August he addressed the members of the National Catholic Theatre Conference assembled in convention in Detroit. This meeting led to many requests for his message, and his great gift of speaking has given inspiration to thousands in all walks of life.

Capacity Frosh Class Finishes Orientation

The arrival at Longwood College of 484 new students marked the second consecutive year that Longwood has scheduled a "capacity plus" enrollment of some 1,450 students. Of the new students, 446 are freshmen and 38 are transfers from other colleges.

President James H. Newman stated that by housing 1380 students in dormitory space designed to accommodate no more than 1230, it is possible to enroll 1450 students -- an additional 150 beyond normal enrollment capacity. Included in the 1450 enrollment figure are some 70 students who are residents of the area and live off campus.

Reflecting the enrollment pressure placed upon all state-supported colleges, President Newman noted that 1958 applications for admission this fall were received prior to February 5 when it became necessary to return all subsequent applications without consideration. Last year 1548 high school graduates applied for admission, of whom 439 were admitted to the fall session; an additional 30 transfers made a total of 469 new students in 1964.

New students, including freshmen and transfers, began an intensive six-day orientation program on September 16 under the direction of Dr. Ruth B. Wilson and student leaders representing the Student Government Association and other campus organizations. Janet Gormus, a senior from Richmond, was orientation chairman.

During the orientation period, there were tests, physical examinations, entertainment and numerous meetings with President Newman, staff members and the faculty.

On Monday all new students and some 200 seniors registered. Sophomores and juniors registered on Tuesday. Classes for everyone began on Wednesday with the exception of 120 future teachers who are away eight weeks on practice teaching assignments.

Commenting upon the high academic standing of the freshman class, Mrs. Mary W. Watkins, director of admissions, indicated that the new group as a whole may prove to be the best prepared freshmen ever to enter Longwood.

"Of 466 freshmen admitted to the fall term, some 82 per cent ranked academically in the top one-fourth of their high school graduating class. Looking at it another way, nearly one-third of our new freshmen ranked in the upper 10 per cent of their class," the admissions officer stated.

Alumnae Council

The Fall Council of Longwood College held its annual meeting at the Alumnae House on Friday and Saturday, October 1 and 2.

Dr. James H. Newman spoke to council members on Friday evening. It was his first meeting with the group since becoming president of the college Sept. 1.

Mrs. Eugene P. Crumpler, of Roanoke, Va., president of the Alumnae Association, presided over two business sessions at which council members heard committee reports and made plans for financing the association's activities in behalf of alumnae and the college during the new academic year.

Specific fiscal plans were presented by Mrs. Charles W. Apich, Jr., of Richmond, first vice-president and chairman of the annual fund appeal. Three committee reports were made: alumnae house - Mrs. Fred Hanbury, Sr., of Farmville; snack bar - Mrs. Herbert H. Good-

Longwood Wins First Games Of Season; William And Mary Bows Down Before L.C. Team

by KAREN RUDER

Last Saturday, Oct. 2, the Longwood Ladies faced William and Mary for the first varsity hockey game of the season. The first game proved to be quite a fight. The teams were very well matched as could be seen in the final score of 1 to 0, our favor. The starting lineup included Carolyn Cline, Ginny Morton, Helena Hall, Connie Gallahan, Dianne Davis, Jayne Eddy, Frances Stewart, Nevis Born, Jean Hendricks, Pat Lyddane, and Barbara Ragland, who scored the winning point.

The defense of both teams was very strong, and the passing was excellent. Credit goes to Pat Lyddane, the Longwood goalie, who played a terrific game. The second game carried Longwood to its second victory with a final score of 4 to 0. Three goals were made by center forward, Vannie Gunther, and one by freshman wing, Anna Petis.

Captains of the first and second teams are Barbara Ragland and Pat Brown respectively. The varsity hockey managers are Connie Gallahan and Jean Hendricks. Other members of the varsity team include Ruth Limbrick, Rusty Stephenson, Judy Bateman, Pat Dugger, Peggy Wilkins, Nancy Maxey, Pat Ingram, Sandy Long, Lynn Rochal, Leslie Sedgwick and Donna Tribbey. It might be an interesting fact to note that on this day of great victory, two other great events were taking place: the new varsity coach, Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt was experiencing her first varsity game and also celebrating her birthday. Happy Birthday, Mrs. Bobbitt, and congratulations, Longwood Ladies.

Hockey Enthusiasts Learn From Experts

by Pat Brown

The first week in September twenty Longwood hockey enthusiasts attended a hockey clinic at Camp Tegawitha located high in the Pocono Mountains in Pennsylvania. The low temperatures at night ranged from 40 to 45 degrees — ideal for hockey but murder on our sore muscles which resulted from playing hockey 4-5 hours each day.

For those of us who had the endurance and stamina, lacrosse was taught after breakfast and lunch for one hour. Hockey sessions in the morning consisted of an hour of drill work followed by a game with one of the other northern colleges and high schools. In the afternoon, all teams played two games apiece. The coaching was the best that hockey has to offer. All of the instructors were or have been either members of the United States Field Hockey Association, or had been members of the United States or Great Britain touring teams!

Miss Heigho, who has played goalie on the British touring team for several years, gave special training in goalie techniques. Vonnice Gros, a member of the U. S. hockey team and captain of the U. S. lacrosse team, provided the spectators with a few exciting moments when she, playing the fullback position, went into the striking circle and scored twice in the same game.

Miss Constance Applebee, who had previously given up the direction of the camp a year before, led Vesper services on Sunday night and graced us by her presence later that week by giving us a theory class on defensive and offensive tactics. She also gave us the history of how she brought hockey to America from England at the turn of the Twentieth Century. Miss Applebee, who is in her early 90's, is still as spry and alert as always.

Carolyn Cline is majoring in physical education and is very active on the Longwood tennis courts. Carolyn, a native of Alexandria, is a member of the A. A. Council and is playing varsity hockey this fall.

Serving as captain of the hockey team, Barbara Ragland is also a member of AKG and the varsity tennis team. Barbara, a native of Richmond, is also majoring in physical education.

Frances Stewart, a member of the Judicial Board, is another physical education major. At the present time Frances, who is from Arlington, is a member of the hockey team.

Carolyn Burnette, a familiar figure on the hockey field and basketball court, is a physical education major from Lynch Station.

Phyllis Collins, whose home is in Alexandria, is a physical education major who is active in all facets of the Athletic Association.

Jayne Eddy, an enthusiastic member of the A. A. Council, is also a member of the hockey squad. Winchester is the home of this physical education major.

Geri Gerhardt this year is president of the H2O Club. She has been an active member of the A. A. since she came from Charlottesville to Longwood to major in Physical Education.

Phyllis Lasley, a physical education major from Henric, is a very vivacious and accomplished member of Orchestris and other A. A. activities.

Ginny Morton, coming to Longwood from Newport News as a physical education major in her sophomore year, is a member of the A. A. Council, the varsity hockey team, and the Longwood Players.

Karen Ruder, Sports Editor of the Rotunda, is a physical education major who hails from Rochester, N. Y. In her career at Longwood College, she has taken an active part in both varsity and class sports.

Blazers are awards to be worn proudly, for they exhibit a great deal of time, hard work, and energy on the part of these outstanding members of the Class of '66.

Tours Show Students Variety Of Activities

by Linda Dyer

The Athletic Association presented their annual A. A. Demonstration on Thursday, September 23. The program was organized under the direction of Barbara Ragland, a senior physical education major.

The Demonstration consisted of explanations and illustrations of the various sports and recreations offered at Longwood College. The observers were divided into three groups for a tour of the various demonstrations. The tour began at the hockey field with a brief explanation of the procedure.

Next, the observers were conducted to the swimming pool. Geri Gerhardt and Kathy Kolva presented the routine they did at the University of North Carolina last spring entitled "Sea Fever." At this time the students and the various members of the faculty and administration were informed that this year for the first time we will have a varsity swimming team. Miss Heintz, head of the Physical Education Department, will coach the team.

Following the demonstration, the spectators proceeded to the

Towel Room Offers Recreation Articles For Student Use

A new system for the use of recreational equipment has been announced. Anyone who wishes to use the golf clubs, tennis rackets, ping pong equipment, basketballs, volleyballs and nets, etc. may check them out in the towel room of the Old Gym locker room.

These articles may be checked out between 10:00 A.M. and 6:00 P.M. If the equipment will be in use after 6:00 P.M., the student who checked it out is responsible for that equipment and must return it the following morning.

It is requested that articles not be checked out between twenty of the hour and five after the hour since this is the time when bathing suits and towels will be given out for the classes. Everyone is urged to take advantage of this new system. It is for your benefit and only you can make it worthwhile.

Spotlight Lands On Allen; Senior Leads Active Life

Did you ever notice a certain senior delivering papers at 6:30 in South Cunningham? Well that's Bobbi Allen, our our Spotlight of the week. Bobbi is a biology major from Roanoke. As a freshman, she was vice president of the red and white class of 1966, and as a senior, she proved her worth by being chosen Head Top Rat.

Bobbi has been an officer in the Athletic Association for two years. Last year she was treasurer, and this year she is serving as President. She has played class hockey, volleyball, basketball, and also shot for the varsity archery team. Her interest in swimming has shown itself by her participation in the Water Pageant and in being a member of the H2O Club.

Last year, Bobbi was tapped in Alpha Kappa Gamma, national leadership fraternity. Last week, she received a white blazer for her outstanding participation in sports. She has worked on May Day and Circus, where she has been a clown for three years. Bobbi is a member of Alpha Sigma Tau of which she is historian.

Congratulations to Bobbi Allen, the Rotunda's choice for Sports Spotlight!

Phi Beta Lambda Receives Honors

by ROSEMARY STREET

The national Phi Beta Lambda convention was held this past June in Cincinnati, Ohio. As representative delegates from the state and local chapters, the meeting was attended by Shirley Mann, State PBL President, Rose Mary Street, State Secretary, and Mrs. Ruth Taliaferro, State Sponsor. The Virginia Chapter of Phi Beta Lambda will be long remembered on the national scale because of its excellent standing in the competitive events. Representatives from various chapters throughout the state walked away with five of the top honors bestowed. Just two of these included second place award in the nation for extemporaneous speaking, and national first place award in vocabulary relay.

The Longwood chapter started the semester with a coke party for the freshmen and transfer business majors. In this way the prospective members were introduced to the other business majors as well as being oriented in the functions of Phi Beta Lambda. At this gathering the business majors were invited to attend the annual PBL picnic held at Mrs. Taliaferro's home on October 15.

Swimming Tryouts

Tryouts for the Varsity Swimming team will start soon. All those who are interested should listen for announcements to be made in the dining hall.

Alumnae chapter reports were made by representatives of Farmville, Blackstone, Lynchburg, Roanoke, Valley (Staunton and Waynesboro), Richmond, Newport News, Suffolk, Philadelphia, Pa., Washington, D. C., and Greensboro, N. C. were recently elected to represent the faculty on the council: Dr. Janet L. Binger, Barbara Bishop, M. Henry Bittinger and Frances W. Gee. President James H. Newman, Dr. Richard B. Brooks, dean of the college, and Dr. Ruth B. Wilson, dean of women, are ex officio members. Jacob H. Wamsley, business manager and treasurer, and F. Edger Thomas, Jr., director of public relations and development, also attended the council sessions.

President Newman, Dr. Frances Brown Attend American Council On Education

By Kay Young

Dr. Frances R. Brown and Dr. James Newman are presently attending the forty-eighth annual meeting of the American Council on Education. The meeting is being held this year at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D. C., October 6-8.

Following a study by the Commission on Academic Affairs in 1963, the Board of Directors of the Council decided early in 1964 to devote the 1965 annual meeting to the theme "The Student in Higher Education." It is their plan to assist colleges and universities in their search for answers to such questions as "Who are these young men and women?" "Why did they go to college?" "Where are they heading?" "How can higher education serve their needs and help them toward their goals?"

The Board of Directors of the Council felt this meeting to be of such an importance that they published a pamphlet containing the background material leading up to this meeting. A copy of this was sent to the delegates. Such topics discussed included

"Neglect of Students as a Historical Tradition," "Rights and Responsibilities in the Student-College Relationship," and "Perspectives on the Student and His College."

The meeting will begin with a general opening session on Thursday morning. Panel discussions will follow under the broad topic "The Learning Environment." Subtopics will consist of "Institutional Expectations and Influences," "Societal Expectations and Influences," "Some Concepts of Student Academic Freedom," "Student Involvement in Educational Policy," "Stress in the College Experience," "Due Process and College Student," "Effective Teaching: The Role of New Educational Media," "Effective Teaching: The Relevance of Curriculum," and "Effective Teaching: The Role of the Professor."

On Friday morning a plenary session will discuss "Higher Education and The Moral Revolution."

William Friday, President of the University of North Carolina is this year's Chairman of American Council on Education. He will preside at the plenary session Thursday night and at the business session Friday morning. The council closes after the luncheon session on Friday.

MRS. NELL GRIFFIN

Planning Board Takes Griffin

by Barbara Melton

Longwood College is proud to announce that Mrs. Nell Griffin, Chairman of the Department of Home Economics at Longwood, has recently been selected to help Virginia devise a statewide plan of economic and resource stabilization. The program has come as a result of a possible nuclear strike on the United States.

Mrs. Griffin was among 200 representatives of business and industry, agriculture, labor and consumer interests who convened in Richmond, September 22, to call their first conference on Emergency Resource Planning.

An article in the Farmville Herald described the board as an "emergency planning organization (which) would replace temporarily federal government agencies rendered ineffective in the wake of an enemy attack of major nuclear proportions. It would work in conjunction with the National Office of Emergency. It is charged with developing plans for control of resources at the federal level for any emergency that might arise."

The task of the planning board is to devise methods of "emergency control and conservation in water, transportation, fuels and gas, manpower, health, food, electric power, construction, and housing."

Mrs. Griffin's immediate task on the board is to serve as a consumer representative in order to develop an emergency price control plan. Her particular subgroup will formulate "recommendations for a state plan of quickly giving the state and individuals a measure of stability and control in the sale and purchasing of goods."

In a speech before the group, Governor Harrison said that the responsibility of the group would be "the restoration of economic stability, and, as nearly as possible, of life as we know it . . . In a very real sense, our function is planning for chaos."

the Phi Gamma Delta National Educational Foundation, and president of the National Association of Deans and Advisors of Men. In recognition of leadership, the University of Alabama conferred the doctorate degree on Dr. Newman in 1957.

In 1929, Dr. Newman graduated from the Alabama university with his A.B., and in 1930 received his masters degree in political science. During his time as a student, he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Omicron Kappa, Jansons, Alabama Quadrangle, and also the winner of the Algernon Sydney Award.

LaFayette, Alabama, is Newman's home town. He is married and has two children. Longwood gained Dr. Newman officially last May, when he was unanimously elected to the Board of Visitors. They are under recommendation of a search committee, consisting of John Whitehead, of Radford, as head, Mrs. Mosby, of Norfolk, and E. Powell, of Richmond. Miss Virginia E. Bedford was head of the faculty committee that selected prospective names for the search committee.

NEW YORK — The discovery of a new oil field in the last fall was no overnight success, Oil Facts points out, a company which found it had spent 30 years and more than $10 million searching in that state. During those years the company had drilled holes in Florida.

Maryland Professor Speaks On Sex Mores & Morality On Campus

The Rotunda likes to broaden the scope of its own news coverage by scanning the events that have occurred on the campuses of various colleges and universities throughout the country. Among the most interesting events was a seminar held recently at Johns Hopkins University entitled "Sex Mores and Morality on the Campus."

Dr. Warren Johnson, professor of health education at the University of Maryland, spoke of students' great interest in all matters pertaining to sex but also of their often woeful ignorance. He stressed the difficulty of securing meaningful data on the sexual activities of college students.

However, his assumption is that there is a greater degree of freedom of sexual expression among college students today. Among the factors contributing to this, in his view, are greater possibilities for privacy (the automobile, for example) and the fact that ours is a "sex-saturated" culture.

The other resource person for the seminar was Dr. William Hamilton, professor of Christian theology and ethics at Colgate-Rochester Divinity School. Dr. Hamilton pointed out that sexual relationship by its very nature is a relationship of commitment and involvement and that, therefore, sex without commitment is truncated, superficial and ultimately unsatisfying.

Correlated with sexual promiscuity are the disappearance of guilt, the coming to the fore of normlessness or anomie, and the separation of sexual expression from the "self." Dr. Hamilton also made the point that the modern middle-class family is no longer an effective means for educating young persons in the matter of sexual ethics.

He felt that the universities and colleges could not be unconcerned about values and would have to assume more of the family function of sex education. (Dr. Johnson's courses in sex education at the University of Maryland would be a case in point.)

In a more positive vein, Dr. Hamilton welcomed what he called the "moral pluralism" which is now present in American society. While such pluralism removes any head start which the professional anti-Puritan might have, Dr. Hamilton seemed to feel that a responsible sexual ethic had a better chance of a fair hearing now than might have been true in the immediate past.

In an effort to arrive at a Christian sexual ethic, Dr. Smith's report to the undergraduates concluded, "Dr. Hamilton felt that a new legalism or post-Puritan moralism would be ineffective and that an adequate ethic of personal sexual responsibility should be developed with reference only to 'obedience to Christ.'" old gym. Here, basketball was demonstrated by the varsity team, members of Orchestras presented a modern dance number, and information was given concerning class basketball and volleyball.

The tour continued through the locker rooms to Tabb Rec where information concerning free bowling offered to Longwood Students was given. All students may bowl twice a week, three free games in the daytime, or two at night. A demonstration of table tennis was also presented.

The tour then traveled to the circle behind Tabb Dormitory. Instructions concerning free golf at Longwood Estate and bicycles available to the students was related here.

Next, the observers were conducted to the tennis courts where a set of tennis was presented. The students were urged to participate in class tennis this coming spring.

The tour ended at the hockey field. Announcements were made about class softball next spring. The students were informed that a new sport has been added to the athletic program — lacrosse. Lacrosse is a popular sport in northern colleges. Some of the basic techniques of the game were demonstrated.

This was followed by a brief discussion on varsity and class archery. Diane Davis holds the school record — 499 points out of a possible 648.

Last on the agenda was a demonstration of field hockey by members of the varsity and class teams.

The purpose of the A. A. Demonstration was to familiarize the freshmen with the wide variety of athletic activities in which they may participate throughout their four years as Longwood students.

Dr. Schlegel Takes Trip;

Dr. Dorothy B. Schlegel, Professor of English, will deliver a speech entitled "New Trends in October 9, to District C of the Teaching of Composition," Association of Teachers of English. The meeting will be held at Lee Davis High School in Hanover County.

English composition is one of Dr. Schlegel's special fields, and she has combined her ideas in her book entitled Writing From Research.

ingwood professor Emily E. Irum, Associate Professor of Physical Education, specialist '11, and researcher in Kinetics, will preside over a one-hour lecture-demonstration movement underlying the total program of Physical Education. Teachers from District C of the area will convene at Lee-Davis School, Mechanicsville, October 9, starting at 9:30 a.m. until 2:30. Mrs. Barbara Firestone of West Point High School will be in charge of the program for the annual district conference. Teachers of the Richmond areas are invited as well as those from the district, which includes Lees City-New Kent, Chester-Goochland, Hanover, King of the Hills, King and Queen, and Mattaponi.

morning session will be divided into three sections. In that hour, Mrs. Landrum will define movement as an all-around basic increment within all education. Movement will be clarified beyond the limits of activity. The psychological climate for learning becomes the problem of the teacher and her students. Discovery of five fields of study relative to movement as an integral in physical education changed the study of human movement in physical education to an interdisciplinary study of the human sciences and the human arts. Movement will be developed from scientific bases beyond the traditional kinesiological approach into human connotations that define purpose, problem, meaning and understanding for teacher and student. Dual and divergent concepts will be defined and re-defined in a movement context, i.e., as exercise and movement, motor learning as compared to movement learning, and kinesthesia as becoming a term of plurality or kinesthesia.

In the second demonstration an emphasized and extended unit of movement reflecting beginning modern dance for the senior high school student will clarify the meaning of movement in symbolical and art form. Herein the basic expressive component of man is used to clarify an expressive feeling in all learning through meaning and understanding that comes from one's own problem solving. Development of a phrase of music paralleling a phrase of movement or manipulation of a technique compares to a basic skill pattern in space in other areas. Exploring and manipulating space, levels, techniques and movement into meaning and understanding form is the equivalent problem of the dancer as compared to the sports expert.

Among the many changes around the campus of Longwood College this fall is the new library book check-out procedure that has recently been initiated. The new process will save much time and work involved in getting new books out onto the shelves, and will save time in checking them out of the library. Under the new system, cards, date slips, and card pockets will be eliminated from the back of the books. Instead, students will be required to fill out another card containing such information as the call number, accession number, author, and title of the book, which will then be filed until another student desires to check out the book.

Rec swims will be held for the use of everyone on Mondays and Wednesdays at 5 P. M. Tuesdays and Thursday at 10:00 P. M., and Saturdays at 2:00 P. M.

One of the busiest of the faculty these days is Mr. Foster B. Gresham, Acting Chairman of the English Department. Mr. Gresham has made several trips in the past two weeks, all of them connected with the promotion of the field of English.

Plans are already in the making for Longwood to be a participant in the program. However, Longwood will again have to submit another proposal to the Office of Education for evaluation. Past performance in the program is no guarantee of future institutes.

After returning from Colorado Mr. Gresham proceeded to Richmond where he attended a statewide conference of English department chairmen and supervisors of high schools. He led a group discussion on the subject of the role of the English department chairman as a supervisor and coordinator.

Also in attendance at this meeting was Dr. Rinaldo C. Simoni, Jr., Chairman of the Department of English at Longwood. He served as moderator for a symposium on the topic of "The New Role of English Department Chairmen."

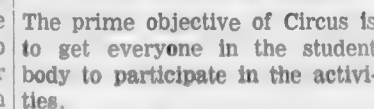

This past week-end Mr. Gresham traveled to Radford College where he spoke to District M of the Association of Teachers of English on the subject of "Oral Composition in High School English Programs." The following day he delivered the same speech to the English section of District D of the Virginia Education Association.

Mrs. Nell H. Griffin, chairman of the department of Home Economics at Longwood College was guest speaker at a meeting of the Appomattox Woman's Club on Monday, Oct. 4, at 7:30 p.m. Her topic was "Encouraging Young People to Seek Further Education."

Another year rolls around as Longwood students begin to organize the 1965 production of "Cotton Candy and Capering Clowns," the theme of this year's Circus. For those who are not familiar with the tradition of Circus, it is equivalent to homecoming at other campuses, although it involves no teams from other schools. The teams in Circus competition are the individual as well as sister classes.

In order to coordinate the efforts of the individual classes, each class has selected its own chairman who will work under the direction of the general chairman, Harriet Anderson.

Although the freshmen have not been on our campus very long, they have come to know Emily Gillespie, whom they have elected to serve as their chairman. Emily graduated from Granby High School in Norfolk, and her main interest is art.

The sophomores have found their leader in Pam Spigle, a French major from Ridgmond. A member of Delta Zeta social sorority and the Granddaughters Club, Pam is currently serving as vice-president of her class. She was one of the Colleagues, a member of the French Club, and a former member of House Council.

The following is a schedule for the election of Major and Minor Officers:

MAJOR OFFICERS

Oct. 28-29 Sign petitions
Oct. 28-29 Sig petitions
Nov. 1-5 Conferences
Nov. 8 or 9 Extra issue of the Rotunda to be devoted to the candidates.

MINOR OFFICERS
Nov. 15-22 Hand out petitions
Nov. 29-30 Sign petitions
Dec. 1-3 Conferences
Dec. 6 Primary election
Dec. 8 Election

This year will be a transition period in which the new officers will be installed during the last assembly before exams in January. The schedule has been arranged in this manner to give the new officers a chance to work with the former officers over a longer period of time. The new schedule will also alleviate the problem of having a substitute as the head of an organization while the officer is student-teaching or if she graduates in January.

The Election's Committee would like to stress upon all students the importance of getting to know the candidates and voting for the one who is most qualified. As Longwood College students it is your job to chose the candidate who will best represent your Student Government Association. Knowledge of a candidate's qualifications may be obtained either from her petition, which will be posted in the Rotunda, or through the conference she will hold.

Liberal Arts Teaching Helps U. S. Children

Editor's Note: The following is a reprint article from "The Richmond News Leader" concerning the subject of a liberal arts education. Since Longwood is primarily a liberal arts college, it was felt that this article would be of interest to "Rotunda" readers.

Every child in the United States should gain a knowledge of his heritage and his national culture, the former head of the National Association of Independent Schools said October 2nd.

Dr. William Pressly told representatives of independent elementary schools in Virginia that an increase in liberal arts teaching would help further that goal.

Such an increase, he said, is taking place in more and more schools. Programs such as Head Start and Community Action, which include much work of a cultural nature, are simply following the lead of the independent elementary schools, he said earlier.

Pressly spoke to approximately 230 persons attending the second annual conference of the Virginia Association of Independent Elementary Schools at St. Catherine's School. He is headmaster of the Westminster School in Atlanta, Ga.

"Many independent schools in Virginia have no relation to the general trend of independent education of the rest of the nation," he said. He expects that such schools, many of which were set up at least partly to avoid integration in public schools, may have a hard time reaching standards of other independent schools.

Aside from such political motivations as have influenced some school foundings in Virginia, he said, independent schools are growing because people are willing to pay for a chance to have fewer pupils per teacher.

Committee Stops Campus Avon Sales

The Faculty Committee on Student Financial Aid met on September 28 and again on October 4 in order to draw up recommendations to be submitted to Mrs. Mary Watkins, Director of Admissions. The committee, which acts in an advisory capacity to Mrs. Watkins, submitted two recommendations, one of which has been the cause of much discussion and controversy among the students of Longwood.

The faculty committee consists of Mr. Bitteringer, Dr. Wells, Dr. Jackson, Mr. DeWitt and Mr. Magnuson, and was created by Dr. Lankford to advise on matters concerning student financial aid from both within and without the campus. The issue that

Freshmen Class
Last night the Freshmen Class decided to have only a half a vote in the upcoming Major-Minor elections.

The reasoning behind this action is that they feel as though they will not have enough time to get to know the candidates since election procedures begin this month instead of in March.

Barker, Usherettes Take Circus Places

'As the spirit of the Big Top Fills every heart with glee Come join us in this happy land Thrill to the sights you'll see!'

... So begins Circus 1965 as Nancy Young and her eight usherettes set the stage for an exciting evening of "Cotton Candy and Capering Clowns." Nancy, a dark-haired sophomore from Richmond, has been chosen to preside as "Barker" of the circus midway, in addition to heading the line of usherettes in Jarman. As a freshman, Nancy worked with her classmates on the production. Stage skills will not be new to this gal who participated in the 1965 Miss Longwood contest - enthusiasm and charm were qualities of her rendition of "Wouldn't It Be Lovely." Serving on the council of the Wesley Foundation is another of Nancy's important extracurricular activities.

In Nancy's line of usherettes, we see seniors Sally Fulton and Anne King. Sally hails from Weyers Cave, Virginia, and is a math and English major. The Longwood Players and Student Government help keep Sally busy, as do her vice-presidency of the Senior class and presidency of Phi Mu social sorority. Anne King, from Disputana, Virginia, is an active member of

By Phyllis Hummer

Computerized automation. We can't fight it, it's all around us. It registers you for your courses, it corrects your tests and quizzes, it computes and addresses your grades. But now the ultimate in mechanical meddling with human life has hit the Longwood campus.

It's a revolutionary new idea designed to solve the problems and frustrations of unattached college students in their pursuit of desirable dates.

The project - appropriately titled "Operation Match" - was originally devised by five blind-date-disillusioned Harvard University juniors last year. The computer matching project, the only one of its kind, came into being when these boys realized that most college students know what kind of people they enjoy dating. Blind dates were fine up to a point, but there had to be a better way than the present haphazard system. Why not use a computer? The principal attraction of the project is that, unlike other, similar ideas, it uses an IBM 7090 computer to provide date contacts based on individual likes and dislikes, academic interests, religious preferences, race, and other personality and character standards.

Heading the statewide project is Rick Taylor, a Hampden-Sydney student, whose brother was one of the original five men behind the Harvard drive. Another Hampden-Sydney student, Richard King, is advertising and publicity operations manager for Virginia.

Five Districts

"The state is divided into five general match districts," explained King, "each of which includes most of the colleges in that district. So far, we have Match represented on 37 Virginia campuses."

King also mentioned that the questionnaires may be obtained from the campus representative, Becky Hardin, in North Cunningham 362, and that they're available now to interested students. "They should be reminded that they've got to fill out two Match answer sheets if they decide to participate," he said. "The first is on themselves, the second on how they would want prospective dates to answer the questions."

Five Names

All the information on the answer sheets will be fed into the computer at the same time. The machine will then digest the information and issue forth a minimum of five names, addresses, and telephone numbers of prospective dates for each answer sheet it receives.

In its initial tests, Match used information recorded on questionnaires filled out by 20,000 college students who were willing to subject their interest and value standards to the computer's judgment. Students from all across the country tried it last summer, it worked, and now it's even better. Knowledge gained from previous matching projects has enabled researchers to refine the questionnaire and expect even better results. They've taken the blindness out of a blind date.

Examples

"In a snack bar you overhear a college girl saying how her roommate, an honor student, is in trouble for coming back at 3:00 a.m., two hours past her curfew, from a date at a drive-in movie. Her roommate has explained to the dean that her boyfriend's car broke down on a back road.

You would immediately think:
(1) Car broke down - hah!
(2) I doubt it.
(3) Well, maybe.
(4) The girl is probably telling the truth."

"Your roommate gets you a blind date for a big dance. Good-looking, your roommate says. When you meet your date, you are sure it's your roommate who is blind - your date is friendly, but embarrassingly unattractive.

What do you do?
(1) Suggest going to a movie instead.

(2) Monopolize your roommate's date, leaving your roommate only one noble alternative.

(3) Dance with your date, smiling weakly, but end the evening as early as possible.

(4) Act very friendly the whole time and run the risk of getting trapped into a second date."

Other questions posed by the Match system deal with smoking and drinking habits, social class, education, academic record, church attendance record, family income, and size of student's home town.

Despite such questioning, however, Match assures you that all incoming data will be kept strictly confidential.

Information concerning Match's operation may be obtained by writing to the Operation Match Quantitative Personality Projection Test, Compatibility Research, Inc., P. O. Box 72, Cambridge, Mass.

PBL Honorary Business Group Prepares Picnic

With crossed fingers for good weather, the business majors are looking forward to the annual Phi Beta Lambda picnic to be held on the afternoon of October 15 at the home of Mrs. Taliaferro. As the second event on the PBL calendar, preceded by a coke party, the gathering will offer another chance for the new business majors to become acquainted with the present Phi Beta Lambda members and the staff of the Business Department.

The Gamma Epsilon chapter of PBL here at Longwood is anxiously preparing for a full and active year. In addition to local activities, the Longwood chapter will be hostess to the state officers and Executive Board on November 6. Present at the meeting will be the Virginia state officers as well as a president and sponsor from each college chapter. Within a few weeks following the Board meeting, Longwood will be the site of a second state conference, the Fall Planning Meeting. At this time, representatives from all state chapters will help formulate ideas and plans for the state convention set for April.

Spanish Hall Has Booth To Sell Mexican Foods

In order to carry out many beneficial projects throughout the year, the Spanish Hall is having a Circus booth to raise the necessary money. To add a touch of Spanish atmosphere to Circus Saturday, October 23, this group is going to sell "tacos" and "tamales" to the students, parents, friends, and faculty on the midway.

Faye Pearce, president of the Spanish Hall, has appointed committee to handle the arrangements for the Circus booth. Myra Proctor and Lynn Mallory are the co-chairmen of this committee.

The Spanish Hall, along with the other foreign language halls, is located in Cox Dormitory.

Students Show Interest In LC At College Night

According to the attendance record at the Longwood College sessions in the "College Night" program, there is a definite interest in Longwood College. Mrs. Mary V. Watkins, Director of Admissions, reported that 125 prospective students showed up in the Petersburg area, 165 from John Marshall and between 300 and 400 from the Richmond area.

The "College Night" program is set up on an eight week schedule and covers a great majority of the high schools in Virginia. The schedule is set up by a scheduling committee and this year the program is scheduled for September 20-November 19.

September 20-October 1, Mr. David A. Jackson visited the Roanoke-Southwest Virginia area. During the past week (October 4-8) Mrs. James Melvin, Mr. Paul M. Surface, Mr. Robert Woodburn, Dr. Charles Lane, and Mrs. Mary V. Watkins, visited schools in the Brunswick, Petersburg, Tapahanock, and Richmond areas.

Dr. Ruth Wilson will be in the Arlington area October 11-15, followed by Dr. Janet Binger who will be in the Arlington-Fairfax area October 18-22.

November 1-5 Mr. Edgar Thomas and Mr. Jackson will visit primarily in the Southside Virginia area.

Mr. Edwin Vassar will visit the Norfolk, Newport News, and Penninsular areas November 8-12. Mr. Jacob Wamsley will be in the Harrisonburg, Winchester area November 15-17.

Mrs. Melvin will go to Albemarle County November 17, and Mrs. Watkins will visit Waynesboro, Staunton area November 8.

Usually the meetings consist of several thirty-minute conferences of which fifteen to twenty minutes is spent discussing the offerings of the colleges, and the remaining time is opening to questions.

Boosters Club Picks Ten Girls To Yell For H-S

Ten Longwood girls were chosen to cheer for Hampden-Sydney. The girls are Karen Maher, Carole Bradley, Frances Bain, Emille Friend, Cindy Booth, Tricia Bates, Paula Hickman, Sara Bird, Jean Harris, and Jane Curle. Leading the girls are Emille Friend, as captain, and Tricia Bates, as co-captain.

These girls were picked by the Boosters Club of Hampden-Sydney out of sixteen who tried out. The try-outs took place in the new gymnasium at Longwood.

The Boosters club has done a lot this year to help the cheerleaders. They bought the girls new cheering sweaters, which are grey with burgundy letters, and the girls are buying burgundy skirts to go with the sweaters.

Pom-poms have been ordered, and flowers were given to the cheerleaders at Homecoming by the Boosters Club.

There are usually five cheerleaders, but this year there were chosen. Six of the girls cheered previously in high school. This is the fourth school at which Emille Friend, the only sophomore on the squad, has cheered. Emille made this comment, "Having ten girls this year, a lot more pep and spirit is shown. I only wish Hampden-Sydney would do the same."

Longwood Players Build Shakespearian Platform Stage

Anyone walking into Jarman on Mondays, Wednesdays, or Fridays between two and four o'clock may rub their eyes in disbelief. On the stage are eighteen girls, the play production class, and their teacher, Mr. David Wiley, building the platform stage to be used in the Longwood Players' production of As You Like It.

Typical sounds emanating from the building area are: tap, tap, tap, OUCH! "Girls, how many times do I have to tell you the correct way to use a hammer?"

"Get what, Mr. Wiley?" "The nail remover and the carriage bolts."

"What do they look like?"

"Forget it, I'll get them myself. . ."

"Do you have to cry just because you broke a fingernail?"

"Did you know we were signing up for manual labor?" says one student to another.

"We're going to what?" (in unison after being told they have to lift the massive frame and turn it over.)

The platform stage the class is building will project from the stage and be surrounded by the audience on three sides. This is very similar to the stage used in Shakespeare's time. The scenery will be painted on large triangular flats which can easily be turned to change the scenery.

Outside of the work being done by the class, the sets are also being worked on by the various stage crews.

If Mr. Wiley can pull his feminine group together, and teach them the do's and do not's of building with hammers and nails, the set for As You Like It should prove to be very worthwhile and effective.

Beth Tignor, (left) of Virginia Beach, and Margaret Furney, of Clearwater, Fla., whose mother is a native of Apomattox, try on two of the wool knit outfits which will be worn in the fashion show sponsored by the Farmville Business and Professional Women Wednesday night. They will be among the models from Longwood College.

Fashion Show

A Knit Wear Fashion Show will be given on Wednesday, Oct. 13, at 8 p.m. in the Little Auditorium, Longwood College, under the sponsorship of the Business and Professional Woman's Club. It will be presented by the Yarn Ball, Inc., with Longwood College girls as models.

Pictured are two of the outfits to be shown. Miss Tignor has on a white wool suit called "Vivant" with a Chelsea collar and ornate pearl buttons, three quarter length sleeves, and a sheath skirt.

Miss Furney wears peacock blue slacks with matching knit pullover sweater called "V neck bobble stitch sweater." The bobble stitching goes around the neck and down the front and is bordered with a rope stitch.

Longwood Concert Choir Plans Two Concerts, Purcell Opera

Longwood College's Concert Choir plans an active year, with two definite concerts already on the agenda. They are the traditional Christmas Concert, to be on Sunday, December 12, and the Spring Concert, set for May 1. The Spring Concert will present an opera, "Dido and Aeneas," by Purcell.

Other concerts will probably be given, but are unscheduled. The Madrigals have planned two concerts, a Christmas one for December 15, and a Spring one for May 4.

The Concert Choir for 1965-66 is made up of the following girls: Soprano I Betty Bone, Carolyn Brockmeyer, Mary Brooks, Laura Cogburn, Jean Dickerson, Eirene Fishburne, Susan Fuller, Sarah Gibbons, Carole Gibson, Joyce Harris, B. L. Helbig, Anita Holmes, Carole Lee, Phala Leggette, Margaret Lofthelm, Christine Mannina, Ruth Morehead, Linda Pritchard, Linda Ross, Judith Tate, Patricia Thrift, and Angee Tompkins.

Singing Soprano II are Billie Sue Board, Diane Cross, Brenda Dean, Joan Emerson, Elizabeth Fleshman, A. Courtney Fox, Margaret Gee, Mildred Johnson, Bette Jones, Judy Lang, Terry MacCarthy, Sally Martin, Gail Milstead, Sue Pearce, Susan Rose Stewart, Susan Strauss, Rosemarie Walker, and Lavon Wilson.

The Alto I section is composed of Sylvia Butler, Laura Clark, Sandra Curry, Dallas deKraft, Jennifer Dunville, Sandra Elliott, Carolyn Gates, Judy Hester, Penny Livingstone, Hortense Mitchell, Phyllis Myers, Bula Payne, Ginny Poindexter, Sally Pottage, Sharon Powell, Mary Reynolds, Nola Ryan, Janet Soiley, Arnee Stowell, Phyllis Utt, Ann Waesche, and Esthel Warren.

Girls in the Alto II section are:

Mary Allen, Phyllis Boykin, Faye Carter, Patricia Clifton, Linda Dew, Ann Heaven, Judith Koch, Ruth MacNeil, Frances McCoy, Marshall Overby, Diane Ritchie, Carol Seay, Lizbeth Shelhorse, Sally Smith, Martha Via, and Judy Yarroll.

Newman Club Captivated By Interesting Speaker

Last Wednesday night Newman Club members as well as other interested Longwood College students were captivated by the life story of Brother Humberto Amazon.

Brother Humberto began his narrative by relating the amusing incidents which led to his first role as an actor. It seems that Brother Humberto had been bothering a Mexican producer for months in an attempt to get a part in a movie. Finally, the outraged producer screamed at his secretary, "Tell him to come back the day of the last judgment." Brother Amazon retorted, "In the morning or in the afternoon?" He got the part.

Brother Humberto thought that he would find his search for happiness in a starring role. However, he found that he felt more empty than ever. Brother Amazon then decided that in order to be happy he needed an Academy Award. In 1955 he was awarded one, and in regard to this he says, "And finally I was there alone again with that stupid little thing in my hand. So What?" Brother Amazon was finally face to face with himself. He decided that he did not want to feel empty or be paid to smile. He wished to "grasp the object which was going to fulfill his thirst for happiness." Therefore he gave away his car, house, swimming pool, and all the privileges of a well-known movie star. Concerning this he says, "Do I need to tell you that I am the happiest man in the world?" No, he didn't for Brother Amazon "finally understood love when he realized that 2,000 years ago the Son of God died of love for us." He knew then that the only thing left to do was follow God.

During the month of February Brother Amazon will be ordained a priest after six years of studying. His gift for speaking will probably continue to inspire all who listen to his message.

Colonnade

Materials are still being accepted for consideration for publication in this season's first issue of The Colonnade. You are all urged to submit your literary and artistic endeavors to Donna Weatherly or anyone else on the staff. A good publication needs the support of its student body.

Academic Affairs Committee Formed

Last spring the Legislative Board felt it necessary to form an Academic Affairs Committee. This committee, which is elected by the Legislative Board, consists of representatives from the administration, the faculty, the Legislative Board, and the student body. Currently the committee is composed of Jean White, chairman, Judy Tate, Virginia Beard, acting chairmen, Anne Gray Houchens, Donna Daly, Dean Brooks, and Dr. Binger.

The increased awareness on the part of Longwood students that the intellectual part of college life should assume more prominence prompted the Legislative Board to form this committee. The purpose of the Academic Affairs Committee is to promote cooperation among the student body, the faculty, and the administration in order to foster the academic atmosphere of Longwood College.

The committee will provide an opportunity for the students to respond to their college curriculum. It encourages the faculty and students to bring their suggestions to members of the committee. For example, do you feel there is a dissatisfaction on the part of the student body or faculty to the manner in which some of our classes are conducted? Are our professors failing to keep abreast with the fact that our students are better prepared than they were five years ago? Read next week's Rotunda for further information on the Academic Affairs Committee.

Passing Styles Retell History Of Longwood Fashion, Progress

Editor's Note: This is the last in a series of articles begun in last year's "Rotunda" concerning the history of Longwood, as seen through its traditions, its organizations, its students, its campus and its ideals.

Most information was obtained from the college Archives room of the Lancaster library.

By Maria "Dixie" Grant

AGELESS has tried, in a rather brief span of time, to present an inside look at what has gone into the making of our alma mater. And Longwood has definitely gone through many stages of growth — as seen through her changing traditions, fads, styles, and physical structure, not to mention the clubs, organizations, and publications of her students.

There were big jumps from high-topped shoes to saddle oxfords to weejuns; from hooped skirts to flappers to wrap-arounds; from buns to short bobs to the long, frizzy hair to hair pieces; from few, but strict social rules to Thursday chapel to our large handbook; from girls strictly taught the social graces to girl helping the cause of war, to girls interested in race, religion, and politics.

To understand what has caused the changes, what made students the way they were in 1894 and what makes them the way they are today, we must go all the way back to 1839 — and perhaps we'll find out "Whatever Happened to Longwood College?"

Horse-drawn carriages could be seen passing by the main building of the Farmville Female Seminary Association long ago, its history being traced even farther back than 1839 according to college authorities. Incorporated by the Virginia Legislature, the seminary was a Methodist institution at the time, with Professor Paul Whitehead acting as president. He had the privilege of being the first head of an institution which now boasts the fifth oldest history as educational college for women in the U. S.

Perhaps the contents of a report card found in 1949 in the home of a woman in Prospect, Virginia, will show what the student was like who went to college in that day and age. The report card, which had fallen behind a mantel many years ago, belonged to the woman's grandmother who attended the seminary.

"The pupils are encouraged to perform their duties and observe the regulations of the school by decided but mild and persuasive means, and by all those lofty motives that should influence conduct."

Printed beneath was a message to parents:

"Please see that your daughter studies at home."

The report covered attitudes, attendance and grades, absences from church and prayers; and it had a place for notations concerning the student's manners — and these subjects: orthography, penmanship, arithmetic, History of England, parsing (?), and aids to composition and reading. Some of the other courses included common English, higher English, Latin, Greek, French, music on piano, and oil painting.

On May 24, 1860, the seminary became known as Farmville Female College.

Dr. J. L. M. Curry, president of the Board of Trustees (established in 1870) inaugurated the establishment of normal schools in the South, and the Virginia School was among the first. On September 17, 1884, he ordered Dr. William Henry Ruffner to open the State Normal School at Farmville in six weeks, and so, on October 30, 1884, the first session of S.N.S. was underway. Dr. Ruffner its new president.

Dr. Ruffner, who had put the Virginia public school system into effect, found himself the first president of this new normal school — consisting of 167 students dressed in hooped skirts, blouses, ties, high-topped shoes — and eager to learn.

Yes, "1884 was your year, Southern Belle . . ."

Dr. Ruffner "reigned" until 1887 when Dr. John Atkinson Cunningham took over as president of State Normal. Under him the "school grew steadily, though not rapidly," in ten years of his administration enrollment increased from 93 students the first year to 250 in 1897 when he retired from office.

The year 1898 arrived, and with it a new president — Dr. Robert Fraser. For four years he worked hard to "first, provide the best possible advantages for the students; second, to offer those advantages to students at the lowest cost so that the benefits might reach the largest number."

In 1902 the most beloved of our school's presidents, Dr. Joseph Leonard Jarman, took over the administration. Under his 44 years of service, our college showed a tremendous amount of growth. From a little over 300 students, the population boomed as it developed into an 800-member student body.

Receiving Dr. Jarman's stamp of approval in 1909, our Honor Code and first Constitution became an integral part of the school.

Middy blouses, long skirts, and high-topped shoes were the vogue of the day, lasting till at least 1920 when dresses and skirts were shortened and dark hose were "in." Daring hairdos graced the early twenties likewise.

The buildings which made up the campus around 1923 included

In Defense Of Avon

The cause of the latest controversy on the campus arises over the student sale of products in the dormitories and the practice certain campus organizations sponsoring money-making projects. To be more specific, the issue originated with a recommendation issued by the Faculty Committee on Student Financial Aid which states that "... individual students, as representatives of off-campus companies, should not be permitted to solicit and sell merchandise on the campus."

The recommendation was created to prevent the possibility of other companies soliciting for student representatives on campus. To date there has been no concrete evidence presented either by the committee or the administration that illegitimate or otherwise unsound companies have launched a drive to obtain campus representatives. Furthermore, a protective device for such possibilities was included in a policy statement issued by the Office of the Dean of Women last year which states that "any company wishing to have its products sold by these individuals must receive permission from Mrs. Watkins to contact girls who wish to serve as their representatives."

Another point to consider is that there is no other practical means by which such Avon products can be obtained on campus. Avon's prices are far lower than any of the other commercial brands that may be purchased in Farmville, and many Longwood girls prefer to use only Avon products.

The committee maintains that the recommendations is an attempt to keep down interruptions in the dormitories by student salesmen. The position held by many students is that the sale of Avon products is a service much like that of the newspapers and cleaners. In addition, Avon sales representatives call on their customers only twice a month, and it is very unrealistic to consider this as much of a disturbing influence.

Above all else, this new ruling deprives the student of his fundamental right to exercise his privileges under a free enterprise system. If a student has the initiative or the need to earn extra money, why should she not be allowed to do so?

The issue has carried over further into the practice of organizations sponsoring money-making projects. Social sororities are not being allowed to sell doughnuts and juice on Sundays. Is this not as much a service as Sigma Alpha Iota's sale of cokes during the intermissions at Jarman performances? This activity has been stopped by the policy statement previously mentioned which declares that "no organization nor individual may sell any type of food that is designed to serve as a meal, such as breakfast, since students have already paid for three meals a day in the College dining hall." It would seem that the decision as to whether a student wishes to go to the dining hall or not should be up to her, and if she chooses not to do so, then there should be another alternative which she may or may not accept.

Be that as it may, sororities are no longer allowed to sponsor off-campus money-making projects. The national rules of many sororities require that their members participate in such projects. It seems strange that no one can come up with an official reason as to why this practice must be discontinued.

Eyster Joins LC Staff; Teaches English, Writes

by Mary Edgerton

Among the new faces around campus we find a widely traveled and versatile professor and writer. Mr. Warren Eyster is one of the new English professors and the sponsor of The Rotunda.

Born in Steelton, Pennsylvania, Mr. Eyster received his early education there and attended Harrisburg Academy. Upon graduating he served in the Army Air Corps after which he served in the Navy for four years on a destroyer during World War II. At the end of the war, miscellaneous employment awaited Mr. Eyster. It was after his various employments that he attended Gettysburg College in Pennsylvania where he earned a B.A. degree in English. He did graduate work in his major field at the University of Virginia.

After his education Mr. Eyster again took to multiple employment. His three novels readily reflect his travels and experiences which he uses as background for writing them. His first novel, Far From the Customary Skies, illustrates his experiences while serving on a naval destroyer during World War II. The local area in Pennsylvania inspired the general plot for No Country for Old Men. This novel portrays an immigrant family adjusting to American ways in a typical steel-producing town. Mr. Eyster's membership in an organization called the Friend's Service Committee provided the incentive for The

Goblins of Eros, written during one of his stays in western Mexico where he lived among the Indian tribes. Writing magazine articles and reviews and translating Mexican writings while using his Rockefeller Foundation Fellowship were among Mr. Eyster's activities; and he was also managing editor for two years of a New York publishing company.

Previous to his coming to Longwood, Mr. Eyster taught high school English for four years in Bath County. Now, at Longwood he teaches courses in the modern novel, creative writing, and journalism which he enjoys very much. He also serves as sponsor of The Rotunda, and as sponsor he would like to widen the scope of the newspaper to include such things as clothing fashions, popular mannerisms, and things of this nature. When asked to be sponsor of The Rotunda, he commented that he was pleased to do so.

Presently Mr. Eyster resides in Farmville with his wife, a native of Mexico, and his four daughters.

Freshmen Elect Brickhouse For President, '65-'66

Last week, the Freshman Class chose Linda Brickhouse to lead them through their first year.

Other officers elected were Candy Jamerson, Vice-President; Ann Bowles, Secretary. Linda McCulloch and Stacy Dodge will serve as representatives to the Judicial Board and Marilyn Green and Carolyn Davis will fill the positions on Legislative Board. Anna Petis was elected as the class's representative to the A. A. Council. Mr. M. Henry Bittinger, Associate Professor of History and Social Science was chosen by the girls to be the class sponsor.

Linda, a native of Norfolk and a speech pathology major, was President of the Tidewater District student government associations and was voted the Most Likely to Succeed out of a class of 75.

Candy, who is from Roanoke, was Treasurer of her school choir and active in the student government. She is a home economics major.

Ann was president of the SCA at Louisa County High School and is a member of the National Honor Society and Quill and Scroll. She also received the DAR award.

Annual Convocation Marks LC Opening

Dr. Perry F. Kendig, president of Roanoke College, addressed the Longwood College faculty and students attending their annual convocation on Tuesday, Oct. 5, at 1 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

A traditional academic procession of faculty and seniors in caps and gowns formed at the Lancaster Library and marched to the auditorium.

President James H. Newman presided over the formal exercises that marked the opening of the 1965-66 college session. The Rev. George H. Boyd, superintendent of the Farmville District of the Methodist Church, presented the invocation.

Dr. John W. Molnar, chairman of the Longwood department of music, directed the college concert choir in the singing of "Lift Up Your Hearts, Sing Ye" by Gretchaninoff, an early 20th century Russian composer. Dr. Joanne Curnutt, of the Longwood faculty, provided organ music for the processional and recessional.

Choosing "Vocation" as his topic, Dr. Kendig, a native of Pennsylvania, spoke from a broad background in education that began in 1932, immediately after receiving the A. B. degree from Franklin and Marshall College.

Holder of the A. M. and Ph. D. degrees from the University of Pa., he has served as high school principal, head of the department of English at Muhlenberg College, and dean of the college and professor of English at Roanoke College before becoming president of the college in 1963.

While attending college, he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Omicron Delta Kappa and Phi Sigma Kappa fraternities. More recently, he has served on numerous boards of trustees of educational groups and institutions. He is the author of a number of books, book reviews and magazine articles.

Representing the board of visitors at the convocation were Mrs. Mosby Phelgar, of Norfolk, and Hugh V. White, of Holland, Va.

Dr. James H. Newman pauses with Dr. Perry F. Hendig and members of L. C.'s

Brumfield Goes To Convention

Dr. Robert T. Brumfield, chairman of the Longwood College Biology Department, will attend a meeting of high school Biology teachers of the eastern part of Virginia at the Golden Triangle Hotel in Norfolk, Virginia. The meeting is scheduled for October 15-16.

Franklin D. Kizer arranged the program to have representatives from most of the colleges where teachers in biology are trained. The meeting will consist of demonstrations, experiments, and field trips for teachers of marine biology.

Letters To Editor

We hope you are enjoying The Rotunda, and we invite you to respond to the issues brought forth by sending in letters to the editor.

First Floor Cox Houses

Foreign Language Girls

Parlez-vous francais? Habla el espanol? These phrases are constantly heard on first floor Cox—formally known as the Language Hall. In effect for its second year, the Language Hall is proving to be more successful than it was during the '64-'65 session.

To be eligible to live on the Language Hall, a student must have either had two years of his language in high school or one college year.

Sponsored by the Foreign Language Department, the Language Hall is divided into two groups. The Spanish students live on the south end of first floor Cox and the French students live on the north end. Each group acts as a separate unit in that it elects its own officers and sponsors various activities throughout the year.

Certain hours have been set aside in which only the foreign language is spoken. These hours are from 5:00 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. and from 10:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Hoping to be speaking the foreign languages 24 hours a day by Christmas, the students are increasing the number of hours gradually as the year progresses.

Helping with participation in the Language Hall are the two foreign exchange students, Maria del Carmen Aguado Blaguez from Uruguay and Lucie Ruiz from Bolivia.

Students living on the Language Hall are enthusiastic about its progress and to the students of Longwood College they say, "Bienvenue!" or "Bienvenido!"

Foreign Service Offers Exams During October

The next written examination for the Foreign Service will be held on December 4, 1965, at sites throughout the country; applications must be filed with the Board of Examiners for the Foreign Service, Department of State, Washington, before October 18. The same examination is offered candidates for both the Foreign Service of the Department of State and USIA, although candidates must specify at the time of application which agency they seek to enter. Individuals successful on the written examination will be invited to take an oral examination before a panel of senior officers during the spring.

Specialized options for State Department applicants are included on the examination in: (1) Economics, (2) Commerce, (3) Administration, and (4) History, Government, Social Sciences and Public Affairs, to enable candidates to demonstrate competence in their chosen areas. All USIA candidates must take option 4.

The duties of Foreign Service Officers fall into the broad categories of political and economic reporting and analysis; consular affairs; administration; and commercial work. Entering junior officers can expect to receive experience in several of these fields, and in different areas of the world, before initiating career specialization. All candidates should be well-grounded in economics, U. S. and world history, political science and government. In addition, many applicants have specialized qualifications in administration, or in area and language studies.

Participation In "Operation Match" Means Five Or More Dates For You

By Phyllis Hummer

You may not know it, but you're one in a million. No one else is quite like you — You have different attitudes and beliefs from anyone else.

But you're also one in a million in another sense. You have a choice of several hundred dates, and don't kid yourself — that's too many for any girl to check out!

Here's where "Operation Match" comes in. If you're the adventurous type, you'll probably want to take part in one of the most interesting social experiments ever.

Questionnaires are being distributed here and on 36 other campuses in Virginia. On the LC campus these may be obtained from Becky Hardin in North Cunningham 362. For $3, you have the privilege of answering questions about yourself —interests, attitudes, appearance and reactions to various social situations. Then you fold up the answer sheet which is printed as a business reply envelope, enclose $3 (cash, check, or money order), and drop the envelope in a mail box.

When "Operation Match" receives your "vital statistics," they are fed into a computer, which will bring forth at least five scientifically compatible dates.

Your matches will be mutual, chosen on the basis of your desirability to your dates as well as their desirability to you. The number will vary with your individual case as they would rather give you five good matches than compromise on quality. Once the computer has typed out your matches, the results will be mailed to you, within 14 days of the deadline date for answer sheets. Closeout date for the Virginia program is October 23, 1965.

So — Are you willing to let a big machine with flashing lights take the "blindness" out of blind dates? Do you want to risk a social upheaval? Do you want five or more dates — picked to satisfy your desires?

Of course, the more students who take part in "Operation Match," the more perfect your matches will be. So if "Operation Match" interests you, tell your friends about it, borrow $3, and pick up one of those questionnaires.

Woodburn Talks At Petersburg

Mr. Robert J. Woodburn, Instructor in speech, represented Longwood at "college night" held at Petersburg High School on October 5, at 7:30.

Most of the colleges in Virginia were represented as well as many out of state colleges. There were three thirty-minute sessions. Mr. Woodburn said that he explained the admissions requirements, available scholarships, extracurricular activities, and the location of the college to each group. The students' chief interests, however, were the admission requirements.

Mr. Woodburn stated that this was his first experience of representing Longwood at a "college night." Mr. Woodburn further commented, "It was an extreme privilege and pleasure to represent Longwood, being able to present information on our institution to many possible future students."

Longwood Teams Split Victories In Second Game Of Season

Last Saturday, October 9, the Longwood Ladies trooped off in their James River Line bus to Harrisonburg, Va., to Madison College. The weather was "lousy". It was cold and rainy and the field, soggy. And yet, braving the elements, the Ladies charged on to the field, hockey sticks in hand, to prepare for the battle.

The first game was a definite victory with a 3-0 score, our favor. The three goals were scored by Barbara Ragland, Center forward; Carolyn Cline, Inner (she played both right and left); and by Dianne Davis, center half-back. Concerning the first game, Madison said they had never seen balls harder hit and the defense stopped everything. This was especially true of Pat Lydane, the LC goalie.

It might be appropriate to add that there was a Longwood cheering section attending the game. Let's hope that there is twice this enthusiasm when the Varsity games are held here.

The second game took a turn. The Madison team outplayed the Ladies for the first half of the game, but the Longwood team turned the tables in the second half. The play was right down at the goal most of the time, but the C team just couldn't seem to get it in. The final score was 3 to 1, in Madison's favor.

As an aftermath of the game, the team stopped off for their usual steak dinner. It's enough to make you try out for the varsity team, isn't it?

Hockey

The first hockey game yesterday ended in tie with Old Dominion and L. C. both having two points.

In the second game the L. C. team rallied to victory—8 to 0.

Circus

the Y.W.C.A., the S.E.A., Phi Mu social sorority and is currently the vice-president of the House Council.

Representing the Junior class are usherettes Nancy Spain and Karen Walton. Nancy, a history major from Richmond, has been active in the Athletic Association and presently serves as treasurer of House Council. Karen, from Arlington, majors in history and social science. Her extra-curricular activities include the Judicial Board, the Athletic Association, W.W.C.A., and Sigma Kappa sorority.

Alice Collier and Mayling Simpson represent the sophomores in the line of Circus usherettes. Both of these girls come from Richmond. Alice is majoring in English; among her non-academic activities are the Y.W.C.A. and Kappa Delta sorority. Mayling's specialty is French, and she enjoys working with the Longwood Forum.

To complete the group of cane-twirling gals are Ines Colom and Martha Kay from the Freshman class. Ines hopes to become a physical therapist after graduation. At present her home is in Arlington. Richmond is the hometown of Martha who plans to us her biology-general science background in a teaching career.

Now that you have met the Circus Barker and her usherettes, come join them in the happy land of Circus 1965.

LC TEAM IN ACTION

Class Hockey Introduces Idea Of Color Competition For Points

Class hockey will begin Monday, October 11 at 4:00 on the new field. The program will begin with two weeks of general practice. This will follow with a week of intra-class games where each class will play against its own members. This will enable the participants to better judge who the more skilled players are, and aid them in choosing members of their respective classes to participate in the class games. The class games will last a week, to be followed by the color games. The color teams will be chosen by a qualified, impartial faculty committee. Two out of three color games will be played.

This year the schedule has been organized differently in the hope that more students will be able to participate and that it will result in more skilled games. The class hockey procedure is as follows:

1. Each player must attend eight 45 minute practices.
2. Six of these practices must be general practices. The other two may be intra-class practices.
3. No team may start a class game with fewer than eleven (11) players.

4. In case of injury during the game, a team may play one player short.
5. Class teams will be chosen by the respective team players. This selection will take place October 27.

Colors Compete In Annual Race For Banners

Color rush consists of a foot race between one red and white and one green and white for each dorm. In other words, there will be eight races. The winner of each race will be allowed to hang the color they are representing on the dorm for which they ran. This means we will need eight red and whites and eight green and whites, and, of course, preferably fast runners.

In order to have the fastest runners for each color, tryouts will be held on Monday, October 18, at 5:00 p.m. Each person will run the fifty yards and be clocked by a stopwatch.

Spotlight Shows Ragland; Popular Senior Athlete

There is a certain spastic senior who is well known around the campus. Who else could we be talking about but Barbara Ragland? But we must admit that her "capacity" disappears when it comes to sports.

Barbara is a Physical and Health Education major from Richmond. Speaking of the Richmond area, that is where she will do her student teaching next February. Word has it that she is looking forward to it, but also is a little nervous.

Barbara is the captain of the varsity hockey team this year. She has played on the team since her freshman year. Her ability has shown itself by having been picked in the last two years for the first and second Tidewater teams. She also plays varsity tennis and basketball. In class sports, Barbara has played volleyball, basketball and softball.

Last year, Alpha Kappa Gamma recognized Barbara's abilities when they tapped her.

Keep up the good work, Barbara, our choice for Sports Spotlight!

As a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, Barbara has been put in charge of the publicity for Circus. She is also their treasurer.

As a member of Alpha Kappa spring ceremony. Her participation in sports was recognized this year when she received a white blazer at the annual Athletic Association banquet.

Barbara is the vice president of the Athletic Association this year. Last year she was their secretary. She is a member of the Monogram Club and Alpha

Anna Petis

Congratulations to Anna Petis who was recently elected as the freshman representative to the Athletic Association Council.

Varsity Team Offers Chance For Swimmers

Are you interested in swimming? Have you ever been in swimming competition? This year a new varsity sport is being started. It is varsity swimming. Coaching the team will be Miss Mary Heintz, head of the Physical and Health Education department.

Practices are now being held at five on Mondays and Wednesdays, and at three on Saturdays. The team has been scheduled for five races, so come on out and support your school. If there are any questions, see Miss Heintz or Corma Uhde in Ruffner 206.

Tennis Singles Provide Points For Color Cup

Competition between the Red and Whites and the Green and Whites for the color cup got underway this week with the class tennis singles matches.

Today was the deadline for the first matches; October 18 is the final date for the second matches to be played.

The winning class will gain five points toward the color cup. Senior Gerry Edwards confidently predicts that the Red and Whites will win the singles matches, and take the color cup.

Participating in the event are Red and Whites Margaret Sneed, Rusty Stephenson, Pat Hric, Nan Kelly, Lucy King, Carolyn Burnette, Karen Ruder, Gerry Edwards, Jean Hendricks, Betsy Sledge, Bess Mann, and Peggy Shultz.

Their Green and White challengers are: Marcia Mitchell, Anna Pettis, Connie Gallahan, Ruth Limbrick, Connie Spradlin, Becky White, Bruce Flourney, Kathy Kolva, Becky Bondurant, Kathy Mapp, Linda Slaughter, and D. J. Webb.

Smith Teaches New Activity

A new sport has been introduced to Longwood this year. It is an age-old game called Lacrosse. The game is played using "Crosses," an instrument made of wood and gut which is used to catch and "cradle" the ball.

A class is now being offered teaching the techniques of the game. In charge of it is Miss Barbara Smith.

Faculty Committee Stops Campus Sales

has brought about the committee's latest recommendation concerns the sale of Avon products by student representatives on the campus. The new policy states that "... individual students, as representatives of off-campus companies, should not be permitted to solicit and sell merchandise on the campus."

The sale of Avon products, according to one of the committee members, raises the question of whether this would be an entrance for other outside companies to solicit their products on campus through student representatives. According to the Admissions office, there are currently nine Avon student representatives on campus, and it is felt that this may be to many.

Another reason behind the stoppage of sales is that it is an attempt to keep down interruptions in the dormitories by students who solicit for orders. The feeling is that this could increase and be a very disturbing influence.

Student representatives of both the Richmond newspapers and Star Cleaners are being allowed to continue sales on the grounds that "this is a service."

However, the issue has extended even further to curtail the activities of certain campus organizations which sponsor various money-making projects both on and off campus. An organization such as Sigma Alpha Iota is allowed to sell cokes during intermissions at Jarmen performances on the basis that "this is a service."

However, social societies are not allowed to sell such things as decorations and other items to date. The only justification for this that can be found is included in a memorandum issued by the Office of the President of Western last year which states that "no organization or individual may sell any food that is prepared in a dormitory, such as breakfast, since students are not allowed to cook in the dormitory." The College dining hall."

The committee's decision is a new organization and sponsor of certain money-making projects. No official statement of reason can be found.

Ricking Around Entertains LC On WFLO Radio

by Ann Tweedy

What is that new sound? Why, it's "Ricking Around," a live broadcast on WFLO, Wednesday at three thirty, intended solely for the enjoyment of the Longwood College listening audience. It is produced each week by members of Speech 311, under the guidance of Mr. Lockwood.

Each of the class members has ample opportunity to experience both the thrills and the shocks of being responsible for program production. For instance, the class experienced an ulcer-producing moment when on last Wednesday's program it attempted to broadcast, but the sound was not coming over the air. Quick telephone calls to the radio station and to the telephone company revealed that both parties were cooperating in clearing up the difficulty. Finally, at three forty, broadcasting commenced. In the meanwhile, however, class members had gone through several stages of panic.

The programs are topical in nature. The first week the class produced a comedy sketch of actresses reading parts in Longwood's two fall plays, The House of Bernarda Alba and As You Like It. The second week's program informed as well as satirized, as its theme concerned changes on the Longwood campus that have occurred during the past four years. Humor has been the prevailing trait, though the class is free to present anything considered "in good taste."

Notice

On Tuesday, October 12, you received a copy of your class schedule. Check this schedule to see that you are talking the proper courses at the correct time. If there is an error, report it to Mr. Medell in the Data Processing Center. All errors must be reported by Thursday, October 14, at 9:00 a.m. The Data Processing Center will be open October 12 and October 13 until 7:00 p.m. to receive notices of errors.

LC Education Students Teach In Seven Areas

This semester 120 seniors are participating in student teaching, Block I. On September 19 the section started, and it will close November 12. The students are teaching in seven areas: Colonial Heights, Danville, Charlotte County, Henrico County, Lynchburg, Richmond and Roanoke.

Seven are teaching in art, seven in business education, 13 in English, speech and drama, eight in foreign languages, and 14 in social sciences. Home economics has six student teachers, music has seven and natural sciences has three. Elementary education has most student teachers, numbering 54, and health and physical education has fewest, with one girl teaching this first block.

Second block student teaching will commence at the start of second semester.

From The Board

The Legislative Board has organized a summer school committee headed by Susan Goodes to evaluate and revise procedures and rules used by the summer school student government. Members of the committee are Julie Glass, Judy Forrester, June Lancaster, Kay Collins, Susan Zix, and Jo Carter. Anyone who wishes to make any suggestions or plans for summer school should contact this committee.

The summer school is now evaluating the 1965 Orientation program. We offer our Congratulations to Janet Gormus, Chairman of Orientation, to the Colleges and Associates, and to all others who helped make this program a success. Any new ideas or revisions to the program should be given to the board members.

The Board has appointed three new committee members. Linda Gardner will serve as Assembly Committee vice chairman. Donna Daly and Ann Gray Houchens will act on the Academic Affairs Committee.

The Academic Affairs Committee was initiated last spring. Its purpose is to better the relationship between the students, the faculty, and the administration in order to create a more academic atmosphere on the Longwood Campus. Suggestions on how to solve any academic problems should be brought to this committee.

The Board will sponsor a speaker program on the "Aims of Higher Education" aided by N. S. A. resources and faculty participation. Topics will include:

"What is a Student"

"Social Life Versus Academic Affairs"

"The Student and World Affairs"

Assembly dates for October are:

October 12 -AKG

October 19—Miss Wilson will speak to the freshmen.

October 26—N.S.A.

Lancaster Library Art Exhibit Now Shows Virginia Designers

by Linda Dyer

The Lancaster Library is now presenting an exhibition of Virginia Designers of 1964 from the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts. This exhibition represents a variety of techniques and designs used in the highly specialized field of commercial art.

Many commercial artists, corporations, and industries of Virginia are represented here. Their work is characterized by great versatility, a must in this field because it has to appeal to the entire public and in all aspects of advertising the infinite variety of products on the market today. Included in this exhibit is everything from the ridiculous to the truly creative artistic spirit, from the fundamentals of lettering to an intricate system of design and form.

For example, Thalheimer's has a large variety of displays. First is an invitation to a children's fashion show, a picture and the words of a small child. Christ- mas is represented by an illustration of an early nineteenth hundred Christmas card. With this Thalheimer's purpose is to produce "an advertising attitude which must include all types of newspaper advertising plus other promotional materials needed during the season." A "thank you" from the department store appears in the scribbles of a child.

The Reynold's Metals Company employs a very interesting technique for their color variation chart — a reproduction of their metal in various colors. Other industries and companies represented are Duncan Advertising, A. A. Robins Company with sample boxes for direct mailing, A. H. Robins Company which includes a take-off on "Whistler's Mother," and R. H. Robins Company with direct mail and medical journal advertising.

A number of individual artists are represented also. George Rogers Woltz displays maps, brochures, catalogues and designs for industry. Gary Gore displays a book jacket and a self-promotion calendar. William Doyle Robinson presents a book cover employing the new op-art technique. A menu by James D. Gillespie, "A Book of Owls" by Leon Bellin, and a book cover and chapter illustrations for "The Seasons of Life" by Robert A. Stratton are also included in the exhibition.

The versatility of a commercial artist can be seen in the works of Bruce Woodruff Smith. Included in his work are letterheads, advertisements and the award for the Eighth Annual Exhibit of Advertising and Design.

Also in this exhibition there is a magazine display of the "Sculpture of Judith Joy" of Richmond Professional Institute.

This exhibit is designed to give the viewer more insight as to the broadness of the commercial art field.

Passing Styles Retell History Of Longwood Fashion, Progress

Ruffner, West Wing (then called Library Hall), the Rotunda (called the reception hall, and having no rug, a few chairs, Joan of Arc, and looking rather bare to say the least), the Virginia Room (known as the Senior Parlor), and the college auditorium located in the education building (training school then).

Student Building originated after a fund-raising drive by students and the breaking of ground by Dr. Jarman.

Skirts were much shorter, the athletic teams wore shorts and knee socks, and bulky sweaters were the rage in 1926, as the Roaring Twenties hit SNS. Believe it or not, the skirts back in '28 were shorter than they are now, but they still had those high-topped shoes, by Jove. In contrast, the hair-dos were short and simple.

Another major change came in 1932 when S.N.S. was no more. No, it was State Teachers College at Farmville — long live old S.T.C.!

A $40,000 grant for a swimming pool refreshed the college in 1934, and pretty soon water babies splashed their way to new forms of physical activity. In '35 we proudly saw another campus addition go up — North Cunningham (then known as the Junior-Senior Building).

The thirties boasted a period of much class competition, rating in full force and long coats with fur collars.

Long before 1937 the traditional Daisy Chain ceremony had been a part of our college's history. Until 1939 the seniors and their little sisters marched into the Dell and formed the numerals of the graduation year, and in '39 the place for this activity changed to the lawn in front of the Rotunda. The Lantern Parade also goes back quite far and used to take place on the Monday night before graduation. In 1946, however, it became part of the class day exercises.

An interesting little item was a thing called the Senior Bonfire (a tradition kept till 1942) at which the seniors burned all their accumulated "junk" en masse.

Dating back quite a ways, too, is our Senior Assembly. Of course until 1948 it was known as Senior Chapel — a Saturday Chapel in May set aside for seniors to sing their farewell songs, after which they formed an arch with their caps, under which the juniors marched to the Alma Mater. In 1949 the name Senior Assembly was adopted, and, as the years went by, more and varied programs made the scene.

The late thirties and early forties brought with them the sweater craze, shorter skirts, rather unimaginative clothes, and saddle shoes.

A time of sadness pervaded the campus in 1946 when Dr. Jarman, completing 44 memorable years as president of the college, announced his retirement. With him passed an era.

Dr. Dabney Stuart Lancaster became S.T.C.'s new leader in '46, and three years later another momentous time arrived. The name Longwood College was born. Long live Longwood! That same year the new science building — Stevens Hall — was added to the growing campus.

Long skirts, loafers, saddle oxfords (yes, still), page boy hair-dos, and Thursday Chapel (yes, still) — these were some of the ingredients of the Flagrant Fifties.

A quote from an editorial of the Rotunda (dated 1950) expressed the changing attitude of the student body in relation to the somewhat submissive attitudes of student bodies of the past. The headline read: "Student Government Denied Exercise of Function."

It seems the freshman class of '53 was given two weeks strict campus for unruly conduct. The charges: cutting the bell rope, throwing feathers over the Rotunda (shades of the sixties), "stampedes," rolling coke bottles down the halls, setting off firecrackers, and general rowdiness.

With this background, the editorial proceeds in this fashion: "Neither House Council nor the Student Government Council had anything to do with the punishment inflicted upon the freshmen. What was definitely a case for a student jurisdiction was handled entirely by the administration . . . the student governing body was left out in the cold completely uninformed of the proposed punishment.

"Naturally the majority of the student body is beginning to wonder about the so-called and much supported, student government. The purpose of a student government is defeated before it is begun if it can exercise its prerogatives only in part."

The first time any mention was made of a Senior Banquet was in 1951, at which time it was a formal affair. Later, in '55, it went from formal dress to Sunday attire, and in 1960 the banquet was given by the graduating seniors' sister class.

In '51 Jarman and Tabb Halls were both completed. A former registrar and secretary to Dr. Jarman, Jennie Masters Tabb, had written the words to our Alma Mater in 1893.

One of the first signs of a newly acquired interest in world and national affairs on the part of the student body resulted in a mock election in 1952 when the majority of students voted for Eisenhower.

Other than exchanges from other colleges and a sincere interest in World War II efforts, the campus remained fairly quiet in this line. But a bolder generation had emerged and come into its own and the Longwood Lady now reached out to many new horizons.

With 1955 came another change — Dr. Lancaster retired as president, and Longwood got a new one by the name of Dr. Francis Lankford, under whose ten-year administration our college again felt its seams burst.

The 1956 election created an even bigger stir than the last one, as students divided forces and staged campaign drives for their favorite candidates. Eisenhower again won in a mock election.

Sweaters still held the top notch in the fashion line up till the late fifties. Unfortunately, clothes in general seemed rather dull even at this late date.

South Cunningham — completed in 1958, preceded our next to newest dorm — Wheeler Hall.

LC Graduate Program Lacks Sufficient No.

by Janice Hamblet

To have or not to have graduate students? That is a moot topic on campus.

Although the Longwood College Graduate Program offers higher education for qualified persons, there are various problems concerned with its existence. The main one deals with the small number of students in the program. During the 1964-1965 session there were twenty-four enrolled for graduate work, and it has been estimated that the number for the 1965-1966 session is very similar. Offering a balanced program to the students is another problem; for if there are fewer than six students registered for a class, the school cannot offer that course. One explanation of the small enrollment is that other colleges and universities have a large extension program and good locations while Longwood has neither.

The graduate program at Longwood gives qualified persons an opportunity to broaden their education. Those who complete their requirements may receive either a Master of Arts degree in Education or a Master of Science degree in Education. The Master of Arts program is open to those who major in English, history or education; and the Master of Science program is open to only those who major in education. All graduate students either major or minor in education.

Four graduate programs are offered at Longwood. They include English, history, supervision in education, and a program designed to give the elementary classroom teacher an opportunity to broaden his knowledge in fields related to teaching at the elementary level.

Even though the faculty voted to discontinue the graduate program last year, the Board of Visitors decided to hold the decision until a survey of higher education was completed and the results turned over to the legislature. "I hope that the legislature will provide financial help for those persons wishing to seek a Master's degree, for Virginia has the lowest number of Master degree holders of public school teachers in any part of south-eastern United States. We need more teachers, and I hope the legislature will also make a greater difference in the salaries of teachers having a MA degree," commented Dr. Richard B. Brooks, Dean of the College and chairman of the Graduate Council.

NSA Sponsors Fall Conference At Univ. Of N. C.

The 1965 Fall Regional Conference of the Carolinas - Virginia Region of USNSA will be held on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. The conference will last from the afternoon of October 15, to the afternoon of October 16. Longwood will send three observers to this conference — one selected by Judicial Board and two selected by Legislative Board.

The theme of the conference will be "Student Participation in College Policy - Making." A variety of topics will be discussed, however, in workshops and seminars on the following:

1. Judicial Systems
2. Course Evaluation
3. Regulations Affecting Students
4. Awareness Programs
5. Student Representation on Committees

Sending only three students, the Student Government feels that the most beneficial seminars and workshops for Longwood's purposes are Judicial System and Course Evaluation. The third student will attend a special seminar on the topic, "What is the United States National Student Association?"

The students attending the seminar and workshops must do background work on their specific topic and prepare a report concerning Longwood's procedures and advancement in such matters. The conference intends that each specific school leaves with the knowledge of what all the other schools are doing and with a specific plan for improving their own system.

New Professors Are Introduced To French Hall

In order to introduce the new French professors to the residents of the French Hall, members of the French section of the Language Hall served dessert after dinner Tuesday, October 5 in Cox Rec.

Attending the French Hall's first activity of the year were Miss Draper, Mrs. VanHuese, and Miss Schorer. Hostess for the occasion was Lucie Ruiz, the foreign exchange student from Bolivia.

And then there's the freshman who thought Joan of Arc was Mary-Margaret Truman.

Thought for the week: Who is Saint M. L.?

It's about the senior who prefers bottled Pepsies.

"Happy Birthday to You, hic!"

Bobbie, it sort of makes you cry to pour it out, doesn't it?

Thanks, Chi—now we can get some sleep!

Ageless Reiterates LC Fashions Progress

Both a new gym and another new dorm, Cox, became part of the campus in 1963.

The "ivy" look finally brought color, splash, and imagination to the Longwood Ladies' wardrobe as shorter skirts, drinking hats, "Tennie pumps" and weejuns, and madras, madras, madras hit the top.

Yes, the late fifties and Sizzling Sixties bear the mark of our present generation of youth—the young adults who seek answers to subjects never before questioned; who see a challenge in the world outside the college boundaries; who fear little and conquer much; who boldly set out to find "their place"; who never cease to be interested in anything from Coca Cola to world religions.

Whathappened to Longwood—the things that were?—the "smoker" that is no more, sings in the Rotunda, Cahoots in full blossom, the friendly dining hall for one and all, paint battles (real ones), rock and roll, burning professors in effigy, Rena's spastic dances, tying the house-mother in her room, the "sacred" territory of South Cunningham, skits a la Marcy and Mary Jane, painting the bell, Chinese air raids, Circus Parades, "Butch" McDaniel's water gun, a reading from "Peanut Butter," raids on third floor Post Office, "wipe it off, rat" . . .

And the things that are—the "population explosion" on campus, crowded rooms, higher academic standards, petitions, Rotunda controversies, Demo rallies, colleagues, Republican speakers, IBM machines, candidate conferences, folk music, "rats aren't ours anymore . . ."

This is what happened to Longwood College.

Judicial Board Introduces Case Procedure Policy

The Judicial Board functions to uphold the standards of Longwood College. The Board handles all cases covered by the Honor Code, (lying, cheating, stealing, in any and all academic and property matters) and any social regulations under the Legislative Board, as well as any serious violations referred to it by House Council.

Any known or possible violations should be reported IMMEDIATELY to the Chairman of the Judicial Board (or any other member) who then notifies the Vice-Chairman. The Vice-Chairman and a member of the Board, on the basis of the report, check confidentially those details needing verification before talking with the possible offender (e. g. sign-out cards, pink slips, etc.) If the investigation warrants a search, a special meeting is held, and permission for the search is granted by the Dean of Women. A girl is entitled to remain in her room while it is being searched.

When a possible Judicial Board problem is brought to the Chairman, she and the Vice-Chairman exercise judgment as to the urgency of the investigation or trial. For instance, if it is plagiarism of a paper which was written several weeks earlier and collected by a professor, there is not the urgency that there would be in cases of stealing, classroom cheating, or questionable sobriety. The less urgent cases are handled by the Board at a time which does not put the members under great pressure relative to their academic work. Such cases may even wait until regular meeting time which is Monday at 7:00 p.m.

The Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and/or member of the Board to whom the case was reported talk with the possible offender informing her of the investigation. She is allowed adequate time, if she desires, to obtain counsel from within the student body.

If the violation should be one which, on examination, does not call for a formal Judicial Board trial, the issue is reported to and discussed at a regular meeting of the Board. If, however, after examination there is sufficient evidence to warrant a trial of the case, the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman so inform the possible violator, who may request that the charges made against her be reduced to writing. The accused is informed of the time of the trial, usually within 24 hours, and again is allowed time, if she desires, to seek counsel within the student body.

Some investigations arise from a misunderstanding of rules or from the fact that it may be a generally suspicious situation. If the report is of this kind, in order to clear the issue, the Vice-Chairman and/or a Board member talk with the person or persons involved and report the issue closed.

Offenses warranting an appearance before the Board are as follows:

1. Major cases involving violations of the Honor Code, unladylike conduct, and social regulations such as the drinking rule.
2. All other cases wherein the facts are not clear.
3. In such instances, it is to the girl's advantage that she have this opportunity to clarify any uncertainties in the case. Person or persons involved are brought to first floor Student Building and asked to stay in a designated room until called to appear.

The proceedings are confidential at the discretion of the Judicial Board. The Vice-Chairman first presents to the Board all relevant facts. The accused upon entering the government room is formally charged. Anyone who has taken the oath administered by the Chairman will be in violation of the Honor Code should she lie.

The accused has the privilege of requesting witnesses to testify in her behalf. Witnesses may also be called in by the Board and questioned. Any witness is subject to all of the provisions of the Honor Code. Therefore, any witness who gives false testimony may be subject to trial herself at a later time. The witness is always informed of the reason for her appearance at the trial.

The Board members may direct such questions as are relevant to the case to those appearing before them. After questioning, the person is asked to return to the designated room if the Board feels it may be necessary to talk with her again. If not, she is told that she may return to her dormitory.

After questioning and testimonies are given, the Board takes time to weigh carefully and thoughtfully all evidence before passing judgment. THE ACCUSED IS ALWAYS CONSIDERED INNOCENT UNTIL PROVEN GUILTY.

If a specific case DOES NOT WARRANT AN APPEARANCE before the Board, the facts are given to the Vice-Chairman, who relates them to the entire Board. The case is discussed, a decision is made, and the Chairman then informs the Board who the accused person is.

Any penalty given is approved by a majority vote of the Board. Penalties given by the Judicial Board may involve plain or strict campus, social probation, special probation, general probation, and recommendations for suspension or expulsion. In any event, the purpose of the penalty is to educate the student to the values of the Honor Tradition and the value of student self-government, which she has violated.

In those instances wherein there is a recommendation for suspension or expulsion of a student or students, the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the Board consult directly with the Administrative Committee of the College (President of the College, Academic Dean, Dean of Women, and the present Advisor of the Judicial Board), after which the recommendations of the Judicial Board are either confirmed or returned to the Board for modifications on the basis of suggestions from the Administrative Committee. The final responsibility in matters of suspension or expulsion will rest with the Administration.

The President of the College or member of the Administrative Committee informs the accused student of her penalty in cases of suspension or expulsion. Her parents are notified by the Dean of Women. The girl always has the privilege of talking with her parents before the Dean of Women notifies them. In all other decisions, a member of the Board may notify a girl of her penalty or else the accused is brought before the Board and is told her penalty by the Chairman.

Probations and/or minor infractions will be posted on the bulletin board outside the office of the Dean of Women with the girl's name omitted and the rule infraction noted. The name omission is for the girl's benefit and gives the student body an opportunity to profit by seeing penalties for rule infractions. The names and facts involved in cases of suspension or expulsion will be reported to the student body at the discretion of the Judicial Board.

In the event that the accused withdraws from Longwood College while her case is being tried, the Board may, in its discretion, complete the investigation and assign a penalty.

A girl may request a review of her case through the Chairman of the Board if she can provide sufficient reasons warranting a review. Such reasons should be presented in writing.

A member of the faculty of the College serves as the Advisor to the Judicial Board. Any questions on procedure, penalties, etc. may be talked over with the advisor or the Chairman of the Board if clarification is needed on any point.

Clowns Set Atmosphere, Perform Tumbling Acts

What would any circus be without its clowns? From the very first circus until the present day, clowns have always been the center of interest. Children as well as adults look forward to watching them as they do their specialized stunts and tricks.

Circus at Longwood also has its traditional clowns. These seven chosen girls serve to entertain the audience as well as to unify the two acts. They are carefully selected on the basis of their ability in tumbling and acrobatics. Out of approximately sixty girls who tried out, only seventeen were chosen, so one can see how carefully they were judged.

Longwood clowns in one sense may be considered the most important part of Circus. They not only entertain everyone but also break a little of the tension resulting from the stiff competition between the acts. For the benefit of anyone who has never seen our clowns perform, they do a series of tumbling acts ranging from the simple forward and backward rolls to complicated balances and flips.

Spirit is a prime concern of the clowns. Their acts create a sort of carefree spirit which envelops each member of the audience. It sets an atmosphere for a successful circus.

The clowns chosen for Circus 65 will perform both at the beginning of the program and in between each skit. The following girls were selected to be clowns for this year: Lynne Howell, Kathy Grizzard, Tommi Stone, Glenda Harrison, Joey Baker, Candy Jamison, Sharon Williams, Kay Moore, Karen Ruder, Cheryl Roberts, Betty Jo Hamner, Donna Daly, Pat Brown, Frances Stewart, Gerry Edwards, Pat Holstead, and June Williams.

BETTY JO PREPARES FOR BIG TOP PERFORMANCE

AKG Selects Hamner As Circus Ringmaster

Filling the top hat and black boots of the 1965 Circus Ringmaster will be Betty Jo Hamner, a junior elementary education major from Richmond.

When told she was to have the honor of representing her class, Betty Jo became "speechless" with disbelief. As Ringmaster she will preside over the annual "Big Top" and AKG's "Cotton Candy and Capering Clowns" which begins on Friday evening.

Leading such a large group will not be a new experience for Betty Jo, as she has been president of her class for two years, and was president of her freshman dorm. In her two years at Longwood she has been active in all phases of campus life, including Sigma Kappa, social sorority of which she is currently serving as vice-president. She is also a member of the Corkettes. Betty Jo's outside interests include sports and working together with the members of her class whom she "is proud to represent as Ringmaster."

LC Professors Attend Meeting Of CEA In N. C.

Nine members of the English department plan to attend the College English Association meeting to be held at the Agricultural and Technical College of North Carolina in Greensboro on October 30, 1965. Those attending will be Acting Chairman of the English Department, Mr. Foster B. Gresham, Miss Mary F. Nichols, Dr. Rosemary Sprague, Miss Margaret Gooch, Miss Caroline Hooker, Miss Patsy Hudson, Mrs. Mildred Davis, Mr. Herbert R. Blackwell, and Mr. Alan Brockman.

The topic for the morning session is entitled "The Responsibilities of the Undergraduate English Department." The afternoon session will be a panel given by the past and present presidents of the College English Association; their topic is "The Future of North Carolina - Virginia CEA." Dr. R. C. Simoni is a past president of the College English Association.

Arts Drive Girls To The Library To Seek Refuge

By Janet Fairies

It is rumored the library recently has been packed with freshmen during the night hours. Listening to any bits of conversation at the tables would give you an insight into the reason for this rumor.

"May I sit here?"
"Sure, I'll bet your roommate is an elementary educational major and taking either required music or art or arts and crafts."
"Yeah - how did you know?"
"Both of mine are."
"Rugged, isn't it? Did you get pushed out of your room too?"
"Pushed out? - I couldn't even get in. One of them is wearing a belt for arts and crafts and has the ends hooked to the door and the last I opened the door to go in, she screamed, 'Stop! Don't come in or you'll mess it up.'"

"Well, mine is in art. Last night she was painting and every five minutes I was asked questions like - 'What do you think of this?' 'Do I need more black?' I want to create some unusual effects - do you mind if I paint with your ivory board?' 'Hey, how about dipping your big toe in this grey paint and pressing it on the paper. You can still study for your chemistry test while you do it.' Tonight when she pulled out some paper, glue, and scissors, I made a hasty exit."

"The interruptions can be bad. My other roommate, a music student, is terrible about that. She had a cardboard piano keyboard which she pushed faithfully on every night. Every five minutes she would shout:

Avon Sales Question Brings About Survey

By SUZAN WOLTZ

With the recent controversy over the student sales question, and the decision reached by the Faculty Committee on Student Financial Aid, this week's Rotunda has decided to run a survey column, and see what the general student reaction is.

The following two questions were asked by the inquirer: What do you think of the decision of the Faculty Committee on Student Aid concerning student sale of such products as Avon? What in your opinion should be the appropriate action of the student body or student government to the new regulation?

Doris Holland, a senior, had this to say: "I don't like any part of the regulation. Now sororities can't sell, as well as Avon, and we can no longer obtain their items. Why have the rec then - it's the same reasoning." Doris used to be an Avon salesman, and she stated that girls thought she was doing them a service. "Often they came to me." To the second question, Doris said that she hates petitions, but does not know of anything else we can do about it.

Another senior, Nancy Walters, states that "I don't feel we were being disturbed at all. The sales were a courtesy and a service." "It means you don't need to go downtown for certain items - it's convenient and inexpensive." There were the opinions of Linda Patrick, a sophomore. She feels the Sunday morning doughnuts were great. Linda also feels that since there has been no known protest from the students, why has the committee taken its stand on this policy. She would like to see a great influx of products' sales kept off the campus, but would definitely like Avon sales to be re-admitted.

Sue Puller, a junior, really enjoyed Avon because she could safely use it on her hyper-allergic skin. Now she wants its return so she may again obtain it. "I feel a student vote on the subject would be in order." Sophomores Rachel Smiley concurs. "I think it's a little unfair to the students. Students need and enjoy things like Avon, personalized stationery, Sunday doughnuts, etc. I think the right of Free Enterprise may enter here." Rachel says that, as for the second question, she does not know what should be done, but that something should. "I just don't know how it should be undertaken. I think petitions have been run in the ground."

"I don't see any difference in having a representative from Avon and a representative from Star Cleaners." This is the opinion of Ellen Meetze, a junior. The action she would like to see taken assumes the form of a "joint committee of students and faculty. Perhaps they would reach a more acceptable understanding."

A similar opinion is held by Marie Ewing, a sophomore. She sees "no difference between the paper, cleaners, or the sorority sales. They're really services, like worthy causes." Her solution is also in a student vote. Kay Young, another junior, also feels that Avon Sales are a service. She, too, has sold the product, only at home, not here on campus. "I definitely don't like the decision. I don't know what we could do, but I would certainly like to see something done."

Another sophomore, Ruth Moorhead, states: "I fail to comprehend why the faculty did not bring the problem before the students since it concerns them."

AAUW

The American Association of University Women will hold a workshop program in Charlottesville on October 23, 1965. The Farmville Branch as hostess group will send the following delegates: Mrs. Edgar Johnson, Miss Mary Clay Hiner, Miss Mary Nichols, Mrs. Helen Savage, Mrs. Barbara Harville, Miss Lillian Minkel, Dr. Joanne Curran, and president Mrs. Anita Erno.

Frosh Elect Bittering Sponsor; Shows '69 Green'n White Spirit

The Freshman class recently elected Mr. M. Henry Bittering of the History and Social Sciences Department as its class sponsor. It is rumored that Mr. Bittering has been partial to the green and whites for a long time. Now he can show his spirit and interest in the light as sponsor of the green and white class of '69.

A native of Rich Valley, Virginia, but now claiming his home to be Farmville, Mr. Bittering first came to Longwood College in 1920 when he barely missed the black list. In 1954 he returned to college campus to teach and has remained here since. He teaches students western civilization, American history, and European history.

Mr. Bittering has attended Hampden-Sydney University of Virginia, and Minnesota. He holds a masters degree in History and Social Sciences.

Mr. Bittering claims he is not responsible for his class's organization and for the fact that all is going well. He commented that he is very glad to be a permanent member of the green and whites, but confesses that he "feels more green than anything else so far." At any rate, Mr. Bittering is quite confident that it will be a green and white Circus as well as a green and white year.

When asked what he felt about Longwood in general, Mr. Bittering said he would like to reinforce what Mr. Hall, the photographer from Roanoke, had told him. Mr. Hall said that he had been to all the colleges in the state and that Longwood girls were the nicest in the state.

MR. BITTERING, SPONSOR OF THE CLASS OF '69.

Molnar Requests String Musicians For Performance

Dr. Molnar, the Chairman of the Department of Music and conductor of the Concert Choir, is anxious to get in touch with all stringed instrument players on the campus. Plans for the Christmas Concert include the performances of the J. C. Bach cantatas, The Christmas of Christ, and Dr. Molnar hopes to use a string ensemble, two flutes, and harpsichord for the accompaniment. Two violinists and a cellist have already been found, and they will form the nucleus of the group. If any student is interested in playing in the ensemble, please see Dr. Molnar. The rehearsal times will be established later; they will not demand a great deal of time on the part of the players. If you are a string player, please come to the Department and see Dr. Molnar. The Department has instruments, if you do not have yours with you. Violin, viola, cello and string bass players are needed.

Berkeley Mood Changes As Univ. Campus Calms

COLLEGIATE PRESS SERVICE—The demonstrations which rocked Berkeley last year won't happen again, President Clark Kerr of the University of California believes.

"The mood within the faculty is changing fast," Kerr said in an interview during the 48th annual American Council on Education meeting (Oct. 6-8). "There is no question that the undergraduate has been neglected, but the faculty has a new interest in him." This is one of the "constructive results" of the Berkeley conflict, he contended.

Another factor in the "new mood on campus" was the shake-up within the administration ruling, given without consulting either the faculty or the students, which closed off an area on the campus traditionally reserved for distribution of political literature. "Roger Heyns (the new Berkeley chancellor) just isn't going to make a mistake like that," Kerr said. "The lack of communication among students, faculty, and administrators was growing before the Berkeley revolt, he commented. "The students came to us better prepared and more highly motivated toward academic study at the same time that the faculty was drawn to research and tasks as consultants. The gap grew."

How is the administration developing the channels of communication that students charged were lacking last year, Kerr was asked. The Irvine report, (Continued on page 4)

Tuition Grants

It was announced last spring that the Board of Visitors of Longwood College intended to solicit private funds to be made available to members of the Longwood faculty who wish to enroll their children in Prince Edward Academy. In view of the ideals and goals of Longwood, the above policy seems highly incongruous with the very nature of Longwood as a teacher-training college.

The primary aim of Longwood is to train students to eventually enter the field of public education. While Longwood students are not directly involved in the issue, these tuition grants, by process of association, commit the entire Longwood College community to what appears to be an endorsement of a private school system. Payment of tuition grants implies approval of the status quo in Prince Edward County on the part of Longwood College.

The very financial foundations of Longwood are built upon grants from both the federal and state governments. How can Longwood, on one hand, accept state and federal funds collected from the general public while on the other hand support the continuance and development of a private school system, developed out of a desire to educate a select few?

For a long time Longwood has tried to ignore the issue of public-school closings in Prince Edward County by realizing that the issue did not concern our remote institution. Time has proven differently. Longwood has had difficulty ever since attracting to the campus professors who have school-aged children. No one wanted to teach here while their own children would suffer from lack of a proper education. Consequently, this tuition payment plan was adopted in an attempt to make Longwood more attractive to prospective professors. To use an old cliché, is this not a case of not cleaning the room but merely sweeping the dirt under the rug?

It would seem that instead of fostering the development of a private school system, Longwood would do well to take an active position of leadership in re-establishing a sound system of public education rather than hide a private one.

LC And Leadership

Note: The following editorial was written by Ed Schwartz, a graduate student at Oldham, and is being reprinted here in hopes that you will consider it in the light of our own college, and that you will reflect on the opportunities of Longwood to develop qualities of leadership.

With the collapse last year of the educational philosophy of an entire decade at Berkeley and elsewhere, colleges are going to have a few adjustment problems of their own.

Today colleges boast of large programs of extra-curricular activities to develop qualities of citizenship. They strive to uphold the moral standards of those enrolled. They may require that a student live in a college dorm, eat in a college dining hall, and obey a long list of college rules reprinted in a college handbook or tacked on a college wall. They may hire psychologists, special counselors, administrators of extra-curricular activities, even social directors. By their own admission, classroom education is only one part of their relationship to the student.

When an educational institution accepts this premise, however, that student's involvement in policy is equally necessary to develop "qualities of citizenship" and that student action in local communities is a desirable adjunct to courses, many will revert to enlist the argument that "education should be confined to the classroom - you have no business doing any of these things."

It is not that we object to a college which seeks to provide extra-curricular as well as classroom programs for its students. Indeed, as higher education is made available to larger numbers and as course material replaces vocational training with broad development, opportunities for action will be necessary for students to test conflicting theories through participation. But a college cannot confuse development with indoctrination, participation with manipulation, and expect a person trained in critical thought to accept.

If we want the American campus to become a laboratory for the "leaders of tomorrow," we must create a campus community in which qualities of leadership can be developed - one which guarantees that a student opinion has some chance of implementation and which enables a student politico to work in the "real world" with the college's blessings. Otherwise, we will discover that the student has learned his lessons too well.

Muu Muus Growing - Grannies Appearing

By Phyllis Hummer

Remember the bright, splashy little dress you pulled on to run down to the store this summer - your muu muu? These "fantabulous" little numbers started popping up on campuses all across the nation about two years ago with variations unlimited - bandanna prints, checkerboard squares, exotic flower prints, stripes. Please print - the sky was the limit for these imaginative little dresses.

Well, with the arrival of the "London Set" many things have changed, including the muu muu. The muu muu has gone mod and turned into a granny. Crazy, huh? It happened in Los Angeles, and within a month grannies had shown up everywhere in broad daylight, including the Beatles concert in the Hollywood Bowl, and at U.C.L.A.

A granny is not a grandmother but a garment - a dress that covers the wearer from neck to ankle, a kind of refined Mother Hubbard, dressed up with Victorian bows. Real-life grannies would not be caught dead in one; grannies are only for girls.

It began with a few California surfers who could sew. The girls had imported bright, flowery muu muus from Hawaii to wear after surfing. Originally, muu muus were thought up by missionaries to cover the bare breasts of the native women. These girls trimmed off excess material, ripped in the bodice for trim fit, slit the skirt for free movement, and finished it all off with ruffles and bows.

When enough of the home-manufactured variety had shown up on the street, store buyers decided it was a worthwhile fad. Selling at $10 to $15, store-manufactured grannies have shown up mainly in Chicago, Manhattan, Pittsburgh, and Los Angeles.

In Los Angeles, grannies have become popular for date wear and general after-school wear.

One designer explained, "It's a study in contrast - the kids go from the wild, wild short dresses to the neat little grannies." Another observer has a better theory, "The kids want it because it is something mother won't copy!"

Have any grannies appeared on the L.C. campus yet?

LC Welcomes The Hamptons To The Faculty

There are two new additions to the Longwood faculty this year with oddly enough, the same last name of Hampton.

Perhaps one would think it a bit unusual until he heard they were Mr. and Mrs. Carol D. Hampton.

Mr. Carol D. Hampton is instructing classes in the principles of elementary and secondary education. He was graduated from Southern Illinois University where he received his BA and MS degrees. He is currently working for his doctorate from the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Carolyn H. Hampton, his wife, received her Bachelor of Science degree from Appalachian State Teachers College

Letter To Editor

Avon Products' Representative Defends Sales

Dear Editor,

Having been an Avon representative for a year myself, I can agree wholeheartedly with your editorial in the last issue of the Rotunda. As to the question of whether the sale of Avon products is a service or not, perhaps it would be wise for the Financial Assistance Committee to poll the student body and obtain its views. There is no student representation on this committee to my knowledge, and to me it seems that student opinion should have been considered in such a case.

As far as the fear of bringing undesirable companies onto the campus, or of letting the area of sales get out of hand, I can only offer the suggestion that Mrs. Watkins and the financial assistance committee continue to control sales as has been the policy in the past, first by Dean Wilson and then by Mrs. Watkins. This would seem to be a sufficient safeguard as far as both undesirable companies and too many sales are concerned.

I feel that the matter should certainly be given another careful look. I have been granted another job on campus, but I much prefer my previous employment with the Avon company.

making a mistake in her playing - I'll never know how, and she always makes some comment which completely disrupts my studying. When I got back from the library last night, she was in the middle of the room waving her arms. I think she thought she was conducting. She was also singing that song -

"If you're happy and you know it, clap your hands." Of course she clapped her hands along with it. Honestly, it's funnier than watching girls watching Peyton Place.

"Say, if we keep this up, I'll have been better off in my room. I'm moving to that empty table. Good luck with your roommates!"

and her Masters and Ph.D. from the University of Tennessee. After teaching at the University of North Carolina she is now teaching bacteriology and anatomy here.

The Hamptons, who met while taking a course in Beaufort, North Carolina, share many similar interests. Among these are hiking, canoeing, water skiing, and skin diving. "Being so inland we have very little opportunity to do any skin diving," commented Dr. Hampton.

Longwood welcomes these two new additions to the faculty.

Support Colors Sat.

Everyone is urged to come out and support their colors this Saturday as the red and whites and green and whites race for each of the eight dorms and the color banner to be hung on each.

Free Universities

At a conference at Times-Life, where they are preparing a series on "Youth," I was surprised that they hadn't heard of the Free University movement though small dissenting colleges have sprung up in probably several dozen places this year. (I myself have been invited to a dozen.) That is, the Time-Life part of the Establishment is no more in touch with what is going on than, say, the Central Intelligence Agency is in touch with Latin America, or the Federal Arts Council is in touch with living theater. Yet how would they know, given the company they keep?

During the Cold War, American education has been increasingly tightly harnessed to (not very ideal) National Goals; it is unfitly to speak of the Factory-University, powered by government, foundation, and corporation money, and processing students. Inevitably, therefore, there are attempts to set up small independent enterprises of higher education, generally in or next to big established institutions. Our situation has historical analogies. In 18th century England there sprang up tiny dissenting academies to escape the Test Acts, a kind of loyalty-oath. During the Renaissance, the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge withdrew from the Universities, which had rigidified. The very beginning of our present higher education, during the rise of the towns in the 12th and 13th centuries, was the founding of tiny universities of free scholars and clerics in the face of the feudal Church.

Overlapping Para-Movements

And there is an important analogy in our own times. The para-colleges are like the para-politics of the Freedom Democratic Party in Mississippi to by-pass a system of injustice, the para-sociology of militant community-development to combat the patronizing social work of the Welfare State, or even the para-movements tend to overlap. People who object to credits and grading are likely to object to gray flannel suits and to police brutality.

All the para-colleges have common themes. They object to the impersonality of faculty-student relations, cash-accounting credits and grading, high tuition-fee, administrative paternalism, extra-mural interference with freedom of speech and inquiry and morals, irrelevant bigness in the rather simple function of teaching and learning. Positively, the dissenters want community curriculum directly related to social and personal reality, a say in making decisions, learning motivations to study, and tailoring the schedule to individual needs and stages of development.

Types of "Free Universities"

Naturally, however, each spontaneous group has its own emphasis and style. Graduate students at Columbia feel that authentic scholarship is impossible in the routine in which they are getting their degrees, so in their "free university" they set up night courses to which they invite scholars they respect to teach them real subjects for real. The graduate students at Berkeley, on the other hand, are suspicious of "anybody over 30"; they feel they can direct their own studies, and they are especially interested in political subjects avoided in the regular curriculum, including direct action projects like organization militant farm-labor. An interesting group at Ohio University (Athens) is offering foundation-support to hire its own professors; and I have been offered a princely salary by a group of students at San Francisco State (I don't know where the money comes from). In these cases, it seems that what is studied will be an agreement of what the teachers want to teach and the students want to learn; but in other cases the curriculum is determined entirely by the students. For example, in the Guild of Independent Students started by a drop-out of Swarthmore, each one studies on his own and presents his work to the others, but admitted "veterans" are invited to visit, criticize, and inspire. At Month, undergraduates, remaining within the school, choose from their own number teachers who they think have a particular competence and whom they can do of course depend. At the new Free University at Rice, professors are welcome to say anything, but are expected to them that we don't want to be taught anything, we want the chance to learn." The free university conference of Students for a Democratic Society, centered in Ann Arbor, has heavily stressed the beneficial effect of interpersonal confrontation, an emphasis, no doubt, from the remarkable SDS experiences in community development in poor neighborhoods.

Relations With "Real Colleges"

A problem arises in the odd relation of the para-colleges and the regular institutions they are in or next to. President Alden of Ohio has seemed eager for the students to try on their own, so long as it doesn't cost the State anything. When Meyerson was acting-Chancellor at Berkeley he told me he would give academic credit for the para-courses if they could prove themselves. At Rice, however, there seems to be ill-feeling and rivalry. Swarthmore cannot (Sept. 21) make up its mind if the independent Guild can use the library. At Rice and Columbia it is, interestingly, religious organizations on the campus that sponsor the dissenters and provide shelter or money.

Meantime, the para-colleges enthusiastically branch out into all kinds of extra-curricular community projects, from political and social direct actions (these are sometimes curricular, under the heading "pragmatic sociology") to coffee-houses, high theaters, and political journals, co-op bookstores, student housing. What a beautiful Do-It-Yourselves populism! What a pity they are so young and inexperienced. If not they, who?

Mary Martha Crews Elected Freshman Class Treasurer

Mary Martha Crews has recently been elected Treasurer of the Freshman Class.

Mary Martha, who is more commonly known as Mary Pat, graduated from Chatham High School where she was a varsity cheerleader. She also cheered at the high school in Atlanta where she was very active in the which she attended previously to Chatham. At this school she was also active in student government work.

Mary Pat a speech pathology major, enjoys sewing and is quite apt at it as much of her wardrobe will indicate. "Being elected class Treasurer was a great honor and I hope to prove myself worthy of the trust placed in me," commented Mary Pat.

Longwood Ladies Score Three Victories; Settle For One Tie

Saturday, October 16, Mary Washington came to Longwood for our first varsity hockey game of the season to be held at home. The atmosphere must have been good for the Ladies because they pulled together as they never have and showed LC spectators their remarkable ability.

The first game was a completely offensive game, and the Longwood goalie only worked three times. We would like to mention that one of those occasions Pat Lyddane came all the way out of the sinking circle to intercept a ball in order to get some action! The teamwork of the Longwood Ladies was amazing and fascinating to watch, and their teamwork paid off. Goals were made by Carolyn Cline-2, Ginny Morton-2, Barbara Ragland-1 and Diane Davis-1. The final score was 6-0 as the LC team rallied for their home victory.

In the second game, the teams were quite matched. The first half was rather choppy and no one seemed to make much progress, until Ruth Limbrick scored the first goal. This seemed to put that unknown spirit which we have back into the team, and the second half LC spent most of the time down at the Mary Washington goal, but succeeded to score only once, a beautiful shot by Peggy Wilkins. Then the Mary Washington team got the ball and scored. The rest of the game was completely offensive but no goals were scored. The final score for the second team was 2-1. Needless to say, this is a great way to start off the home games!

LC RALLIES TO VICTORY

Last Tuesday, October 12, the Longwood Ladies traveled to Norfolk to play Old Dominion for their third game of the season. Most of the play was at the O. D. goal, but Longwood could not get a decent shot at the cage. The Old Dominion team had only one shot at the goal in the entire first half, and that was cleared by our goalie, Pat Lyddane.

In the second half, Old Dominion scored on their first shot corner. This was the first goal scored against Pat Lyddane this season, however, seconds later, Carolyn Cline scored for Longwood. O. D. again scored followed by another score by us, this time by Ruth Limbrick. At this point the game ended, with the first tie score of the season—2 to 2.

In the second game, wing Helena Hall made the first of many goals. She was soon followed by Vannie Gunter. Another goal was scored by Ginny Morton, but was not counted since it went off her hand. But Ginny retaliated in the next few seconds and brought the score to 3-0. By the end of the first half, Vannie had scored twice more and Ginny once, bringing the score 6-0 at halftime.

In the second half, Longwood stayed in their opponents circle the entire period. During the game, however, there were numerous fouls by both Longwood and Old Dominion. Towards the end, nevertheless, LC scored twice more, once by Nancy Maxey and the last by Peggy Wilkins. The final score was 8-0.

Cahoos Finally Come Commend In Rotunda

The Rotunda was the scene of another traditional Longwood presentation today as scores of Cahoos commenced their annual "commending ceremony." Cahoos presented what was termed a "freezing" as opposed to the familiar "burnings" around the campus. The members dressed appropriately in their trench coats to adjust to the "freezing" temperatures.

Cahoos which consists of all seniors and two junior helpers, represents the spirit of humor on the Longwood campus. In accord with its role in campus life, Cahoos commended such things as retired Avon representatives, Lee and decided it an honor any part of the campus, President Newman for his physical fitness program, those students whose initials have been labeled them to attend unapproved parties for years, and all those students who sincerely believe in Mary Margaret Truman.

As Cahoos filed into the Rotunda, they sang their traditional theme song, "Salvation Army." Commendations culminated with the throwing of ice cubes into a fire bucket. The group was led by their officers who displayed red Cahoos banners over their trench coats.

All seniors are eligible for membership, but the offices are passed from one graduating class to the next. The state of officers, in this case, is long and varied. They consist of Carol "Tinkle" White, President; Mary Lee Shoulters, Reporter; Della Anderson, Project Director; Frances Stewart, Public Relations Director; Rusty Stevenson, Historian; Byrd Peyser, Treasurer; Karen Ruder, Secretary; Becky Knight, Song Leader; Susan Marsh, Recording Secretary; and Carol Williams, Vice-President.

A new feature has been added to Cahoos this year which is the selection of two juniors to serve as "Helpers." They are Susan Zix and Sally Porter.

Objective Tests Found Dishonest By Professor

(CPS) — "Multiple-choice tests corrupt education," declares Dr. Banesh Hoffman, professor of Mathematics at Queens College, Author of "The Ethics of Testing" charges that multiple-choice tests use ambiguity as a substitute for genuine difficulty and foster intellectual dishonesty.

"They favor quick-witted superficiality while penalizing depth, subtlety, and creativity," Professor Hoffman asserts.

Dr. Hoffman has been three times a member of the Institute for Advanced Study. An expert on relativity theory, he collaborated with Einstein and filed on a classic research paper, and has written more than seventy articles on the subject. In the field of testing, he has been consultant to the Westinghouse Science Talent Search for the past twenty years.

Dr. Hoffman disputes the claim of test makers that they are scientists. He calls their statistical methods "inherently misleading." He recommends that a distinguished committee of inquiry be established to act in the public interest in examining the whole matter of testing in education. In recent months, Dr. Hoffman has discussed the attempts of Educational Testing Service to defend against challenges to its sample questions.

Club Chooses New Members For Apprentices

Tryouts for Corlettes were held on Monday, October 11, and again on the 18th. Corlettes is a subsidiary of the H2O Club which gives its members an opportunity to learn synchronized swimming. The girls who tried out were asked to demonstrate their swimming ability by performing certain stunts and strokes. The Corlettes will join with the H2O Club to present a water show in the Spring.

Congratulations go to: Barbara Lewis, Carol Padera, Sally Porter, Stephanie DuRoss, Carol Blythe, Betty McCann, and Betty Jo Hammer who were accepted into the Corlettes on the 11th. On the 18th, the following were accepted: Alberta Doran, Carol Skelly, Lynn Kuntard, Pat Halsead, Susan Zix, Holly Nuckels, and Holly Wolford.

Varsity Team Sports Seniors; Nine Participate This Season

Of the twenty six members of the varsity hockey team, nine of them are seniors. These are: Carolyn Cline, Nevis Born, Pat Dugger, Jayne Eddy, Helena Hall, Ginny Morton, Barbara Ragland, Rusty Stephenson, and Frances Stewart.

Carolyn is a physical education major from Alexandria. She is a member of the Athletic Association Council, the Monogram Club, and Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority. She plans to do her student teaching in Danville second block. Carolyn plays both right and left inner for the varsity team.

Nevis Born, a physical education major from northern Virginia, is president of the Monogram Club this year. This fall she received a white blazer for her outstanding participation in sports. She plays fullback on the team.

Pat Dugger is majoring in elementary education and is the technical director for the Longwood Players. In addition she is a member of Alpha Psi Omega and plays goalie for the Longwood team.

Jayne Eddy is majoring in physical education and is going to do her student teaching in Lynchburg second block. She was a recipient of a blue blazer this fall. She is also a member of the monogram Club. She plays fullback on the varsity team. Helena Hall, a physical education major, is the president of the Orchestra. She is also the senior representative of the Legislative Board for this block. Last year, Helena was a member of the May Court. She plays left wing for the team.

Ginny Morton, who received a blue blazer for her participation in sports, is a physical education major from Newport News. She is a member of the Athletic Association Council for this year. Ginny plays inner on the varsity team.

Barbara Ragland is vice-president of the Athletic Association Council. She is the senior representative to the Judicial Board. Frances received a white blazer this year and is a member of the Monogram Club and Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority. She plays left halfback.

These are the senior members of the varsity hockey. Good luck for the rest of the season!

Sports Enthusiast Shows Energy, Spirit

When Carolyn Cline participates in any sport, she is not only exhibiting her outstanding athletic ability, but she is also displaying all the spirit and enthusiasm she has for all team efforts. She is not playing for herself as an individual, but she is striving to make it a completely group accomplishment.

Carolyn, a Physical and Health Education major, is from Arlington, Virginia, and she is doing her student teaching in Danville second block. She is anxiously looking forward to this experience.

This cheerful, friendly, and personable member of the Class of '68 has participated in numerous Athletic Association activities during her successful career at Longwood. This faithful participation was rewarded last month when she received a white blazer at the Athletic Association banquet. Carolyn is also a member of the Monogram Club.

Carolyn is serving as a member of the recreation committee of the Athletic Association Council this year, and this Senior plays right and left inner on the varsity hockey team. In addition to being a member of the varsity tennis team, Carolyn has also participated in class volleyball and basketball. To add to her list of activities, she also plays lacrosse.

CAROLYN CLINE

As has been proved in her years at Longwood, this member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority is what one may definitely call a "true sports enthusiast."

Free Bowling Includes Rules For Students

The Longwood Athletic Association began its annual sponsorship of the student bowling program. The lanes opened to LC students Monday, October 18. The program, which is subsidized by funds from the student activity fee, enables students to bowl free of charge, provided they follow these two rules:

1. You may bowl a total of six games during the day per week.
2. You may bowl a combination of three games during the day and two games at night per week.

Each girl is responsible for keeping account of the number of games she has played and is expected to keep within the set limits.

Sophomores Elect Ripely Red And White Sponsor

The Sophomores returned to the college campus this fall to learn that their class sponsor, Mr. O. J. Bernades, had been appointed as the chairman of Business Education in West Virginia. However, the Class of '68 was lucky enough to find a true-to-life Longwood College out among its leaders.

While a student at Longwood,

"Y" Introduces Latin And South American Suits

An interesting program was presented by the Y.W.C.A. today at 4 p.m. in the Y.W.C.A. Lounge. This program was an opportunity for Longwood girls to meet the students on our campus who have lived in Latin and South America.

This week Lynn Mallory planned the program about our "Southern Neighbors." The program consisted of an informal discussion led by two Longwood students, Ines Colon and Meg Pherson. Ines is a citizen of Puerto Rico and the United States. Meg, a member of the class of '69, spoke about her experiences as an American Exchange Student in Chile this past summer.

The topics for discussion were as follows:

1. Misconceptions Latin Americans have about America and the United States and vice-versa.
2. Differences in social life.
3. Differences in educational systems.

The Y.W.C.A. has an important role at Longwood and through the support of the student body, the "Y" is able to strive toward bigger and better goals.

The "Y" reminds you that every Longwood girl is a member of the Y.W.C.A. and is welcomed at all cabinet meetings.

Business Group Holds Fall Picnic At 'Rafterwood'

The Fall Phi Beta Lambda Picnic was held at Rafterwood, the estate of Mrs. John W. Talley, Jr., Associate Professor of Business Education, on Friday, October 15, at 5:00 p.m. Faculty members and thirty business majors attended. Among those present on the faculty were: Dr. and Mrs. Landrum, Mr. and Mrs. Leeper, Mr. and Mrs. Myers, and Mr. and Mrs. Hamlett. Everyone enjoyed a delicious meal served and prepared by Mrs. Talley and her cooks on the lawn. Afterwards, all gathered around a big bonfire, and then took a tour through Mrs. Talley's home.

This picnic enabled all of the Business majors to become better acquainted with one another and the Business Department faculty. Everyone who attended had a wonderful time.

On October 19, the Freshmen and new members were installed into the Gamma Epsilon chapter of Phi Beta Lambda here at Longwood.

VEA Section C Hears Lane Talk On Geography

Charles F. Lane, Chairman of the Department of History and Social Sciences, recently spoke to a meeting of the Section C division of the VEA. The meeting took place in Lee-Davis at Mechanicsville, Virginia.

Dr. Lane spoke on "Dimensions of Geography." The theme was October 9.

Miss Ripley played varsity hockey, basketball, and archery. She also participated in all the class sports.

Miss Ripley is a member of the Portsmouth hockey club, and she last week joined the Longwood Golf Club. Her intentions are to play as much golf as possible, regardless of the weather.

Next to sports Miss Ripley's main interests seem to center around her pets. At the time of this interview Miss Ripley had her basket hound, which she calls "Oreille," in the office with her. She also has a cat and some fish in her apartment.

Since graduating from LC Miss Ripley has obtained her Masters degree in Physical Education at the University of North Carolina. She went on an assistantship and taught at a school for the deaf while at UNC. She has also taught high school in Chesterfield County at Matoaca High School where she coached basketball and softball.

Miss Ripley said she was pleased and surprised at being chosen class sponsor. She holds hope of their working together and expectations of enjoying it.

Science Academy To Select Ones For Fellowships

The National Academy of Sciences - National Research Council has been called upon again to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of graduate and regular postdoctoral fellowships. Committees of outstanding scientists appointed by the Academy-Research Council will evaluate applications of all candidates. Final selection will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced on March 15, 1966.

Fellowships will be awarded for study in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological and engineering sciences; also in anthropology, economics (excluding business administration), geography, the history of philosophy of science, linguistics, political science, psychology (excluding clinical psychology), and sociology (not including social work). They are open to college seniors, graduate students working toward a degree, postdoctoral students, and others with equivalent training and experience. All applicants must be citizens of the United States and will be judged solely on the basis of ability.

Applicants for the graduate awards will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test scientific aptitude and achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on January 15, 1966, at designated centers throughout the United States and certain foreign countries.

The annual stipends for graduate fellowships are as follows: $2400 for the first year, $2600 for the second year, and $2800 for the third year. The annual stipend for postdoctoral fellows is $3000. Limited allowances will also be provided for application, tuition, laboratory fees, and travel.

For information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Academy of Sciences - National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418. The deadline for the receipt of applications for graduate fellowships is December 10, 1965, and for postdoctoral fellowships, December 13, 1965.

Kansas Gallery Buys Woodcuts For Collection

The directors of the Birger Sandzen Memorial Art Gallery at Lindsay, Kansas, has recently purchased four woodcuts by Annie Lee Ross, Associate Professor of Art at Longwood College. Purchased from the C. P. Greenough Fund, Miss Ross's prints will be placed in the permanent print collection of the Sandzen Art Gallery.

The Birger Sandzen Memorial Art Gallery was built in memory of the late Swedish-American impressionist painter Birger Sandzen, and there the largest collection of his work is on display.

Miss Ross was a student of Mr. Sandzen at Bethany College, Lindsay, Kansas, and prior to coming to Longwood College served for four years as his assistant in the art department of Bethany College.

President Kerr Tells Of Changes Around Berkeley

prepared for the university regents, recommended recently along the lines of a "commonwealth" to meet the needs of the individual campuses of the University.

"We are not going to implement the Kerr report," Kerr said. "In a commonwealth any member can withdraw at any time, and no one really wants that."

Kerr also looks to possible structural changes at Berkeley, although he admits that the campus is so large and settled that substantial innovations are probably not possible. He has recommended to the University of California regents, however, dropping the enrollment from 27,000 to 25,000 while raising the graduate student proportion from 38 per cent to 50 per cent.

Kerr also remains interested in education activity within the residence halls — a plan of his rejected by the regents in the late fifties. Living study units for students and faculty are now gaining support at Berkeley, he said, but again the problem lies in converting existing structures to such use.

Kerr was the target of attacks from all sides during the conflict, and he has remained a target for conservative pressure in the state. "There is some feeling outside the campus that the liberalization that had gone on during my seven years as president had gone too far, and the demonstrations were an inevitable result. Conservatives see no counteraction from us for the actions of the students; as in a Greek tragedy they expect sufficient retribution."

Referring to a report made by the state Senate's un-American Activities committee, Kerr dismissed the charge that the revolt was a Communist plot. "It wasn't, and I say so," he declared.

Kerr talked about the three new campuses within the University of California which carry his hopes for combining the "advantages of the small college with the big campus." These new universities at Santa Cruz, Irvine and San Diego, represent three distinct approaches to education, he indicated.

At Santa Cruz the three universities on the campus are organized around the science laboratories, research libraries and cultural facilities. The Irvine campus is "highly integrated," with classroom buildings of the various disciplines mixed on the

"Pop" Prompts Leaders

BLESSED is the leader who has not sought the high places, but who has been drafted into service because of his ability and willingness to serve.

BLESSED is the leader who knows where he is going, why he is going, and how to get there.

BLESSED is the leader who knows no discouragement, who presents no alibi.

BLESSED is the leader who knows how to lead without being dictatorial; true leaders are humble.

BLESSED is the leader who seeks for the best for those he serves.

BLESSED is the leader who leads for the good of the most concerned, and not for the personal gratification of his own ideas.

BLESSED is the leader who develops leaders while leading.

BLESSED is the leader who marches with the group, interprets correctly the signs on the pathway that leads to success.

BLESSED is the leader who has his head in the clouds but his feet on the ground.

campus. San Diego contains three sub-campuses, each one a self-contained unit of four colleges.

Rumors have been rampant concerning Kerr's resignation, at first for some time, and he actually did try to resign last March. However, he now says unequivocally that he "has no intentions of leaving." He appears to be much more optimistic about Berkeley's future than he was reported to be at the time of the crisis — "People don't understand the tremendous vitality of this place. You could have gone through the whole of last year there without ever realizing anything was wrong."

If his composure was at one point shaken, he now appears confident of his own ability, and that of his new Berkeley chancellor, to handle whatever comes up.

VEA Holds Convention; Professors Participate

By Kay Young

The county first annual convention of the Virginia Educational Association opened last week in Richmond. The official headquarters for the three-day meeting was the Hotel John Marshall, Fifth and Franklin streets. The Longwood College faculty has 54 of its members who are also members of the VEA.

Mr. George P. Elliot and Mr. David A. Thomas were the official Longwood College delegates. They each had one vote, but any member of the association was entitled to a voice on the floor.

The first general session began in the Mosque Auditorium. The second session opened the next morning, with the third general session being held that night. The final session was held Friday night at which time Gov. Albert S. Harrison, Jr., addressed the convention.

English Scholar Delivers Speech

Dr. Rosemary Sprague, full-time English professor at Longwood and author of eight historical novels, lectured recently to the school librarian section of the Virginia Education Association on the topic "Biography, The Other Side of the Coin."

Her next speaking engagement will be November 4 at the Miller & Rhoads Virginia Women's Forum where she will lecture on "Literature and the Space Age." Other speakers include Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission; Dr. Russell Kirk, author of "The Conservative Mind"; and Dr. Ralph T. Overman, chairman of the special training division of the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies.

Dr. Sprague is a woman of diversity. She directed and played the lead in the American pre-

Music for the convention was furnished by the Henrico County High School Band, the Thomas Jefferson High School Choir of Richmond, and the James Madison Concert Choir of Vienna. There was also a group singing for the opening and closing sessions of the convention at the Mosque. Wednesday night, Charles Cooke of Chandler Junior High School led the audience in singing the national anthem. Preceding the Governors' address on Friday night, Clarence J. Hesch, State supervisor of Music, State Department of Education, led in singing "Old Virginia."

Four members of the VEA from Longwood College spoke at the convention. Mrs. Nell H. Griffin, Chairman of Longwood's Department of Home Economics spoke Friday to the Virginia Home Economics Teachers Association. Her topic was "Becoming a Professional Teacher."

Miss Beatrice Bland, a new member of the Longwood faculty this year, was president of the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development, VEA. She presided at meetings on Wednesday and Thursday.

Dr. Richard B. Brooks, President of the Virginia Association for Teacher Education, presided at meetings Thursday and Friday. Dean Brooks also spoke on Thursday about "Revitalizing the VEA Department of Teacher Education."

"Biography, The Other Side of the Coin" was the topic on which Dr. Rosemary Sprague spoke on Friday. She addressed the Association for Teaching Materials.

On Friday afternoon the Longwood College Alumnae held an Open House for the Longwood administration and faculty and students who are doing their practice teaching in the Richmond area. The Open House was in the Colony Room of the Hotel John Marshall.

Schlegel Attends History Meeting In Pennsylvania

Professor of History and Social Sciences Marvin W. Schlegel recently took a trip to attend a meeting of the American Association for State and Local History. The meeting was held in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

The meeting was special for two reasons: the first, it was the 25th anniversary of the Association, and, secondly, it was the dedication of the new William Penn Memorial Museum. The museum was in the planning stages for some time, so the dedication and completion of the building was the culmination of several years' work. Dr. Schlegel previously had worked for the commission that built the museum. He is a founding member of the American Association for State and Local History.

Dates for the meeting were October 13, 14, and 15. Along with the above, discussions were held concerning historical problems.

As opening night approaches for Shakespeare's "As You Like It," members of the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs are busy rehearsing their roles. The production will feature several interesting aspects in set design including a thrust stage and four periaktos. The play will open on November 4.

Newman Comments On Campus Sales Question

In a meeting with several student leaders last week, Dr. Newman issued the following statement for The Rotunda:

"There has been inadequate communication between some groups and offices at Longwood College in considering the subject of student sales. I feel that I am responsible for a large part of this inadequate communication. A group of representative student leaders, the Faculty Committee on Student Financial Aid, the Dean of Women, the Director of Admissions, and I are all in complete agreement that we must make every effort to get all the facts and information available, and that there must be adequate communication among the interested groups and individuals. This approach applies to the subject of student sales or any other subject that may present itself at Longwood College."

After meeting with the Committee on Student Financial Aid on October 28, 1965, Dr. Newman, President of Longwood, announced that he had accepted the recommendations of that committee on the subject of student sales. These recommendations are:

1. Permission for student sales will be administered by the Office of the Dean of Women.
2. Student financial aid will continue to be handled by the Director of Admissions.
3. Any student or groups interested in student sales should complete an application form in the Office of the Dean of Women.

Business Group Plans Meeting Of Executives

Saturday the executive board meeting of the Virginia state chapter of Phi Beta Lambda will meet here in the Student Lounge. Shirley Mann, State President, will preside over the meeting. There will be a coffee hour at 10 o'clock with hostesses from the Longwood chapter, Mary Lou Whitehead, Jane Loufolt, and Mollie Smith. Lunch will be in the dining hall. The executive board is meeting to make plans for the state convention and to make plans for the fall planning meeting which will probably meet in November.

Those attending the meeting will include the state officers and the presidents of each of the following chapters: Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Averett College, Longwood College, Hampton Institute, Madison College, White Paul's College, Old Dominion College, Norfolk Division of Virginia State, Richard Bland College, Virginia State College, Radford College, Richmond Professional Institute, Virginia Union University, and Shenandoah College.

LC Players Present Shakespeare Comedy

By Beverley Roark

Jarman's stage will be well lit for the nights of November 4, 5, and 6 as the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs present Shakespeare's delightful pastoral play, As You Like It.

As You Like It is being given as a presentational type play with no curtains involved.

Almost the entire performance will take place on a thrust stage which projects over the first two rows of the auditorium. The only scenery will be four periaktos which the actors will turn to expose the three sides. The periaktos will depict a court scene, a forest scene, and a gold wedding panorama. Director, Dr. Patton Lockwood, stated that this type stage helps acoustically in that soft voices are easily audible.

Lockwood has made few modifications from the folio edition. He has transposed two short scenes in order that one of the actors can change roles.

Only two of the actors have ever acted in a Longwood production. All the boys but one are freshmen.

The play involves a mistaken identity resulting from a breeches role. It includes a wrestling match, four romances, two triangles, and a happy ending for all.

The Longwood Players are supported by the student activity fees. Each student has already purchased her ticket; support the play by attending this rollicking comedy.

Murphy Delivers Poetry Lecture On Yeates

Yesterday, Richard Murphy, Writer-in-Residence at the University of Virginia, gave a lecture in the Student Lounge sponsored by Boone E. Thurn, honorary English Society at Longwood College. His topic was "Yeates and the West of Ireland."

Murphy, a graduate of Magdalen College, Oxford, won the AE Memorial Award for poetry in 1957; the Business Prize in 1962, and his poetry collection, "Sailing to an Island," was Poetry Book Society Spring Choice for 1963 in Britain.

He is now working on a new volume of poetry. He has previously earned a living as lecturer, night watchman, and fisherman. He has lived in England, France, Greece, Southern Rhodesia, Ceylon, the Bahamas, and spent most of his working years in Ireland.

His most recent poem, "The God Who Ends," about his father's life in Central Africa, was published in 1964.

Birth Control Panel Talks On Problems

By Jenny Gregory

A discussion on birth control was held in the Methodist Church at 8:30 Sunday night. The panel included the moderator, Mr. Robert Woodburn, a speech teacher at Longwood; Dr. A. Tyne Finch, a doctor who practices in Farmville in the fields of obstetrics and gynecology; and Dr. Douglas Larson, dean of men at Randolph-Macon College in Ashland.

The program consisted of a series of questions on birth control problems answered by the panel. Dr. Finch discussed first the medical problems involved in using the most effective birth control method, the pill. He said that no permanent ill-effects had been discovered after twelve years of usage, but there were some side-effects that could cause the woman to discontinue taking the pill. Vomiting and a weight gain are the two most common ill-effects. He said that the pill may even induce a little bit of the feeling of early pregnancy. Dr. Finch also stated that the only type of test given to a woman before prescribing the pill would be one which gives an indication of breast or genital cancer.

Dr. Finch also mentioned contraceptive devices other than the pill and explained that most physicians were opposed to private practice of the new method of coitus and he added that 30 per cent of the women have trouble with them.

Next, Dr. Larson gave the audience some information and his opinion on the moral aspect of birth control. He explained that the public opinion that large schools such as Yale and Harvard make birth control pills easily available was not true.

They are only prescribed to co-ed students who are planning to get married. He proceeded to say that pills weren't as much a danger to morals in teenagers as it seems because they aren't the available and they have to be regularly taken to be effective.

A highpoint in the discussion occurred when Dr. Larson gave his opinion on the differences in the Catholic and Protestant birth control and that of the Protestants. He said, "The Protestants believe that God created everything and therefore everything is good and the Catholics believe that God created everything but He made some mistakes." He continued to explain that one of these mistakes is the natural desire man has for woman. Dr. Larson said that Catholics believe it is sinful to have intercourse for any other reason than reproduction and since the pill is used only in marriage, it is all right. He added that the Catholics are slowly modifying this idea of birth control by allowing any means of natural birth control which includes the rhythm method.

Dr. Larson also pointed out that he believed the church and the school should work together in making information about sex more available to the student. He said, "Most teenagers with a this one would prove to be a great help to the average young person." This program was planned by Edith Loving and was well attended which indicates a need for more of these meetings.

mier of Paul Claudel's play, "Satin Slipper," at Notre Dame at South Euclid, Ohio, and also gave a piano recital in San Francisco this summer while she was visiting professor of English at the University of San Francisco. Dr. Sprague also enjoys knitting, tating, cressel embroidery, and needlepoint. Before joining the staff at Longwood College, Dr. Sprague served a year's appointment as lecturer in English at the Cleveland Institute of Art, where she taught poetry and novel to artists working in other creative media.

Student Evaluations

Editor's Note: The following editorial is being reprinted from The Richmond Times-Dispatch at the request of the Academic Affairs Committee. The Committee is planning the type of academic evaluation which is the subject of this editorial. They urge you to register your reactions to this editorial by writing letters to the editor and by offering your opinions to the committee.

NEW YORK, Oct. — 31 (AP) — College students all over the country are giving as good as they get — grading their teachers for effectiveness, knowledge of the subject and personality.

Not all the teachers who are getting the grades are happy about it, but many are actively encouraging the grading process.

And soon, in a few colleges and universities, the teachers may be finding that their very jobs depend on what the students think.

Whatever teachers and students think, the student-evaluation trend is growing.

The grades-for-teachers idea — a standard fixture in many schools for decades but still highly controversial in others — is tied in with growing dissatisfaction on the part of college students with some phases of mass education.

THE STUDENTS are complaining about large classes, about teaching by assistants while the professor writes his scholarly pieces for publication, about being members of a faceless mob in the impersonality of the big campus.

Some student leaders say this dissatisfaction is to blame for many mass student protest that have since taken political overtones.

To meet these complaints and to improve teaching standards, a faculty committee at Cornell University last week proposed that a student committee, advised by faculty members, be given the job of evaluating university courses and the funds to publish their findings.

At Harvard the rating is done unofficially by editors of the Harvard Crimson in a "confidential guide" that is so unconfidential it is publicly sold, and teachers buy and pore over it.

The guide, based on random polling of students, proposes "lynching parties" for a few professors, finds some classes "shoddy" and others "practically worthless." But it also notes that one teacher "had to ask the class to refrain from applauding," and said of another professor's teaching: "There is no better way to learn."

AT NEW YORK'S City College, the battle rages over whether a select group of students — all 40,000 — should evaluate professors for promotions tenure. Professor Samuel Hendel, chairman of a faculty committee, does not think mass judgement would be useful.

A University of North Carolina history teacher, Samuel F. Wells Jr., put it this way:

"You can't have 'D' and 'F' students watering down the opinions of serious students."

Ever since World War II, and even longer in some cases, many colleges have had evaluation forms that teachers can hand out to students if they wish — and do what they wish with the results. Usually the student "grades" are used by individual teachers to improve their own classroom techniques.

Lights - Out For Frosh

That any institution of higher learning should reprimand any group of its students for studying at any time is remarkable indeed.

But such is the case at Longwood. After lights out at 12 on week nights, 12:30 on Fridays and Sundays, and 2:00 on Saturdays, freshmen are given call downs if their lights are on for any reason, including studying. Before 10:00 there are often many interruptions unless one studies in the library, but since the library is closed after 10:00 there is no place to study but in one's room. Since many freshmen have late classes and can afford to stay up later at night they could benefit from the absolute quiet which usually occurs only after lights out. Other freshmen who might not be able to sleep after lights out could also benefit from using this time constructively. Of course in order to keep this unusual state of quietness, clauses would have to be included stating that lights could be on for study purposes only, no noise would be permitted, and a suitable agreement must have previously been reached by the roommates if the lights should remain on, but THERE SHOULD BE NO LIMIT ON THE LENGTH OF TIME THE LIGHTS CAN REMAIN ON.

If lights out is only a restriction established to distinguish from other classes which do not have this rule imposed upon them, it should immediately be abolished. Our freshmen class came here the highest scholastically rated class and indeed it seems ironic that they may meet the semester as one of the lowest because they are victims of noise and lack of study. Since they are college freshmen and not high school seniors they should be given the responsibility of making their own decisions about their study habits.

Fall Fashion Trends

Take Various Forms

by Phyllis Hammer

A new movement is rapidly taking place in the field of beauty, according to a well-known fashion magazine for "smart young women." It is a rebellion against what's "In" and "Out" and is a plea to KNOW THYSELF! It means total warfare against the stereotype: a campus-wide search for uniqueness. Most of the new "rebels" have emerged not as individual innovators, unfortunately, but as carbon copies of well-known contemporaries . . .

Beat: Placed ears are no longer a trademark of the best look, although long, handmade earrings still adorn "Greenwich" ears. Stretched sweaters, faded jeans, long straight hair complete the image.

Group Looks: At the University of Washington each sorority buys a flower-of-the-day to add "style" to hairdo. At San Jose State certain sororities pledge only blondes.

Natural Look: "Does she or doesn't she" is the trademark of this category. Here you'll find the most casual clothes; the ultimate in femininity.

Sophisticate: At N. Y. U. the ultimate criterion for the sophisticate is to look older. Hairdos and heels are up, the eyes heavy, lashes longer, skirts tighter. The look of the "coed" is passe.

Stressless Look: Like the Sophisticate — is a fad following image. Unfortunately, in many instances their leader's eccentricity is turned into excessivity.

Tortured Intellectual: Big dark glasses (horn-rimmed of course) gaze at the world with searing intensity.

London or Wall: As thin as possible, big soft eyes and long legs with big soft feet.

Star Students Study Heavens For Astronomy

By Suzan Woltz

Twinkle, twinkle little star: How I wonder who you are; Constellation, planet, be: How I wish that I could see!

These "dippers" and "archers" are murder to find— Astronomy drives you out of your mind!

Now maybe I'm stupid or blind as a bat But how did the ancients know what to look at?

Twinkle, twinkle, little star: How I wonder who you are . . .

Oh, the plight of the physical science student . . . Fate decreed the study of astronomy and the Bureau of Meteorology decreed a clear night. These two factors lavishly mean a night science lab for "on-the-spot" observations.

The professors, equipped with such scientifically calculated instruments as flashlights, star charts, telescopes, "astrometric" experiences, Cox rof, and the ability to guess, herded their girls toward Cox. The evening was about to commence.

Looking rather nervous, but excited at the prospect, we headed for the elevator. The gentlemen stepped to the rear and faced the wall in case some unseen "light" should saunter near by. We began our ascent.

"Man on the Hill" echoed through the building as the professors, eyes on the floor, stepped out on the roof. The lessons started with a bang as stragglers hurriedly came with their tardiness excuses — "I thought we were using Central time" . . . "I don't know, it looks pretty cloudy to me" . . . and "Geo, I thought you said Wheeler" . . .

We progressed from the Canis Major and Minor on to Vega and started down to see the telescope. All male professors breathed a sigh of relief, if not regret, as the door to Cox swung closed. The telescope was set up behind Stevens.

Actually, besides excellent buildings, we observed Saturn and the Pleiades Sisters (as near as I can figure, they are seven females who are stranded in space . . . they must really have late permission!) We saw a Nebula, which is just a fancy word for a big, gassy, star-sprinkled cloud that's pretty far away.

With that, our experiences ended. Of course, certain records were broken during the lab: more girls than ever before got colds, froze and became victims of sore feet and hunger; and more contact lenses than ever before were transferred from eyes to the telescope viewer.

In order to protect the innocent, no names have been mentioned in this article. But, in order to remove any doubts, here is a hint about the professors' identities: one is a city in Texas, and the other is a plumbing fixture. Now, test your skill about remembering "Heavenly bodies" or better yet, give me a lab on the roof — they're great!

Gormley Joins Longwood Staff In Math Dept.

By Carol Skelley

"Teaching Excellence — Scholastic Excellence" is the motto one immediately sees as he enters the office of Mr. Tyrone

MR. TYRONE GORMLEY

Gormley, a new math professor here at Longwood. Mr. Gormley, a native of Detroit, Michigan, appears to have the qualities necessary to fulfill this motto. He was graduated from the University of Detroit with a BA in mathematics and returned later to earn his M. A. While at the University, Mr. Gormley participated in tennis, sailing, and was a member of the drill team. He was also a member of the math club and the chorus.

Before coming to Longwood, Mr. Gormley was employed in Seattle, Washington, as a member of the inertia guidance team in connection with the Titan 3 missile.

Mr. Gormley is presently living in Farmville with his wife. When asked if he liked teaching at Longwood he replied, "So star-spangled cloud that's pretty far away."

The Federal Service Exam will be given at Longwood College December 11, 1965 at 8 a.m. in Ruffner 121. All applications must be submitted to Mrs. Melvin in the Admissions Office no later than November 30.

PAUL GOODMAN

Many students tell me they are in school this year, or in school altogether, to avoid going to the rice paddies. They say it angrily, not shyly. Their moral problem is an unusual one. It is not that they are shirking the army for their personal comfort or their careers — dodges that occur at all times and in all countries; rather, they feel they ought to be resisting the present war more honestly, burning draft-cards, going to jail, etc. According to the opinion polls, the President has a solid popular majority for his policy, but I doubt that he has anything like a majority in the colleges, especially among the younger instructors and the students. Thus, I expect the teach - and anti - war demonstrations to be stronger and to involve civil disobedience, if only because of these students' self-dignity for their privileged status.

On the other hand, for students who are not protesters, the draft-policy does not have much patriotic significance. I doubt that there are many students who feel enthusiastic that their college training is an indispensable function of the Great Society and its war effort, so that their student-deferment is valued as a positive good, rather than a lucky break.

B-st. Students Are Dissenters

Even more serious, however, the most intellectually earnest students are the strongest dissenters, on Civil Rights, University reform, pacifism, opposition to the Vietnam war. This was evident at Berkeley, where the Free Speech Movement leaders had grades far superior to the average, and the same has just been demonstrated across the country in a report for the Carnegie Corporation. The dissenters attend schools with the highest academic standing and, in those schools, among the best students. Think of the unfortunate, and dangerous, polarization among young people that this implies. The armed forces tend to be filled with the poor and uneducated. They are drafted, and they also tend to enlist since they are likely to be drafted anyway and they might as well have it over with; besides, in peace-time conditions, the armed services provide education for the ambitious that is better than most high schools and some colleges. In war-time conditions, the selected group at the front understandably resents the protesters at home who are a different breed. A reporter from Danang (Warren Rodgers in the N. Y. Journal-American) says, "The 18- and 19-year-olds, fashionably referred to as high school dropouts, have steel in their backbones and maybe too much of what prize-fighters call killer instinct." But the protesters are most often informed, more reasonable, and even more earnest. Naturally the men at the front think of them as slackers, carefree, beatniks, or nuts.

On the streets, the ever louder crowds that curse the young pacifist demonstrators are in fact likely to be cursing the young people of whom they would ordinarily be most proud and whom they would like their own children to emulate. If the American casualty lists mount, we are bound to see a Know Nothing spirit worse than McCarthyism, for the dissent is more widespread, stubborn, and intellectually critical than it was in McCarthy's time. This is certainly a grim relationship between the community of scholars and society.

Policy Academically Outraged

Consider another bad aspect of this relationship. Precisely to diminish shirking and to guarantee social utility (according to its lights), as well as to increase recruitment, the government will now exempt only students who get good grades, carry a full course-load, and even are in the sciences rather than the humanities. But this kind of extra-mural pressuring is academically outrageous. The curriculum and level of performance that warrant a student's being in college must be entirely the affair of the student and his professors, otherwise educational process is impossible. For a particular student at a particular time, a light load, off-campus work, a marriage plan might be just the right thing. A student's mediocre grades might be quite irrelevant to the question of how much he is profiting. The right curriculum depends on where and how a student is.

I am unwilling in this column to discuss the merits of the Vietnam war as policy — in my opinion, it is both unjust and impolitic — but as an academic I must say this: the pressuring and interference of the draft policy in academic matters are intolerable and poison the atmosphere of the community of scholars. It is the duty of faculty collectively to protest against them and refuse them, and it is the duty of students to urge the faculty to do so.

In abstract logic, the "just policy" on the student deferment is clear: Either the war is just and then nobody should be deferred (except for absolute social or personal necessity); all must be in it together. Or the war is unjust and we should get the hell out of it. And abstractly I agree with this forthright reasoning, but . . .

Since the President does not seem to be about to give up the war, the logic means abolishing the deferment. The students would of course be wildly against it, for various good and bad reasons. Also, University administrators would be against it, since it would diminish their population and grandeur, even if many are students only to avoid the draft. But finally, I think the government itself must shy away from such a step, for it cannot be eager to cope with the unknown, but certainly a very large number of students who oppose war and would strenuously object to being drafted, but who now settle quietly for deferment. At present the government is obviously disposed to get most of its troops from the National Guard and the Reserve, rather than asking for an Emergency and risking defeat. Yet this drift toward a big professional army is hazardous to democracy, and we may rue it.

Alumni Challenge Longwood Varsity; Richmond Club Proves Able Foe

On Saturday, October 23, the Longwood second team played the Alumni. The Alumni team was made up of representatives of several past classes. These included: Pay Ripley, '62; Lindy Hatch and Barbara Grey Martin Robinson, '63; Brenda Isabel, Lois Obenshain, Butch McDaniel and Chris Longstreet, '64; Earlene Lang and Judy and June Wilson, '65; and varsity substitute, Pat Ingram.

The game was fast and well played on both sides, although it did tell on the alumni team early — they managed to get two time outs during the game. The final score was Longwood 2, Alumni 0. The two goals were scored by Ruth Limbrick and Peggy Wilkins.

Richmond Club Game
Following the Alumni game, the Longwood first team took their turn and played the Richmond Club. From the very first it could be seen that this was a well-matched game. It was fast and furious going quickly from one end of the field to the other. Both halves were thirty minutes long requiring much endurance.

Longwood made an excellent showing in their teamwork and passing. As the game came to a close, Longwood was trailing 3 to 2, when in the last five seconds of the game, Barbara Ragland set up a beautiful shot for Carolyn Cline who slammed it in ending the game with a score of 3 to 3. The other goals were scored by Barbara Ragland and Connie Gallowan.

Is this all that remains of the Alumni—Varsity hockey game?

Six Accepted For Membership In H2O Club

Six girls were inducted into the H2O Club at installation ceremonies held at Longwood Estate Thursday, October 21. The new members are: Nancy Fey, Pat Finn, DeeDee Holden, Ann Lancaster, Elinor Umdenstock, and Peggy Weiss.

Before the candlelight installation, members of the H2O Club and the Corkettes were treated to a picnic supper.

In order to be in the H2O Club, one must be a member of the Corkettes for one year, have a senior life saving certificate, and exhibit interest in the activities of the H2O Club by participation in past water shows.

Sports-Minded Juniors Participate On Varsity

By Karen Ruder

This year's varsity hockey team is proud to sport eight juniors. These include Judy Bateman, Pat Brown, Sandy Long, Dianne Davis, Connie Gallowan, Connie Spradlin, Ruth Limbrick, and Pat Lyddane.

Judy Bateman, better known as "Bat," is from Danville. She is majoring in physical education and is chairman of the publicity committee for the Athletic Association. She usually plays halfback or wing.

Pat Brown hails from Culpeper. Pat is active in all phases of sports and is majoring in physical education. She is softball manager for the Athletic Association and recently was a winner in color rush. She is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta. Pat, who plays center halfback for the team, is also captain of the varsity second team.

Sandy Long is a physical education major from Roanoke. She is softball manager for the Athletic Association this year. He is Sandy's first year on the team where she plays left fullback.

Dianne Davis is from Springfield. She is majoring in physical education and is treasurer of the Athletic Association. Dianne plays center halfback.

Connie Gallowan, who is varsity hockey manager for the Athletic Association, is a physical education major from Fredericksburg. She plays right wing for the first team.

Connie Spradlin comes to us from Lynchburg. She is secretary of the Athletic Association and is majoring in physical education. Connie, who is a Sigma Kappa, plays right inner on the second team.

Ruth Limbrick is a physical education major from Fredericksburg. She is in charge of class basketball this year for the Athletic Association. Ruth plays left inner for the Ladies.

Senior Shows Spirit Through Active Life

By Faye Pearce

As a member of the Class of '66, Frances Stewart has actively participated in all facets of school life here at Longwood — for this reason she has been chosen for this week's Sports Spotlight.

Frances, hailing from Arlington, is a Physical and Health Education major who has participated in all phases of Athletic Association activities. She has played varsity hockey, class volleyball, varsity basketball, and in her sophomore year she swam in the swim meet. Because of this consistent activity in A. A. activities, Frances this year was awarded a white blazer. She is also a member of the Monogram Club.

Not limiting herself only to activities in the realm of sports, Frances is a Senior representative to the Legislative Board. This year Frances is a second vice president of Zeta Tau Alpha social society.

By showing interest in all phases of life at Longwood, Frances Stewart has definitely proven herself to be a possessor of what we know as the "Longwood Spirit."

Four Students Attend Clinic Taught By Pro

On Wednesday, October 20, four Longwood students attended a golf clinic sponsored by the physical education department of Mary Washington College. The girls were Kathy Kolva, Connie Gallowan, Nevla Born and Dianne Davis.

In charge of the program was Miss Ellen Griffin, of the advisory staff of the National Golf Foundation, a non-profit organization. Miss Griffin, formerly of the physical education department of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, is an outstanding teacher in women's golf. She was chosen teacher of the year by the L.E.G.A.

The program presented by Miss Griffin consisted of group golf instruction, individual skill helps, equipment which is available for teaching, and audio visual aids. There was no charge for the instruction.

Song Contest

Song Contest, which was supposed to be held on November 2, has been postponed until December 14. This year's song will be a Longwood, blue and white song.

Spirit Prevails In Annual Races Between Colors

Last Saturday, October 23, sixteen girls competed against each other in color races for banners to be displayed on the eight dorms. The girls competing were: red and whites, Jean Hendricks, Mary Lea Shoulders, Karen Ruder, Phyllis Lasley, Judy Cundiff, Joan West, Peggy Wilkins, and Linda Ramey; and green and whites, Toosie Kay, Pat Brown, Ruth Limbrick, Kit Rogers, Anna Petis, Sharon Williams, Becky Bonardant, and Linda Atkinson.

At the time of the races, the girls did not know against whom they were to run or for what dorm they would be running. This was decided by picking a green and white name, a red and white name and a dorm. Picking for the green and whites was Betty Jo Hammer, for the red and whites Bobbi Allen, and for the dorms, Sandy Kilbourne.

Each runner was timed by two girls, a red and white and a green and white. Those timing were Carolyn Prillaman, Judy Bateman, Linda Bayton and Susan Zix. An alumna, Lois Obenshain, was chosen to start each race.

The results of the races were as follows: Jean and Toosie for Wheeler — tie; Karen and Pat for Main Cunningham — green; Mary Lea and Ruth for Ruffin — green; Phyllis and Kit for South Cunningham — red; Judy and Anna for Cox — green; Joan and Sharon for Tabb — red; Peggy and Linda for North Cunningham — red; and Linda and Becky for Student Building — green.

A new addition to the old tradition was started this year: from the alumni present, a red and white and a green and white were chosen to race for a banner to be hung on the Alumni House. Chosen to represent the green and whites was Lindy Hatch, class of 1963; and the red and white choice was Chris Longstreet, class of 1964. The result was a red and white banner for the Alumni House.

Hockey Camp

All those who are interested in attending hockey camp next year are urged to attend a meeting which will be held to discuss these plans. This meeting will take place on November 10, in the freshman parlor right after dinner.

College Team Selects Seven LC Players

By Karen Ruder

Last Saturday, fifteen varsity hockey players went to the College team tournament at Williamsburg. Along with them were four other colleges. Each school was to play three other colleges and from these teams would be chosen a first and second college team to go to the Tidewater tournament to be held next Saturday in Richmond. These college teams will then play the Tidewater club teams. From these games, the Tidewater team will be chosen.

In the three games that Longwood played Saturday, the Longwood team displayed their best teamwork of the season. The play was dominated in their opponents' halves of the field most of the time. In fact, the Longwood team was not scored upon in any of the three games. All three games ended in a score of 2 to 0.

Three Longwood girls made the All College first team. They are Barbara Ragland, Carolyn Cline and Dianne Davis. Anna Petis, Jean Hendricks and Pat Lyddane were chosen for the All College second team; and Ginny Morton was chosen as substitute for the All College second team.

This Friday, last year's Tidewater team will play the Great Britain and Ireland touring team. Playing for the Tidewater first team is Carolyn Cline, and as substitute, Barbara Ragland.

Seven sports-minded juniors and seniors smile happily after having been selected for the all college hockey teams.

Medell Accepts Position As IBM Supervisor

Mr. Richard Medell, a native of Brooklyn, New York, is Longwood College's new supervisor of data processing. Mr. Medell has attended Brooklyn College, Pace College, and the University of Virginia extension in Lynchburg. He is working towards a degree in business administration.

Mr. Medell says his family is still living in Lynchburg, but that they will be moving to Farmville soon. Mr. Medell is married to the former Frances Harrison of Meadowview, Virginia which is near Abingdon. The Medells have one child, a seven-year-old boy, Robert. The Quaker Memorial Presby-

House Council Gives Its Case Procedure

Scope of Responsibility

House Council functions to uphold the standards of Longwood College. The Executive Council of House Council handles all cases under dormitory, dining hall, and fire regulations.

The purpose of the Executive Council's trials is to offer an opportunity to clarify any uncertainties in the case and to provide an atmosphere of student understanding and appreciation of House Council rules and regulations.

Procedures for Investigation
Any known or possible violation(s) should be reported immediately to a member of the Executive Council. The Vice-President and a member of the Executive Council, on the basis of the report, check confidentially those details needing verification before talking with the possible offender (e.g., sign-out cards, pink slips, late slips).

When a possible House Council problem is brought to the Vice-President, she and the President exercise judgment as to the urgency of the investigation or trial. If the problem does not warrant immediate action, then such a case may wait until the regular meeting time of the Executive Council of House Council.

The Vice-President, and/or a member of the Executive Council to whom the case was reported will present to the possible offender a written statement informing her of the investigation. She is allowed adequate time, if she desires, to obtain counsel within the Student Association.

If the violation should be one which, on examination, does not call for a formal Executive Council trial, the issue is reported at the regular meeting of the Council.

If the violation should be one that does call for a formal Executive Council trial, the person or persons involved are brought to first floor Student Building and asked to stay in a designated room until called to appear.

The proceedings of the trial are held in confidence by all members of the Council. The secretary will keep an accurate record of the trial. The Vice-President first presents to the Council all relevant facts. The accused, upon entering the Council room, is formally charged. In writing, after which she will be in violation of the Honor Code should she lie.

The accused has the privilege of requesting witnesses to testify in her behalf. Witnesses may also be called in by the Council and questioned. Any witness is subject to all of the provisions of the Honor Code. Therefore, any witness who gives false testimony can be subject to trial by the Judicial Board at a later time. The witness is always informed, in writing, of the reason for her appearance at the trial.

The Executive Council members may direct such questions as are relevant to the case to those appearing before them. After questioning, the person is asked to return to the designated room if the Council feels it may be necessary to talk with her again. If not, she is told that she may return to her dormitory.

After questioning and testimony are given, the Council takes time to weigh carefully and thoughtfully all evidence before passing judgment. If, after hearing all testimonies, the case, if serious enough may be referred to Judicial Board. The accused is always considered innocent until proven guilty.

If a specific case does not warrant an appearance before the Council, the facts are given to the Vice-President, who relates them to the entire Executive Council. The case is discussed, a decision is made, and the President then informs the Council who the accused person is.

Penalties

Any penalty given is approved by a majority vote of the Executive Council. Penalties given by the Executive Council may involve plain or strict campus and room confinement. In any event, the purpose of the penalty is to educate the student to the value of student self-government, which she has violated.

A girl may request a review of her case through the Vice-President of the Executive Council. If she can provide sufficient reasons warranting a review, such reasons should be presented in writing.

YWCA Sponsor Of Trip To See "Parable" Film

The Y. W. C. A. sponsored a trip to Randolph-Macon Men's College, Ashland, on October 28 to see the film "Parable." The film is a 22 minute modern color film which was shown at the Protestant - Orthodox Center at the New York World's Fair.

In the "parable" there is no dialogue. The only sound is appropriate music played throughout the entire film. Interpretation is left to the individual.

The main character of the film is a carnival clown who appears in an all-white outfit riding his donkey behind a carnival procession. His concern for and goodness toward people win him several faithful friends (or followers as they appear in the movie), but there are those in the carnival company who despise him for the same reasons.

The clown is murdered, finally by a sadistic puppet-show director and a few of his fellow circus workers. The murderer is then shown in agony, perhaps disturbed over what he has done. He then proceeds to apply the white grease paint to his face. When the carnival procession moves on again and the clown is following on his donkey as before, each person in the audience must decide for himself if this clown is a converted murderer or the good clown who has been resurrected.

This is a controversial film—many people identify the clown with Christ since his life and death are quite similar to that of Christ.

After seeing the film twice, the group had a discussion period led by a Randolph-Macon religion professor.

From The Board

The Student Government sent three delegates to the N. S. A. Regional Convention on October 15, 16, in Greensboro, North Carolina. Our representatives were Ann Casteen, N. S. A. Co-ordinator; Tootsie Kay, junior representative to Legislative Board; and Linda McCulloch, freshman representative to Judicial Board. The delegates attended meetings concerned with course evaluations, judicial systems, and student rules.

The Legislative Board has recently organized a "Social Evaluations Committee." This committee's function will be to review and recommend social rule changes to the Board. The committee, composed of girls who date regularly at Hampden-Sydney, is in the process of evaluation the Hampden-Sydney open house rule on trial basis. In the future, these meetings will be opened to the student body to discuss controversies concerning social rules and customs.

The Board has discussed and approved last year's policy of selecting advisors for campus organizations set up by the faculty and administration. The Board feels that this system is worthwhile because both the organization and proposed sponsor have a choice in the sponsorship.

Home Economics Club Holds College Meet

By Janet Faires

The Home Economics Club of Longwood held a Home Economics College Club Workshop last Friday and Saturday.

The purpose of this workshop, to which thirteen colleges were invited to send representatives, was to give the attending delegates ideas for making the programs within their own clubs more functional.

The theme for the session was "Home Economics Stretches Forward Through Helping Families Build for Economic Security." The speaker on this topic was Mr. C. Samuel Barone, who has been working with low income status families in Virginia valley.

Following a coffee in the Home Management House, Mr. W. W. Gordon, Assistant Supervisor of Chesterfield County, talked on the "Citizen's Role in Civil Defense." Following him was Mr. J. H. Wansley, Business Manager and Treasurer of Longwood, who spoke about the ways in which the Home Economics Clubs could participate in this program.

After the talks the delegates went to discussion groups whose major concern was the ideas which could be incorporated into the college Home Economics Club program.

A luncheon at the Weyanoke Hotel concluded with the theme "Home Economics Stretches Forward." By Participation in the American Home Economics Association" and the Virginia Home Economics Association programs of work. The luncheon speaker was Mrs. Geraldine Cox, a home economist for Reynolds Metal.

Schuschnigg Lecture Tells W. W. II Story

by Janet Faires

Last night at 8:00 p.m., Kurt Schuschnigg, Professor of Political Science at St. Louis University, spoke in the student lounge. His topic, "Fifty Years Ago - And Twenty-Five Years Later," dealt with his experiences in Austria and Germany. He was born in 1897 in Riva (then Austria, now Italy). He was graduated from the Jesuit High School in Vienna and attended the University of Innsbruck, finishing his studies in 1922 with a J.U.D. degree, doctor of both civil and canon law. In 1927 he became a member of the Austrian parliament and was soon recognized as one of the nation's leading statesmen.

In 1932 he became a member of the cabinet, and held in succession the offices of Minister for Foreign Affairs, When the Chancellor of Austria, Engelbert Dollfuss, was assassinated in a Nazi uprising in 1934, Dr. Schuschnigg became head of the government.

A year and a half before the official start of World War II, which was in September, 1939, when Hitler's army invaded Poland, the Nazi Army had massed itself on the Austrian border and demanded that Austria unite with the Nazis. Chancellor Schuschnigg refused.

On March 11, 1938, the Nazi forces took over the country and Dr. Schuschnigg was taken prisoner, becoming the last defender of the Old Hapsburg Austro-Hungarian monarchy. While being held in Austria, he was married by proxy to the Countess Vera Fugger von Babenhausen. When Dr. Schuschnigg was transferred to the Dachau concentration camp, she joined him and voluntarily remained at his side. It was here that their only child, Elizabeth, was born. After seven years of internment, he and his family were freed by the American Third Army in 1945. Dr. Schuschnigg felt that he was luckier than most of those who tried to stand up against Hitler. Even though Heinrich Himmler, head of the Nazi secret police, had given the order for his execution, he managed to survive.

Accreditation

Longwood College received word this month that its undergraduate program in elementary and secondary education programs have been reaccredited by the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education. Last December Longwood was reaccredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. This accreditation by the regional and national associations is good for ten years.

Art Department Proudly Hosts Various Exhibits

By CAROLYN DAVIS
"Our Neighbors Around the World" is the theme of the doll exhibit in the Lancaster Library. Mrs. Guffin's 301 art class is presenting the exhibit to represent "Peace For All." Constructed by the students, each doll represents a different country or a symbolic costume. A paper chain links the dolls together. A card is placed beside each doll telling the country's history and dress.

Grainger Hall also has an art exhibit. The Junior School of the Art Institute of Chicago is presenting "Museum Impression." The work, presented by the Smithsonian Institute, is done by small children.

A famous sculptor's work is found in the Art Exhibit Room in the Lancaster Library. The sculpture exhibition is the work of Dean Carter, associate professor in the college of architecture at Virginia Polytechnical Institute.

Dean Carter, who lives in Blacksburg, Virginia, and teaches sculpture at VPI, studied at the Corcoran School of Art, American University where he received his Bachelor of Arts Degree, and Indiana University where he received his Master's Degree. In 1948 he traveled to Paris where he was a student of Zadkine.

A recent commission was a bronze screen for the Providence Building, Fairfax, Virginia. He designed and fabricated this screen in Venice, Italy.

Dean Carter can be seen at work in his studio in the color film "A World of Sculpture" which is produced by VPI. The film shows sculpture as found in nature and as man represents nature in his sculpture. It covers the five basic forms from which all sculpture is created.

Freshmen Class Elects Circus, Gov't Officers

By MARION BORSEVIC
The freshman class seems to be well represented by very capable and enthusiastic girls. These newly elected freshmen are: Jane Austin, Circus; Donna Sistrunk, Elections; Judy Turner, Athletic Association; Jeannie Kay and Rita Mathews, Legislative Board; and Betty Powell and Mary Lou Whitehead, Judicial Board.

Janice Austin was elected to represent her class for Circus on Tuesday night, September 27. Her enthusiasm for Circus, strangely enough, began on her first tour of Longwood during last year's Circus week-end.

Janice explained it was then that she knew she just couldn't go anywhere else to college. The friendliness and enthusiasm of the student body there had sparked a desire in her to become a part of it. Janice was always involved in the activities at her high school, Woodrow Wilson in Portsmouth, Va. She was a member of many school organizations including the National Honor Society, the yearbook staff, the pep club and the cheerleading squad. Within a few weeks of her arrival at Longwood, Janice, aided by five other freshman enthusiasts, composed two new red and white songs: "Hey, look us over, we're red and white..." and the "F-R-E-S-H-M-A-N" letter song, the latter of which was sung at the red and white party. Janice stated that it takes more than a handful of people to make Circus a success; everyone must work together. She thinks that this year's freshmen have a lot of talent, and that with a little bit of hard work, they can help make this the BEST Circus ever!

Donna Sistrunk, also elected September 27, is the freshman representative to the Elections Committee. Donna, too, was extremely active in her high school, Princess Anne in Virginia Beach. Some of her many club memberships were: the newspaper staff, the student magazine, the National Honor Society, the pep club and the Tri-Hi-Y. Donna expressed her desire to work with the Election Committee in every way she can. In conclusion, Donna said that we should be aware of the importance of voting, and that she hopes everyone will participate in the upcoming elections.

Judy Turner, the new A.A. representative, graduated from Tunstall High in Danville, Va. She was the sports editor of her annual, played on an all-county basketball team, and was voted both "Outstanding Girl Athlete" and "Most Valuable Player." Judy, appropriately, is a physical

Geist Names Greene As Barker For 66 Festival, October 28-29

The 1966 Barker for the Geist Festival is Miss Marilyn Greene. As Barker, Marilyn will lead the usherettes during the Color Skit presentation of the Geist Festival on Friday and Saturday, October 28 and 29. She will be on hand Saturday afternoon of the Festival along with the usherettes to run the Geist Information Booth.

An enthusiastic sophomore, Green and White, Marilyn is very interested in Longwood's activities. She was on the script committee for Circus 1965, is circulation manager for the "Gyre," and participated in Freshman Production. She was on Legislative Board last year and is a member of the major-minor elections committee. She has played class basketball, badminton and volleyball. Marilyn is a member of Alpha Sigma Tau sorority.

From Colonial Heights, Marilyn is a Sociology and History major. She was speechless when told she would be the Geist Festival Barker, but she is talking excitedly now!

Dr. Mackendrick Here To Present Archaeology Talk

By DOTTIE THURSTON
Paul L. Mackendrick, Professor of Classics and Integrated Liberal Studies at the University of Wisconsin, will be the assembly speaker at Longwood this week. He will speak on the topic "Using Archaeology to Write History: The Athenian Aristocracy."

Dr. Mackendrick was born in Taunton, Massachusetts and received his A.B., M.A., and Ph.D. from Harvard University. He also studied for two years at Balliol College in Oxford. The college positions he has held include the following: assistant in classics and tutor in the division of ancient languages at Harvard; instructor in Latin at Phillips Academy in Andover, Massachusetts; and instructor in English at Harvard University.

Dr. Mackendrick has also participated in various professional activities and organizations. In 1950, he took part in the excavation of the ruins of the Roman Colony of Cosa, Italy on a Fulbright Fellowship, American Academy in Rome, and he returned to Italy in 1957 again on a Guggenheim Fellowship. He has held the following offices: Secretary-Treasurer of the American Philological Association in 1954-56; Secretary of American Council of Learned Societies in 1956-57, and a member of the board of directors in 1959-63; a member of the executive council of Classical Association of the Middle West and South, and a member of the board of trustees of the American Academy in Rome. Dr. Mackendrick is also a member of the American Association of University Professors, the Archaeological Institute of America, and Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton.

Along with his teaching career and other professional activities, Dr. Mackendrick has written several books including: "The Ancient World," "The Roman Mind At Work," "The Greek Stone Speak," and "The Mute Stones Speak."

Dr. Mackendrick has just returned to the University of Wisconsin following a year of teaching at the University of Ibadan, Nigeria. His talk here at Longwood is scheduled for tomorrow at 1:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

Young Repubs Render Support To County Party

An eager group of Young Republicans are devoting their time this week to aid the Prince Edward County Republican Party in collecting funds for the current Senatorial and Congressional campaigns. The girls, all students at Longwood College, will be calling on homes and businesses in the Farmville area on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, October 18-20. The con-

Scurried Activity Seeks

Swingin' Junior Weekend

By CHRIS DIXON
Plans for the Junior week-end are underway. A sneak preview of the festivities finds scurried activity within the Junior class. Committee chairmen have been selected and are now forming their committees. Any Juniors interested in helping are urged to contact the following people: Alice Collier, Decorations Chairman; Susan Barwick, Favors Chairman; Joette Bailey, Publicity Chairman; Ella McDade, Flowers Chairman; Kay Boykin, Breakfast Chairman; Jeannine Overman, Ring Flips Chairman; Martha Mullins, Dance Invitations Chairman; Frances Scott, Dance Programs Chairman; Phyllis Hummer, Tickets Chairman; Kathy Kamps, Refreshment Chairman; Barbara Hopper, Gifts Chairman; Alice Rennie, Photographer Chairman; and Judy Johnston, Combo Chairman.

The week-end of February 17th and 18th has been selected by the Junior class. However, this week-end may be changed after confirmation dates have been received from a concert group. Concert groups under consideration are "The Miracles," "The Temptations," and "The Swinging Medallions."

For the ring dance, Saturday night, the VMI Commanders, Divots, and Royal Kings are being considered.

Dr. Helms and Dr. Wells have been very helpful in writing, phoning, and contacting the various groups.

This year the Juniors are introducing a new phase to the traditional week-end. Tentative arrangements have been made for an informal dance Friday night. A dance band (perhaps "The Es-corts") will supply rock and roll entertainment. The old gym is a possible location for the dance. Still in the planning stages, this Friday night dance could set the mood for the Junior week-end.

The Tired American

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This week I planned to write an editorial concerning the feelings we, as Americans, should have concerning our country, and the manner and degree to which we support it. I found the following editorial all too aptly expresses my feelings on the subject. In very effective wording and phrasing, I can do no more than to re-print it, and hope that all of us reading it will sincerely digest its meaning.)

The following editorial by Alan McIntosh, which recently appeared in the Rock County Herald, Luverne, Minn., reflects the feelings that many — and perhaps most — Americans have about current conditions and attitudes.

I AM A TIRED AMERICAN. I am tired of being called the ugly American. I'm tired of having the world panhandlers use my country as a whipping boy 365 days a year.

I am a tired American — weary of having American embassies and information centers stoned, burned, and sacked by mobs operating under orders from dictators who preach peace and breed conflict.

I am a tired American — weary of being lectured by Gen. de Gaulle (who never won a battle) who poses as a second Jehovah in righteousness and wisdom.

I am a tired American — weary of Nasser and all the other blood-sucking leeches who bleed Uncle Sam white and kick him on the shins and yank his beard if he flows fallers.

I am a tired American — weary of the beatniks who say they should have the right to determine what laws of the land they are willing to obey.

I am a tired American — fed up with the mobs of scabby faced, long-haired youths and short-haired girls who claim they represent the "new wave" of America and who sneer at the old-fashioned virtues of honesty, integrity, and morality on which America grew to greatness.

I am a tired American — weary unto death of having my tax dollars go to dictators who play both sides against the middle with threats of what will happen if we cut off the golden stream of dollars.

I am a tired American — who is tired of supporting families who haven't known any other source of income other than government relief checks for three generations.

I AM A TIRED AMERICAN — who is getting madder by the minute at the filth peddlers who have launched Americans in an obscene race — who try to foist on us the belief that filth is an integral part of culture — in the arts, the movies, literature, the stage.

I am a tired American — weary of the bearded bums who tramp the pocket lines and the sit-ins — who prefer Chinese Communism to capitalism — who see no evil in Castro, but sneer at President Johnson as a threat to peace.

I am a tired American — who has lost all patience with the civil rights group which is showing propaganda movies on college campuses from coast to coast. Movies denouncing the United States. Movies made in Communist China.

I am a tired American — sickened by the slack-jawed bigots who wrap themselves in bedsheets in the dead of night and roam the countryside looking for innocent victims.

I am a tired American — who dislikes clergymen who have made a career out of integration causes, yet send their children to private schools.

I AM A TIRED AMERICAN — who resents those who try to peddle the belief in schools and colleges that capitalism is a dirty word and that free enterprise and private initiative are only synonyms for greed.

They say they hate capitalism, but they are always right at the head of the line demanding their share of the American way of life.

I am a tired American — real tired of those who are trying to sell me the belief that America is not the greatest nation in all the world — a generous-hearted nation — a nation dedicated to the policy of trying to help the "have nots" achieve some of the good things that our system of free enterprise brought about.

I am an American who gets a lump in his throat when he hears the "Star-Spangled Banner" and who holds back tears when he hears those chilling high notes of the brassy trumpets when Old Glory reaches the top of the flagpole.

I am a tired American — who thanks a merciful Lord that he was so lucky to be born an American citizen — a nation under God, truly with mercy and justice for all.

Happiness-Misery Kick Pervades LC Campus

By PHYLLIS HUMMER
"Happiness Is A Warm Puppy" was introduced a few years ago by Charles M. Schultz, creator of the "Peanuts" comic series. "Mad" magazine retorted with "Misery Is A Cold Hot Dog." Ever since then, this Happiness-Misery kick has pervaded the country. Now "The Rotunda" would like to express its feelings on the matter:
Happiness is the dining-hall Mike working just once.
Misery is an ice-cold shower.
Happiness is a BIG WEEKEND (and a date).
Misery is braised liver.
Happiness is peanut-butter and jelly.
Misery is falling a P.E. course.
Happiness is being "in."
Misery is being "Out."

Happiness is a pleasant roommate.
Misery is rain, rain, rain.
Happiness is Dionne Warwick.
Misery is a phone that never rings.
Happiness is wearing "casuals" to the library.
Misery is having a lover's quarrel.
Happiness is a "pink slip" that is filled out.
Misery is no money.
Happiness is being pinned.
Misery is L. C. on the week end.
Happiness is getting an "A" on a test.

A Critical Look

We can swallow so much, but then no more can be taken. The time has come to take up arms and arise against what we believe is wrong, wrong. Let's take a critical look at this business called circus and/or the new sophisticated term "Geist." Changing tradition is a wonderful idea, but we feel that AKG has taken too much power into its own hands and assumed authority which it does not possess. A rehearsal of the "mickey mouse" (an overused phrase, but oh so fitting) proceedings of circus has long been overdue, but we wonder if the so-called "sophistication" of the Geist festival is such an improvement. "Geist": A German word signifying spirit, imagination, intelligence, and soul! Impressive, isn't it, but rather incongruous with the scene of fellow classmates cavorting in their highly outlandish costumes. Think about it — actually the word conjures up thought of Loinbrau and German frauleins!

We feel that if a census was taken not only would circus and Geist be discredited by the students, but also that they would be expressing sentiments which were indeed not new, but continually suppressed for fear of "the group." More important, if the ENTIRE student body was consulted a solution which would please the MAJORITY could be reached.

Consult your calendar of events for the year. Do you notice any mixers? Look closely. The only week-ends which offer enjoyable entertainment for dates are the Collegues concert and the junior ring dance. No wonder there is an exodus each week-end! Circus or Geist is supposed to be the week-end of the year. Why not make it that way? Do you really enjoy parading around in costumes which seem to have been dragged from your grammar school treasure box? We rather doubt it.

What can be done? There are many obvious solutions and undoubtedly if the student body was consulted many more would be forthcoming. Radford College is a case in point. The girls combine spirit and imagination as well as a more mature outlook for their Carnival week-end. Each dorm chooses a girl to run for carnival queen. The girl whose dorm raises the most money is chosen queen. The money is raised by charging callers (O.C. to have their dates called, 25c to arrange dates (a great way to meet people), bake sales, combo parties, midways, etc. Sounds like fun? It is! Certainly with the talent here at LC our "week-end" of the year could far surpass this. Perhaps now though the student body is thoroughly disgusted with any thoughts of such a week-end. It is time for a complete change? What dance, Easter week-end, Valentine ball, southern belle dance, Easter week-end — the possibilities are endless.

We are not trying to unjustly criticize AKG. However, we feel that their undoubtedly well-meant gift of Geist is the work of a minority on campus and is not in the interest of the LC students. If they are true leaders then hopefully they will initiate the needed changes.

We rest our case

Wigs When Art and Nature Fall

I may be old-fashioned about some things—for instance I like beautiful women and even pretty girls, and at least a clue to the shape of a clothed woman. But I'm rather free-thinking about others. For instance, wigs.

In my wanderings I have heard men, and even women, complain that the artificiality of wigs bothers them, that wigs are exaggeratedly coarse or silky to the touch, that one must be too careful in order to avoid its dislocation, and that too many natural-looking mistakes can be hidden by wigs—in other words, a man doesn't really know what he's getting. And inevitably, that they cost too much.

Now I am fully prepared to debate these points — each but the last one which is, alas, often true. Good wigs are expensive when compared with, say, a bottle of liqueur. But when you consider the length of time it takes to grow wig-lengths of human hair, when you consider the sanitizing processes, the forming and binding of an excellent wig, it really isn't costly, relative to its worth. And naturally as the various synthetic wigs improve, the cost of wigging will be decreased accordingly.

But conscience compels me to remind you, if costs are a factor to you, that the mere purchase of a wig doesn't end your cash output. Because you own a wig, you immediately have two coiffures to be responsible for; yours and its. If you usually do your own hair, then you're no doubt skillful enough to handle the wig hair as well. But if you're tied by vanity or ineptitude to a hairdresser, consider that there are now two of you in that costly and nerve-racking state.

Enough for the moment. For the rest, the wig picture is downright glorious. You have to have it washed and set now and then but no woman is as carefree about social events, spontaneous or otherwise, as the woman who doesn't have to give a thought to the way her hair looks at that moment. The simple fact of a stand-by — and doubtless superior — coiffure brightens her outlook and shortens her party-dressing time, often by hours that seem like days. Imagine what it would feel like to bathe, make up, put on your clothes and then merely don your readied wig. Instant glamour! And consider the money you saved by not having had your own hair done for the occasion — the other side of the wig-expenditure coin.

Which leads to the next point. It is very hard for women with short, boyish or pixie haircuts to look suitably formal at elegant affairs. A wig, however, allows you to wear your hair short as you like for daytime and informal occasion, and as elegant as a queen for others. It also allows you to change your hair color safely and painlessly, if you're an intrepid and fun-loving soul.

Wigs made of human hair are no more coarse or silky than the natural hair from which they are made. He may not like your real hair either.

And as for the men who worry about what they're really getting, I have little sympathy. If a plain girl can with clever tricks become a pretty girl, good for her, and who cares if she was born with straight brown hair and a bumpy nose? That is what glamour is all about.

Besides, for masculine purists, nothing will ever be so deceptive as padded bras until the ladies take to wearing real face masks.

Fashion Mirror

The jauntily gored skirt in the form of the princess dress is making the youthful scene these days — again. Youthful because if you're anything more than lithe and shapely, forget it. It is too fitted through the bodice, even if gently done, for a woman with a bulging tire or roll at the waist. But if you are slender as a reed or tall and curvaceous, it's a lovely style. The freshly swinging skirt is comfortable for walking sitting and other normal activities that tight skirts inhibit. Yet the more fitted top is feminine and flattering because it elongates your torso due to the absence of a seam at the waistline. A word of caution: unless tailored in an unusual way, or duly adapted, the princess line is very young and should be scrutinized carefully on you before you indulge yourself. There is no room for self-delusion with a dress of this sort; it is too tight.

Fashion Tip

For those of you wearing pants suits or eyeing them desirously, don't forget that your commitment to it doesn't stop when you buy it. It must be accessorized, particularly with regard to a pocket.

LC Breakfast Decries

"Traumatic Experience"

Dear Editor,
It is 11:00 in the morning, and I have already had a very traumatic experience. I made a mistake which may change my mental health forever, however, my state of instability might be satiated if I feel my experience can help others. I ate breakfast this morning. Yes, I am sure, I am sure. Indigestion has already set in. My going this morning reassured me that my previous, too frequent visits to breakfast were not illusions. No one in the dining hall likes me, everybody hates me, I'm going out to dig worms. . .

Longwood Defeats Westhampton; Hockeyettes Capture 3-0 Victory

By LESLIE SEDGWICK
On Saturday, October 15, L.C. traveled to Westhampton College for their fifth hockey game of the season. The sun shone brightly, and rather warmly, on the beautiful field as blue and red uniformed figures clashed sticks.

The first game started almost in a slow-motion fashion. Although most of the time was spent in the home team's striking circle, Westhampton came back with the ball and gained the advantage with a score in the last five minutes. The ball ended with W.C. ahead, 1-0. But L.C. was not to be outdone. The second half was a little faster and L.C. began to cut more for the ball. The outstanding defensive player was Jean Hendricks as she kept fighting for the ball and many times carried it to the striking circle. Halfway through the second half, Barbara Matthews scored the only L.C. point. The final score was 1-1, and because a tie is neither a win nor a loss, L.C. remained undefeated.

The second game was a bit different, with a lot more hustling and cutting. Pat Ingram was having her day. She was the force behind the offense as she dodged and carried the ball to the striking circle. She dodged and passed to her wing, Judy Nevitt, who in turn, pushed the ball in to score. Westhampton occasionally visited the L.C. cage, but Holly

Forman, the goalkeeper, kept most invaders out. Again, Pat Ingram carried the ball down the field and passed across to Jane Tibbs. As Jane hit the ball, the goalkeeper rejected it, but Jane kept her stick down and the ball went in. At half-time L.C. was ahead, 2-0.

The second half saw a change in weather as the sun was covered by clouds and a cool breeze came over the field. W.C. was perked up. The ball was at both ends equally but neither side could score. Only until the last few minutes does L.C. score again, thanks to Judy Nevitt. The score was 3-0, with a minute to go, and W.C. dashed down the field in an attempt to get on the score board but time gave out. Three to nothing was the final score and the second team also remained undefeated.

Rita Mathews also on the Legislative Board, attended Graham High in Bluefield, Va. She gained her initial interest in legislation while active in the Student Government Association for two years. Betty Powell of Hampden High felt very honored at being chosen for the Judicial Board.

Mary Lou Whitehead, also on the Judicial Board, graduated from Greensville County High in Emporia, Va., and was a member of the Student Cooperative Organization as well as being her Junior Class President there.

book. If this surprises you, look at the next woman you see wearing a pants suit. You will surely notice that if she is carrying an ordinary handbag it looks awkward—or at least peculiar in a way that you might not have been able to put your finger on. But if she is carrying a shoulder bag, or a tote slung casually over her shoulder, the total look achieved is much more faithful to the spirit of the pants suit.

LC Welcomes RPI Hockey Team Home Team Wins 11-0, 12-0

As the crowd gathered Wednesday, Oct. 12, Longwood's Hockey Team made ready to play host to R.P.I. The games were held at 4 to 5 p.m. on Barlow Field as students and faculty alike rooted Longwood on to victory.

The first game started slowly as time and time again L.C. would be in their striking circle only to have it hit out. However by the end of the first half, Peggy Wilkins and Barbara Matthews had scored, 3 and 2 goals respectively.

Bang! The second half sparked up. Anna Pettis, Pat Brown and Barbara Matthews scored 2 goals each. Diane Davis, center half-back, attempted to have her name in the scoring circle but the goal was called back because of a foul. The final score was 11-0. It might have been higher if it had not been for the good defense of R.P.I. This was their first team in many years and they showed that they should be watched in the future.

The second game, however, got off to a faster start. In a matter of minutes L.C. broke through and Jane Tibbs scored and scored, six times. R.P.I. came back with spurts toward our cage but lost the ball to our fullbacks who sent it back up the field. Sally Heilman took control of the situation as well as the ball and carried it to their striking circle. Twice she scored. But time gave out for the half and the girls came to the benches for halftime huddles.

The pace had its effect on L.C. The forwards spent practically the whole time in the opposite striking circle but just could not get the ball in. But Nancy Maxey scored and the team awoke. Chris McDonnell spurred ahead and scored two more goals. With minutes to go word was passed along the sideline that the record for the most points scored in one game was 11. One more point would make a new record. Tension grew as the team was at the cage again and again with no score. With a minute to go cheers rang out as Nancy Maxey pushed the ball in for number 12. Thus the game ended.

SHARON WILLIAMS

Williams Visiting Pumpkin's Patch

By GINNY SIRC

Have you visited the Great Pumpkin's patch lately? There's evidence in Sharon Williams' room that proves she has been there recently. Did you say that you're making pumpkin pies for Thanksgiving?

Sharon, who actively participates in other things besides pumpkin collecting, is one of the Senior Class representatives to the Athletic Association. She has played class hockey, Varsity basketball and tennis, and last year was also a manager of the Varsity basketball team. At the A. A. Banquet, Sharon was presented with a white blazer. I understand that the blazer is kept in an air tight plastic bag, and that she won't let anyone come within 10 feet of it! Sharon will be working in the A. A. booth at the Circus midway. She also worked on the sports staff of "The Rotunda" during her Sophomore year.

Sharon is also enrolled in the Data Processing class and is quite enthusiastic about the textbook, "The Principles of Punch-carding." As a matter of fact, she is quite keen in the business world and is currently involved in planning a money-making project for the Thanksgiving holidays. Watch for her latest book, "Ten Easy Ways to Become a Millionaire!"

Second block will find Sharon student teaching in Henrico County. She has very definite ideas concerning the qualities a good Physical Education teacher should possess, and she is also interested in student-teacher relationships. Although she can make any situation hilariously funny, she takes her major seriously. She keeps telling everyone that she's getting a B.S. degree AND an A.P. degree!

You can always tell Sharon by her laugh, it seems to come from nowhere and then just as suddenly, it disappears, or by her hair, it doesn't curl-it just bends! She's always late for classes and is famous for not going to breakfast. Would you believe a night-owl? She also is constantly waging a battle with the "Green Pizzies!"

Sharon, we wish you the very best and know that success as a teacher of Physical Education will be yours. Good Luck!

Juniors Order Rings

Juniors are ordering class rings next week from Jowson Jeweler's Company. Mr. Charles J. Mott will be on campus next Wednesday and Thursday, October 26th and 27th. He will be taking orders in the South Cunningham Cypress Room from 9-12 and 1-4.

Juniors with last names beginning with letters A to M will order on Wednesday. On Thursday, Juniors with last names beginning with letters N to Z will order their rings.

A new "pinkle" ring has been added to the class ring selections. This ring will be scaled to fit the little finger. Mr. Mott is bringing a sample of this ring with him.

The cost of the 19 kt. class ring will be $20.25. A $10.00 deposit will be required on all orders. Additional charges will be added to 14 kt. and white gold rings.

Each Junior will have 3 initials engraved in her ring at no charge. Any additional letters or initials (such as B.S., '68) will cost an additional $2.50 each.

Rings are to be back before February 16th, just in time for the Junior Weekend festivities.

Corkettes Hold Tryouts; 66-67 Members Selected

"The Rotunda" extends congratulations to the following girls: Susan Tarrant, Barbara Carr, Becky Hinds, Judy Pettit, Ann Crigler, Candee Dickenson, Dale Grigg, Susan Guild, Marsha Gussallais, Bonnie Lamson, Janet Mays, Georgia Mayo, Diane Schools, Vicki Smith, Lyn Snyder and Nina Stodale.

Recently chosen as new members of the Corkettes, the above girls were judged on their ability to swim to music and to swim with other members of the group. They were also required to perform certain stunts specified by H2O Club members. Potential as well as present ability was considered by the judges. The new Corkettes will be participating in the water show which is scheduled for March. We will be looking forward to seeing the new members in action and also those girls who put on that fabulous show last year!

If anyone is interested in learning stunts or getting training in synchronized swimming, the H2O Club members will be happy to give any assistance they can afford. Rec. Swims.

Student Questions Breakfast Service

seconds flat. Can't we join forces and DO something?

The following proposal must have many holes in it because someone has to have thought of it before now, but my frustrated appetite insists that I at least expose my idea:

1. Breakfast will last from 7:00 a.m. to 9:20 a.m. every morning except Sunday.
2. Each student will get her silverware in the same line and at the same time that she gets her food.
3. Upon finishing breakfast (in a leisurely lady-like manner) each student must take her used dishes, glasses, and utensils to the window. Trash should be put in trash cans provided for.
4. Waitresses (for whom I have sincere sympathy) should be responsible for having tables set up in time for lunch.

These propositions could solve so many petty problems for everyone. Those girls not having an eight o'clock class might seriously consider eating breakfast if the time were extended, and all of us could exercise responsibility given in elementary school. I think we could do it.

The only fallacy I can foresee is the problem the dining hall staff may have washing the dishes in time for lunch. If this is the only problem, there has to be a solution.

Absence makes the heart grow fonder?

Lack of breakfast gives me hunger!

Rubley Report On VEA Tells Of More Support

By Kay Young

Mr. Earl A. Rubley, one of Longwood's delegates to the Virginia Educational Association meeting, spoke Wednesday night to the faculty concerning the important issues that were brought before the general meeting of the VEA. Mr. Rubley reported on a few recommendations that were adopted from the VEA Committee Report and Program for Action.

The delegates approved and expressed increased support for public colleges. They stated that "Greater effort should be made to provide for: (a) additional dormitory space; (b) adequate facilities for instruction; (c) additional qualified teachers; and (d) the development of essential and new programs. Both the immediate and long-range nature of these needs should be recognized."

Longwood students will be very interested in the adoption of teacher certification and on teacher employment and assignment. Some of the more important ones concerning teacher certification include: (1) "The Virginia State Department of Education be urged to work toward the reduction of the collegiate certificate to the status of a special permit, two year non-renewable certificate." (2) "The State Department of Education be encouraged to study the possibility of setting up standards for the accreditation of elementary schools (through which there would be assurance of certified elementary teachers). Among the advantages of such a practice would be the requirement of properly certified and endorsed teachers to teach in such schools." (3) "The Committee on Teacher Certification appointed by the State Department of Education establish special standards for certification of teachers in the primary grades."

In the line of Teacher and Administration Employment and Assignment the following was amended: "Every effort be made to secure qualified personnel for all teaching positions. The local TEPS Committee work very closely with the person or persons concerned with teacher employment to encourage assignment of teachers only in their field of (certification) endorsement." Equal opportunity for men and women in administration was recommended.

Mr. Rubley said he was quite appalled over the rejection of the following recommendation: "That based on careful study of the experience of other states in the use of the National Teacher Examination, consideration be given its use as one of the criteria for teacher certification." It appeared the delegates were against self criticism.

The delegates did accept a recommendation that the State Department of Education Committee on Teacher Certification establish special standards for the certification of teachers in the primary grades.

Mr. Rubley reported that in the field of teacher training it was recommended and adopted that all State-supported teacher institutions expand their programs to include education for Kindergarten and Nursery school teacher. It was decided to establish a school of Library Science in at least one of the State-supported institutions of higher education. Librarians are in insufficient supply; it was recommended that there be offerings both on the graduate and undergraduate level. The delegates asked that the General Assembly of Virginia take the necessary steps to make the State-supported teacher education institutions co-educational.

Mr. Rubley said that it was his observation that "the delegates were more interested in the changes that someone or some organization could do for them but were against anything that would result in evaluation of the individual teacher, either new or old."

John P. Wynne Speaks At Education Assembly

In order to emphasize National Education Week, November 7-13, the Student Education Association yesterday sponsored John P. Wynne, to speak in assembly to the student body.

Dr. Wynne is closely connected with Longwood College, for he was for more than 30 years Chairman of the Department of Education and Philosophy here, as well as Director of Teacher Education, before his retirement.

The topic of his speech was "Self-Education." The Assembly was attended by many distinguished personages, including faculty members and the Mayor of Farmville.

Now he is an Emeritus, but earlier in his career Dr. Wynne served in the capacities of teacher and principal in public schools and as Professor of Education and Psychology at Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, which is now Mississippi State University.

Among other credits he has received, he has been President of the Virginia Philosophical Association; President of Region III, South Atlantic Philosophy of Education Society; and Director of the Joint Study of Qualities of Experience, sponsored by the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education and the Philosophy of Education Society. He is perhaps the only remaining student of John Dewey, the noted Philosopher of Education.

Retiring from Longwood in 1960, Dr. Wynne received his BA and MA from Duke University and his PhD from Columbia University. During his career he has taught extensively from Harvard in the east to Washington in the west.

Ivan Davis, Pianist, Opens Artist Series

by Susan Woltz

Last night Ivan Davis, pianist, opened the 1965-66 Artist Series here at Longwood College. His list of credits is long and impressive, and he has received plaudits from many newspapers and critics.

The New York Times has said: "His playing has personality, and leaves no doubt that an important American artist has arrived on the scene." Another rave came from the Dallas Time Herald: "Brilliant is the word for the playing of Ivan Davis—for it sums up the technique, the clear glittering tone, the dash and elegance of the mood."

Mr. Davis was born in Texas, and has rolled up a record of prize-winning performances, like the ones commented on above, on three continents. In April, 1960, he won by unanimous choice the Franz Liszt Piano Competition in New York, and this rather opened the door to his success.

Previously he has been a scholarship student at North Texas University, and has gone to Europe as a Fulbright scholar. He has also toured Europe extensively, appearing in recital and orchestra. In the United States, he has appeared with such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Pittsburgh Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, the Houston Symphony, and the Boston "Pops", at major summer festivals and in recitals from coast to coast.

This season, Ivan Davis will make his first appearance with the New York Philharmonic, performing in one of the famous Pension Fund Concerts in Philharmonic Hall in New York's Lincoln Center.

Last night's program consisted of the Chaconne, by Bach-Busoni, a Sonata in C major, by Beethoven, Papillons, by Schumann, Variations Series, by Mendelssohn, and a paraphrase on Mendelssohn's Incidental Music to "A Midsummer Night's Dream", by Liszt-Davis.

Social Security Brings To LC Student Aid

According to William J. Vinson, District Manager of the Lynchburg Social Security Office, a student may be eligible for social security benefits as the unmarried son or daughter of a person receiving old-age or disability insurance benefits, or a person who has died. A full-time student may receive benefits until age 22.

A student who received social security payments before attaining age 18, and who is a full-time unmarried student should 22 years of age, should get in touch with the Lynchburg Social Security District Office to see about having payments started again. Payments may be made for months back to January 1965.

A student who was already 18 or over when one of his parents became entitled to old-age or disability insurance benefits, or died, but was not yet 22 in January 1965, may now be eligible for social security benefits beginning in January 1965 if he has not married.

Further information may be obtained by contacting the Social Security District Office, 3412 Langhorne Road, Lynchburg, Virginia 24501.

Mr. Ratcliff, the representative from the Lynchburg, Virginia, District Office, will be in Farmville, Virginia, at the Court House, Wednesday of each week.

The Montreal STAR gave an extra twist to the announcement that Yale students would be allowed feminine visitors in their rooms seven days a week instead of only on weekends. The STAR printed the news as a dispatch from New HEAVEN, Conn.

National Teacher Examination Aids With Teacher Evaluation

By Kay Young

Many school systems in the United States are now using the National Teacher Examination as a factor in selecting or certifying new teachers, in evaluating teachers for continued growth in service, in considering the qualifications of teachers for advancement, and in individualizing teacher assignments in accordance with identified strengths and weaknesses. Most school systems set a local minimum score which must be met by applicants for a job. Other school systems have no minimum score on the tests, but combine the NTE results with college records, interviews and experience ratings. Some school systems consider the tests subjectively, as part of the candidate's total record.

The tests are set up through the direct application of the wisdom of teacher education to the question: What knowledge is of most worth to prospective teachers? There are three major curricular domains: general education, professional education, and specific teaching area specialization. The test are divided into a set of Common Examination, designed to measure certain knowledge and abilities expected of a teacher, and into thirteen Teaching Area Examinations designed to evaluate the candidates' special preparation for specific fields.

The Common Examinations, designed to appraise the general preparation of the prospective teacher, are divided into a set of Professional Education Tests and a set of General Education Tests. These cover psychological foundations of education, social foundations of education, teaching principles and practices, social studies, literature, and fine arts, science and mathematics, and written English expression.

The Teaching Area Examinations are used to evaluate the candidate's preparation in his specific field. Tests are offered in the following fields: Education in the Elementary School, Early Childhood Education, Biology and General Science, English and Literature, Industrial Arts Education, Mathematics, Chemistry, Physics, and General Science, Social Studies, Physical Education, Business Education, Music Education, Home Economics Education, and Art Education.

The NTE is based on the premise that no single type of test can completely evaluate the total complex of effective teaching. It is planned as an objective test of measurable knowledge and abilities which are considered basic for successful teaching. These tests do not measure personal and social characteristics, interests, attitudes, and abilities, so they must be supplemented with results from other evaluating methods.

These tests are given four times each year at testing centers arranged by the Educational Testing Service. Each candidate applies directly to the ETS office. They will receive an Admission Ticket to the examination from ETS. The complete examination, which includes the Commons and a Teaching Area Examination, has a fee of $11. The fee for only the Commons Examination is $5, and for only the Teaching Area Examination the fee is $7. About six weeks after the testing date, each NTE candidate receives a report of his scores along with information to help him evaluate his performance.

The working time for the complete NTE is five hours and fifty-five minutes -- four hours and ten minutes for the Commons and one hour and forty-five minutes for a Teaching Area. (Continued on page 4)

Simkins Speaks In South's Loss In Recent Talk

Dr. Francis B. Simkins, professor of history at Longwood College, spoke to the King and Queen County Historical Society at King and Queen County on October 12. His topic was "Why the South Was Defeated." In his speech, Simkins gave three major reasons for the South's complete defeat during the Civil War. First, the South had an overwhelming army against her. Second, the South was an agricultural area, an most of the industry was in the North. Third, the South had the whole world prejudiced against it because of the slavery issue.

The Civil War was fought aristocratically by the Southern aristocracy. The Union turned the war into a moral crusade and enlisted many European immigrants, promising them land in the West. (Jefferson Davis himself was captured by a German from Wisconsin.) The irony of this policy was that land was not granted to Southern Negroes who joined the Union forces.

Another point Simkins made was that Lincoln was not the great liberal he is remembered. Supposedly, the Emancipation Proclamation was issued primarily for political reasons. Also, the South was forced to have conscriptions. Simkins wonders how effective and liberal Lincoln's Reconstruction Policy would have been had he lived.

Simkins stated that more Americans were killed in the Civil War than in any war we have had.

As You Like It

By Frieda Richards

The Longwood Players' and Hampden-Sydney Jougliers' production of Shakespeare's As You Like It was a success. David Wiley's scene design was excellent as are all of his designs for the Jarman Hall plays. The colors of the sets were cleverly harmonized with the costume colors. The lighting cast is to be complimented also for their noteworthy job.

The beginning of the first act was rough owing to Orlando, played by Warren Pulton, rather fast and unintelligible speaking of his opening lines. Adam, portrayed by Terry Hall, was badly made up and looked all of 20, with an unusual voice which did not successfully deceive the audience into thinking that Mr. Hall was an old man. Indeed, it is a shame that the voice and makeup could not have been better so Mr. Hall did not do badly in his interpretation of the character.

Celia, played by Pamela Richards, was a fine straight woman for Rosalind's clever threats of humor. The scene at the beginning of the play between Celia and Mary Ann Chinn, as Rosalind, marked the real beginning of the action. Miss Richards and Miss Chinn make an excellent duo on the stage, and their scenes together were delightful.

As the play progressed Orlando's speeches slowed down and the audience was able to appreciate the magnificent resonant voice which Mr. Pulton, a freshman at Hampden - Sydney, possesses. Mr. Pulton seemed to enjoy his role and completely captivated his audience.

The role of Touchstone was taken by Jim Rhodes, a welcome addition to the Jarman stage. Mr. Rhodes did such a charming job with his role that it would be nice to see him in another play soon. Jerry Freeman as Amiens and the second brother did a creditable job, as did Edward Ayers in his dual parts of Lebeau and the second forester. This play welcomed back the familiar face of J. P. Rogers as Duke Frederick and Duke senior. As Duke Frederick, Mr. Rogers was too rigid; with his beard (the fault again of the makeup committee) and the carriage of his chin, Duke Frederick was surprisingly like a Japanese emperor. This critic would like to see Mr. Rogers in a performance of The Mikado. As Duke senior, Mr. Rogers' performance was considerably better, as it lacked the rigidity which was a fault of the Duke Frederick part. By the end of the play Mr. Rogers was doing a very nice job of his role as Duke senior.

The minor part of Silvius was interpreted by Terry Hall. Mr. Hall played Silvius as an extreme example of a country bumpkin, but his performance was believable, especially the grateful before the curtains closed for intermission. Not so believable were the parts of Audrey and Phebe. Mary Pollock and Audrey were very nice. Audrey was a very nice girl, and Phebe was a very nice girl. Phebe was a very nice girl, and Phebe was a very nice girl.

Tom Bradley as Charles was acceptable and was better as Jacques, although his speech "... all the world's a stage..." was not as good as the rest of his role as Jacques.

Butch Peasloos, Arthur Lee Cox, Bo Pritchard, Don Jones, Sumner Armstrong, Doris Jenkins, and Patsy Striker had other smaller parts and Pat DeJarnette, Martha Hall, Janet Fairles and Jennifer Dunville portrayed the attendants. All the supporting actors are to be commended for their contributions to the success of the play.

The main credits for the success should go to Dr. Pulton Lockwood as director, assisted by Pat Thomas, to Mr. David Wiley for his effective set designs, and to Mary Ann Chinn and Warren Pulton for their capable handling of the lead roles. The stage manager, costume staff, lights, sound, property, and scenery committees are all to be congratulated.

Lights - Out Poll

In a recent poll of freshmen a majority of the students questioned were opposed to the lights out policy.

"It was stressed throughout orientation that we were now adults but we are still being told when to study as well as when we may not take a bath," commented Sue Malcolm.

Sara Gibbons said the following opinion: "After lights out is the best time to study for it is quiet. Many second semester freshmen, who attended summer school, are now taking summer subjects and need additional time at night to study. Also commenting on the need for the quiet time to study was Mary Pat Crews: "Between ten and eleven it is impossible to study because of the noise which occurs as soon as strict study hour is over."

"The phone rings during strict study hour and often causes disturbances as do the sign out desks in the freshmen dorms. Many girls were used to studying late at night at home," commented Suzanne Johnston.

"Lights out should pertain only to the ceiling light, for a small desk lamp would not bother roommates," said Lisa Hammer. Mary Ella Whitten felt similarly. "If you are quiet you shouldn't bother anyone and if you're tired enough you'll go to bed despite the fact your lights can be on," Phyllis DeJarnette says. "A meeting or a big test often requires extra study time at night."

Janet Williams feels that lights out is good for freshmen as does Sally Holman who said, "Girls would take advantage of any changing of this rule because this is their first year away from home," Jan Somers is also in favor of the present lights out policy.

Many freshmen have offered alternative. Sue Ross feels that a set number of late permissions should be granted. Ann Bowles suggests one a week as a limit. Phyllis Mann would like to see lights out at a later hour and both of her roommates, Jean Harris and Amelia Bruce, would like to see lights out deleted.

There is much confusion on the part of all as to where late permission should be obtained and what type of reason is permissible to have lights on later. Some people go to their hall presidents and others go to their head residents. "I think this matter should be clarified by House Council and be made more uniform. As it stands it is a major weakness of the lights out policy," says Janet Fairles.

Mr. Fawcett Joins Longwood Faculty

Perhaps one of the brightest additions to Longwood's faculty is in the Science Department. Mr. Louis Raymond Fawcett, Mr. Fawcett has been at Longwood since June, and this is his first experience teaching at an all-girls school.

Mr. Fawcett has these comments to make concerning Longwood: "The atmosphere here is very pleasant; I find the girls are very conscientious and most are quite willing to work hard to find and learn their assignments."

A Longwood alumna is a member of Mr. Fawcett's household. His wife, a 1938 graduate of the school. They have one baby daughter, Monique, "the World's Greatest Kid," who Mr. Fawcett says will be a member of the Class of '87.

Originally hailing from West Point, Virginia, Mr. Fawcett did his undergraduate work at the University of Richmond, and his graduate work at the University of North Carolina. His degrees are in Physics, and here on campus he teaches General Physics, Atomic and Nuclear Physics, Physical Science, and all their associated lab.

During his studies, Mr. Fawcett belonged to Sigma Pi Sigma, an honorary physics society and Sigma Xi, of which he was selected to be an associate member. Sigma Xi is an honorary research society and one is picked to membership after he has successfully completed graduate research work. In addition, Mr. Fawcett is a member of AASP, American Association of University Professors.

He expresses the wish of "looking forward to having a part in building a Physics department here, or at least in establishing a Physics major for girls. I believe an institution of this size needs one, especially to be consistent with the growth development planned for the future." Mr. Fawcett adds that most people think of physics in terms of men, but that "women have just as much ability and capacity for the subject's understanding. Girls shouldn't look at it with a negative, defeatist attitude, or that men have the real advantage in the physics field."

Previously, Mr. Fawcett taught at co-ed Purman College in Greenville, South Carolina. He has also worked at the Naval Weapons Lab.

"I believe strongly in 'Hall's First Law - Different Things Vary!' Different is the word for some of the crazy experiences Mr. Fawcett has encountered on campus. For instance, one Monday he found an anonymous Charlie Brown poster and a "Happy Monday" sign on his door; and then there was the surprise Jack-O'-Lantern someone left on his desk at Halloween. The experiments he performs in class are rather magical, too, one never knows what to expect... anything from twirling a student to demonstrate static to hitting blocks of wood with a hammer to define acceleration.

The main hobbies he enjoys are water-skiing, bridge, football and automobiles. But, he says, "the problem is finding time to do them. Things just jump around here too much!"

Phi Beta Lambda

Phi Beta Lambda, Longwood College's national college organization of the Future Business Leaders of America, recently initiated twenty-six new members. On hand for the initiation were Mrs. Ruth S. Tallaferrro, sponsor of Phi Beta Lambda, and Mr. Willard G. Leeper, of the Business Education department.

The new members, who were inducted, included: Carol Anthony, Jean Oakley, Sylvia DuPriest, Terry Wells, Pam McGee, Jean Jeter, Joyce Harris, Muffin Padgett, Cheryl Hanabusa, Joan Edgerton, Margaret Moore, Mary Katherine Carroll, Martha Brooks, Phyllis Robinson, Diane O'Berry, Ann Thompson, Sue Nuckels, Jeanne White, Jane Winfree, Carolyn Robinson, Brenda Sprouse, Susan Tinsley, Jan Somers, Barbara Rosenkrantz, Carol Bradley, and Terry Lashanah.

To announce their presence in our girls' dormitory, it is customary for the maintenance men to yell: "Man abroad!" When a campus custodian, summoned to repair a bureau, failed to give advance warning recently, a security guard girl answered his rap on the door. Embarrassed, he hastened to explain the nature of his call. "I'm here," he said, "to fix the knobs on your chest."

Lychnos Initiation

Lychnos, the honorary society for science and mathematics held its initiation of new members October 25 in the Games Room. Initiated were six biology majors, six mathematics majors, one chemistry major and one general science major.

Those being initiated were: Marie Anderson, Edith Carter, Barbara Cardwell, Anne Casale, Carolyn Dobson, Jeanne Klips, Lee Larkin, Mary McCleary.

Others initiated were: Mary Virginia (Guzi) Mason, Mary Ottwell, Irene Nash, Deanna Talley, Linda Tinsinger, and Gladys Witter.

PAUL GOODMAN

What is the meaning of the word "Youth" when they say "Youth Revolt" or "What has gotten into College Youth?" I doubt that age 18-25 was ever before referred to as Youth. In a rural economy, the young are indispensably productive by 12 and are grown-up farmers by 18 or 20. In the old factory system, children were put to work at 9, to teach them work habits; they were certainly just "workmen" by 18. In later factories, after the child-labor laws, 18-year-olds were young workers people, not youth. In agrarian or labor demonstrations and strikes these young people would naturally be involved, and especially relied on for their courage and daring, like military soldiers, who were also 17-25. In countries with a different academic tradition than ours, e.g. Latin countries or Japan, it is assumed that students are even more mature than others of their age, so they are expected to be in the forefront of political conflicts. In 1900, when only six percent of the 17-year-olds graduated from high school, the rest, who from 14 on had to choose vocations and look for jobs in a competitive market, were surely pretty seasoned by 18. And in moral matters, there would surely be no question of trying to control the sex life, social life, or views of young people 18 to 25.

Arresting Maturation

I think there are two chief causes for the odd use of the word at present. Because of technical developments, there is less need for the direct productive use of the young (and no use at all for the old). There is a longer and longer interval in which the young must be baby-sat and policed. Our preferred means of keeping them on ice is, of course, to extend the years of schooling, especially since for many (though doubt for most) extended schooling is useful training for their future jobs. But it happens that the methods and tradition of American schooling have tended precariously to arrest maturational. Although compulsory schooling increases to the college years the school-ma'am spirit of the elementary grades pervades the entire system, whether we think of the corridor passes and censorship of half-dos, the prescribed courses and credits and grading, the method of talking-at and assigning lessons, or the restrictions on political and social life. Studying a cross-section of high schools, Ed Friedenberg has to conclude that their chief function is to break spirit. And most important, the restriction of growing up in one sociological institution, the school, must be deflating to the majority for whom formal schooling is not the best way to learn. But from the beginning they have no choice. If a younger tries to follow his heart, whether a "hobby" or a romance, he is unhesitatingly interrupted and put back on the once serious track.

The inevitable revolt against this servitude is now occurring among college students, undergraduates, graduates, young instructors, and their dropout friends. And it seems to me that, among these too, there is a curious anomaly of language. The dissenting students do not really regard themselves as "young people," whether as young workmen or young citizens or even as students; they finally regard themselves as the only people. This is expressed by the formula "Do not trust anybody over 30." That is, they are a separate race of humanity. Interestingly, 48 percent of the population is now below 26.

Chief Exploited Economic Class

The reality, in my opinion, is that they have been forced into the position of being an isolated class-of-the-young. They cannot identify with the social role that their elders have assigned them; they have different interests and there is a class conflict. Indeed, despite their being pampered, they are at present the chief exploited economic class, their time of life being used for other people's purposes. Negroes, displaced farmers, the aged are out-caste, rather than an economic class.

Rather than as a class of society, however, the young have appointed themselves to be a distinct race or nation, and, correspondingly, they have performed the remarkable act of having a self-conscious History of themselves. I have been told it, in broadly the same outline, from coast to coast. First came the Beats. Castro was our symbol; leader, but perhaps he has messed himself up with the gentle Power Structure. Kennedy flinched at, though since the assassination he has emerged as a martyr. The execution of Chessman was a portentous warning to us, for it showed that the System intends to do us to death. We tried our strength in Mississippi and in the battle of the states filmed by HUAC. Finally occupied the Founding Event, Sproul Hall and the recognition by the Faculty Senate that we exist. (A leader of the Free Speech Movement at Berkeley assured me that this was the first Event in 40,000 years.) Etc. etc. There are regional variations.

Along with the History, there has developed the political theory of para-movements: para-politics (e.g. of BNCC and the Freedom Democratic Party), para-sociology (e.g. of Students for a Democratic Society), para-education (e.g. the free universities). In principle, this parallel development is not an old-fashioned revolutionary concept, to get control of and transform existing institutions. Rather, it is a New Beginning that will grow up uniquely and slough off the old. The spirit of the Modern - live moderns - has breathed a few times before in European history. I will try to describe it further on another occasion.

Tidewater Tournament Team Includes Five From LC Varsity

by Karen Rader

Last week end, the seven Longwood students who were chosen for the All College team traveled to the Tidewater tournament in Richmond. After playing and being judged, five L. C. students were chosen for the Tidewater team. These include Barbara Ragland, Carolyn Cline, Dianne Davis, and Ginny Morton.

Barbara Ragland is a senior physical education major from Richmond. This year she is serving as vice-president of the Athletic Association. Barbara is a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, national leadership fraternity and Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority. This fall she received a white blazer for participation in sports. She was chosen to play on the first team.

Carolyn Cline is from Alexandria and is majoring in physical education. She is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority and the Monogram Club. She recently received a white blazer for her participation in sports. Carolyn will play on the first team for the second year in a row.

Dianne Davis is a junior physical education major from Springfield. She is the Athletic Association's treasurer this year. Dianne was chosen to play on the Tidewater second team.

Jean Hendricks, who has played on the varsity team both of her years here, is from Richmond. She is majoring in physical education. Jean is the varsity hockey manager for the Athletic Association Council. She will play on the second team.

Ginny Morton is a senior physical education major from Newport News. She recently received a blue blazer for her participation in sports. Ginny is a member of the Athletic Association Council. She was chosen to substitute for the second team.

Mr. Penneck, Slater Food Manager, would like to announce the Food Preference Survey which will take place the first of next week. House Council members will distribute the questionnaires on Monday, Nov. 15, and pick them up on Nov. 16. The Food Preference Survey is to determine the students' food likes and dislikes. Slater Service would like to include the foods you like best in the menu this year. This is the way you can tell Mr. Penneck what these foods are.

Slater wants to provide you with the finest in food service. Your suggestions and comments offered on the questionnaire at the time of the survey will help Slater do this for you.

The results of the questionnaire will be published as soon as they are available.

Please include your class, name, and dorm on your questionnaire. Slater will appreciate your taking this survey seriously for the results will affect future meals. Thank you for the time and thought put into answering the questionnaire.

Sports - Minded Senior Receives Recognition

by Jenny Gregory

This week The Rotunda features a very active senior in Sports Spotlight who comes to Longwood from Aberdeen Maryland. She is Nevis Born and is a Physical Education major. Nevis is very interested in a variety of sports and participates in several athletic events.

Nevis is an active member of the Athletic Association and during her sophomore year she was manager of the A.A. council. She is also president of the Monogram club. Besides being a member of the above clubs, Nevis participates in several different sports. She played varsity hockey during her freshman, sophomore, and junior years.

Spirited Seniors Capture Honors In Class Hockey

Last week the class hockey games were held. Six games were held in all so that all classes played three games.

The senior team consisted of Sandy Kilbourne, Geri Gerhardt, Carolyn Burnette, Gerry Edwards, Bess Mann, Phyllis Laseley, Phyllis Collins, E. V. Lockwood, Mary Lea Shoulders, Jenny McCoy, and Karen Rader.

The green and white juniors were represented by Kathy Kolva, Kathy Still, Margaret Robinson, Sharon Williams, Kay Moore, Susan Zix, Alberta Duran, Becky White, Nancy Fey, Joyce Albro and Debbie Holden.

Sophomores Carol Blythe, Jenny Padgett, Carolyn Prillman, Margaret Speed, Judy Arthur, Holly Foreman, Carol Crockett, Lucy King, Joette Bailey, Ella McDade and Farron Davis played for their class.

The freshman team, consisted of Tommie Stone, Jane Erdman, Martha Kay, Jane Tibbs, Jane Curie, Ginny Serk, D. J. Webb, Pat Halsstead, Ann Mooley, Becky Easter, Beth Rice, Jinks Washington, Sally Hellman and Kathy Wolfstrom.

The results of the games were as follows: seniors won three games, lost none; juniors won two games, lost one, sophomores won one game, lost two; and freshmen lost three. The scores were: Seniors vs. Freshmen 1-0; Seniors vs. Junior 3-2; Seniors vs. Sophomores 2-0; Juniors vs. Sophomores 5-0; Juniors vs. Freshmen 1-3; Sophomores vs. Freshmen 2-0.

Varsity basketball, class volleyball, softball, and archery are also among the teams on which Nevis has been a member. From this wide range of sports activities, her skill and interest may be seen.

Nevis's likes range from golf to all types of dogs. As for dislikes, she does not have many.

NEVIS BORN

As it can be seen from her enthusiasm and participation, Nevis carries the Longwood tradition very definitely in the Physical Education department. She adds a great deal to the school and Longwood is very proud to have her as a student.

When asked by the bursar's office to pay a $30 incidental fee, a University of Minnesota card replied, "How many incidents does that entitle me to?"

Varsity Team Faces Colleges In Swim Meet

This year's newest varsity activity will face the first of its meets on December 4, 1965. The varsity swimming team, which is coached by Miss Mary A. Heintz, will attend a three school meet at Westhampton College on Dec. 4. The three schools involved are: Longwood, Westhampton, and Lynchburg.

On December 11, Longwood will attend a six school meet at William and Mary College. Besides these two, Westhampton, Old Dominion College, Lynchburg College and Mary Washington will be represented.

The events will be the same for both meets. These consist of a 200 yd. medley relay, a 50 yd. freestyle, 50 yd. backstroke, 100 yd. individual medley, diving, 50 yd. breaststroke, 50 yd. butterfly, and 200 yd. freestyle relay.

The squad consists of Ellnor Understock, Beth Nichols, Jo Ann Baker, Stephanie Du Ross, Debbie Holden, Alberta Duran, Diana Johnson, Frances B.A.N. and Geri Gerhardt. Corina Uhde is the varsity swimming manager.

Academics Stiffen — Students Complain

College students are complaining that stiff academic loads are turning them into robots, reports Prof. Frank Krutskie of Colorado College who spent the past year examining freshman English programs on leading campuses throughout the country. It was the result of a study financed through a grant from the Danforth Foundation.

In a report delivered at the annual faculty fall conference, Professor Krutskie pointed to the "dangers of excellence." He said "students seem to think they are overworked — especially at the best colleges. I am beginning to agree with the students. Some of the course assignments seem too hard. The professors want a lot these days and they want it done thoroughly."

Professor Krutskie felt that if courses are to be required during the freshman year they must be especially imaginative and well planned. "I did not find this was the case," he said. "Many of the required freshman courses were dull. One of the problems is lack of knowledge by college teachers about what the students have been exposed to in high school. There is no easy solution, but most of the colleges are working on the problem."

The purpose of Professor Krutskie's year-long study was to analyze the teaching of college freshman English. He found exposition was the most common approach, but that there appears to be a shift to the rhetoric and humanistic approaches. He found that the newer colleges are using rhetoric. There is a strong indication that other colleges also are interested, he reported.

The humanistic approach is the most difficult to get started, Professor Krutskie said, since it

Exchange Students Agree LC Friendly

On the Longwood campus we have two foreign exchange students, Maria del Carmen Acuña Blasquez and Lucie Blanche Ruiz.

Maria was born in Madrid, Spain, but in 1957 she and her family moved to Montevideo, Uruguay. Maria came to the United States in August. The first place she visited was the World's Fair in which she found the General Electric Pavilion most fascinating, but with a grin on her face she admits she was a little partial to the Spanish Pavilion.

Friendliness and warmth were the first characteristics that Maria noticed upon her arrival at Longwood.

Maria's favorite American author is Pearl S. Buck. She feels that this Nobel Prize winner is the greatest in her field, and Maria was inspired by her novel, The Good Earth.

To teach has always been Maria's goal. She says, "It is wonderful to transmit education to the young people. They should know the world in which they live."

Lucie was born in La Pa, Bolivia. She has already had some teaching experience, for she has taught English at San Andrés University and at the kindergarten at the American Coop School in Bolivia.

This is not Lucie's first trip to the United States, for she spent two weeks in our country in 1964.

Before her arrival at Longwood this fall, Lucie was in the Experiment on International Living in Chappaqua, New York. Lucie finds Longwood a "nice, friendly place." She feels that the young people in our country are not as sentimental as those in Bolivia. The thing that impresses Lucie most at Longwood is "70,000 volumes in a library."

Both Maria and Lucie are helping in the Foreign Language Department, and they are making themselves a part of all phases of Longwood College Life.

Deutsche Klub Newly Organized At Longwood

The newly formed German Club — Deutsche Klub — Eidelweiss, held its first meeting on Thursday, October 28, 1965 in the Hiner Building.

Officers were elected for the year: President - Sharon Dove, Vice-President - Virginia Washington, Secretary - Barbara Lyman, and Treasurer - Janet Fairies. Miss Schroeder, the new German and French teacher from Germany, is sponsor of the club.

Sildes on Heidelberg and a movie on the movie of Tilman Riemenschneider, a famous German woodcarver, were shown.

The Deutsche Klub plans to meet on the third Thursday of every month. Tentative plans for the year, including a joint language club meeting at Christmas, were discussed. Everyone who is interested in German life and culture is invited to attend these meetings. The next meeting will be held on Thursday, November 18, 1965.

Spanish Club Holds Meeting; Plans Programs

The first meeting of "El Club Espanol" was held today in the Student Lounge at 4 p.m.

Much activity and entertainment was planned for this opening meeting. A door prize was awarded, several Spanish songs were taught to new members, and Linda Sue Schultz and Mary Sue Alley sang Spanish folk songs, accompanying themselves on the guitar. Fran Lipford spoke on her stay in Panama, and the Spanish Hall provided entertainment. The new exchange students were introduced to all those present. Refreshments were served following the meeting.

Sarah Wohlford, president of "El Club Espanol," said they are striving to have these meetings more informal and interesting than in the past. All interested students are urged to attend these meetings.

Teacher's Exam

Exam. Candidates prepared to teach in more than one field may take the different Teaching Area Exams on different testing dates.

Applicants for teaching positions in local school systems in Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina must take the NTE to obtain certification in these states. Students should check with Mr. Dewitt if they plan to teach in some area other than Virginia. Mr. Dewitt said that it would probably be a good idea for all girls planning to teach to take the exam because something unexpected could take her to another state. Also some school systems in Virginia are requiring NTE.

The National Teachers Examination will be given at Longwood College on March 19, 1966. Mr. Dewitt will supervise the examinations.

Wesleyans Meet At Lexington With W-L VMI

Thirty-seven members of Longwood's Wesleyan Foundation traveled to Lexington Sunday for a joint meeting with the Wesleyan Foundations of Virginia Military Institute and Washington and Lee University.

After an early lunch, the group traveled by the Longwood bus to Lexington. They visited the historic Lee Chapel on the W&L campus before attending a lecture given by Dr. Lewis Hodges on "The History of Prejudices." The combined groups then had dinner at the Wesley Foundation House.

Becky White, president of the Longwood chapter, explained that every state campus, and some private colleges, have Wesleyan Foundations. Last year they met with Y. P. I., V. M. I., and W&L. They would like to visit Randolph-Macon this year, also.

Dr. Lewis Hodges will be leading a study group at Longwood in February. The topic, "Making Ethical Decisions," will be discussed on three consecutive Thursday evenings.

NOTICE:

The Library is open on Sunday nights from 7:00 until 10:00 for the convenience of students who wish to use it for study and reading. Because there are no librarians on duty during the Sunday night hours, no regular library services are offered; books and other library materials may not be charged out, and reference assistance is not given. The ground floor study rooms are not available during this period.

THE ROTUNDA would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the varsity hockey team. The first team had an undefeated season, while the second team sustained only two losses. It certainly is an excellent showing for Longwood and for Mrs. Bobbitt—it being her first season.

Academic Standing Determines Success

Depending on your current academic standing, you'll either be heartened or sobered by a discovery revealed in the November Reader's Digest. It is that in a study of 17,000 men working for a leading industrial company, success in college was the most reliable indicator of success in a career.

The company that made the study is one of the nation's largest, American Telephone and Telegraph Co. In the Digest article A. T. & T. Board Chairman Frederick R. Kappel says that of the men in the top third of their classes at college, 45 per cent were also in the top-salaried third of the company. At the other end of the scale 40 percent of those in the lowest third of their schools were also in the lowest third in salary.

Kappel says that although the quality of the college makes some difference, it is less of a difference than the quality of the man. That is, top students from average colleges were more successful than average students from top colleges.

Another discovery made in the survey was that extracurricular activities in college bore little relationship to career success. "It is only real campus achievement that seems to have significance," says Kappel. "Mere participation in extracurricular goings-on does not."

The significance of these findings is apparent. "More and more," says the telephone company chief, "these statistical guidelines dispose us to look within the top half of the college class for the individuals to whom we will offer career opportunities."

While there are exceptions, "nevertheless we must be concerned with relative probability," Kappel writes. "When you hire a high-scholarship man, your bet is that a drive already demonstrated will be sustained. Anybody have some studying he wants to do?"

Forty Attend BSU Meeting At Eagle Egrie

Approximately forty Longwood students attended the Virginia Baptist Student Union Convention at Eagle Egrie Assembly October 29-31.

The theme of the convention, which was attended by representatives from all the Virginia colleges, was "Called to Proclaim." Every student was assigned to a college which held discussion groups throughout the day. These groups dealt with topics which ranged from "The Gospel of Communism" to "Preparing for Marriage."

Some of the highlights of the week end were a Talent Variety Hour, a banquet and a concert by Mr. Frank Brooks, who has sung at Queen Elizabeth's coronation as well as with the Billy Graham crusade.

Rector Resigns; Bank President Named Successor

Farmville, Va., Nov. 19 — Douglas A. Robertson, of Lynchburg, was recently honored by fellow members of the Longwood College board of visitors for his leadership as rector of the board during its first year as the college's governing body.

After serving one year as rector, Mr. Robertson, who remains on the board, resigned the position for "personal reasons." He has been succeeded as rector by John L. Whitehead, of Radford, former vice rector. Board member Ernest P. Gates, commonwealth attorney, of Chester, succeeds Mr. Whitehead as vice rector.

The honor came to Mr. Robertson at a luncheon in the college tea room following a recent quarterly board meeting. When board members presented to Mr. Robertson a handsome silver tray, accompanied by a resolution of appreciation for his "effective leadership dedicated to the cause of higher education." The resolution was offered by Mr. Gates who asked that it be incorporated in the minutes of the meeting.

The gift presentation was made by E. Angus Powell, of Richmond, who lauded Mr. Robertson's "ability, vision, courage, and dedicated service" in behalf of the college and the commonwealth.

Upon the resignation last winter of Dr. F. G. Lankford, Jr., the new rector served as chairman of a search committee to recommend a successor to Dr. Lankford as president of Longwood.

Mr. Whitehead is a prominent civic and business leader of the state. A pharmacist and former merchant, Mr. Whitehead is president and board chairman of the New River Valley Bank, of Radford and Dublin.

Active in the state's political life, Mr. Whitehead served three regular terms and two special sessions as a member of the House of Delegates. He is a former mayor of Gretna and Radford.

A 58-year-old graduate of George Washington University where he received a degree in pharmacy, Mr. Whitehead for many years has been a leader in the cause of education. He has devoted much time to the Boy Scouts and other civic organizations. He has served in every lay position in the Grace Episcopal Church of Radford.

Mr. Whitehead is married to the former Miss Mary Scott Shelton, of Farmville. A daughter, Mary Scott, is a 1965 graduate of Longwood and now teaches at Virginia Beach. Two other children, John and Ruth, are attending the Radford High School.

show that the Freshman Class had the highest percentage of voters while the upper class percentages decreased with each rising class. However, a majority of each class did vote. Seventy-nine per cent of the Freshman Class, 77 per cent of the Sophomore Class, 75 per cent of the Junior Class, and 67 per cent of the Senior Class voted in the elections.

The results of the elections were: Nancy Brown as Chairman of Legislative Board, Ann Casteen as Chairman of Judicial Board, Nancy Spain as President of House Council, Pat Brown as President of the Athletic Association, and Cookie Hawthorne as President of the Y. W. C. A.

Nancy Brown had several prerequisites for her election. She served as freshman representative on the Judicial Board, as sophomore representative on the Legislative Board and is serving as secretary of the Legislative Board this year. English is Nancy's major, and she will receive a B. A. degree. Her hobbies are swimming, music, and she likes to dabble in oil painting. Ann Casteen, known as "Casey" by some, was representative to the Judicial Board during her freshman and sophomore years. She is working toward a B. S. degree in Biology and possibly a double major including Chemistry. She is chiefly interested in her sorority Sigma Kappa, likes to play bridge, and is fond of any type of music.

Nancy Spain served as assistant dorm president during her sophomore year, and is serving as treasurer of House Council this year. She was on the Executive Council of House Council during her sophomore year and is presently serving on it. Nancy likes to play sports of any kind, to play the guitar, and to sing. She will receive a B. S. degree in History and Social Sciences.

Pat Brown is a busy Health and Physical Education major working toward a B. S. degree. She has worked with A. A. through her participation in class volleyball, softball, varsity basketball, hockey, color rush and served as softball manager. Pat is very interested in her sorority Alpha Gamma Delta, her Junior Class, and class and varsity sports.

Lucy Hawthorne, better known as "Cookie," has served as treasurer of Y. W. C. A. as chairman of the Y's Circus booth, as chairman of the "Y" Road Show, and as freshman representative to the Meredith Christian Association. She is working toward a B. S. degree in Home Economics and also enjoys horseback riding and swimming.

The Rotunda would like to take this opportunity to give thanks to all the staff in the dining hall for working hard to make Thanksgiving dinner a very successful one. The dinner required a lot of work on the part of Alonza Hicks, head chef, Phillip Ward, head baker, Mr. Penneck and especially the student waitresses.

Singer Dionne Warwick of rock 'n' roll, rhythm 'n' blues fame will fill the spotlight in Jarman for the concert for senior weekend.

LC Cultural Program Displays Three Exhibits

by JANET FAIRES

Three art exhibits are on display at Longwood from November 15 to December 15.

Prints for Young Collectors, from the Rokon Gallery in Baltimore, is being exhibited in the West Wing. International contemporary miniature prints which are collected and are being circulated by Pratt can be seen in the Library Exhibition Room.

Also on view in the Library Exhibition Room are examples of craft work by four Richmond craftsmen. They are Ruth Gleach, Lucy Ann Warner, James Purizer and Doris Sutton.

Doris Sutton's work is in jewelry. She attended William and Mary and was a graduate of Radford College. She received her M. F. A. from the Teacher's College of Columbia University. After studying under Gustaf Anderson, teacher of jewelry and enameling, she studied silversmithing with Rudolph Schumaker, a craftsman with William Dixon Company of New York. She is presently teaching art in the Richmond Public Schools, adult classes in jewelry making and enameling, and one evening class at Richmond Professional Institute.

Ruth Gleach, a graduate of Ohio State University, is exhibiting her work in enameling. Her work has been exhibited in many biennials, a one-man show at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, three international ceramics exhibitions at the Smithsonian Institution. The Thablinner's Invitational Richmond Artist Association exhibit as well as others outside of the state.

Both James Purizer and Lucy Warner are resident craftsmen at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, which is the first institute of its type in the United States to initiate such a program. They were persuaded to come from the Academy of Art in Michigan where their work had brought praise and participate in the program. Purizer studied with Grotell. His work was displayed in the '63-64 Michigan Arts Craftsman exhibition at the Detroit Institute of Arts and he won the Vreeland Award in 1962 at the University of Nebraska for "Exceptional creative ability in the arts." He will exhibit bowls, vases, and other items of pottery in the exhibit.

His colleague, Lucy Ann Warner, who was graduated from the University of Colorado, has displayed her work in major exhibitions from New Mexico to New York. While at Cranbrook the Michigan Chapter of the American Institute of Interior Designers purchased one of her woven room dividers for the permanent collection of the Detroit Institute of Art. She will display pillows, rugs, stores, dress fabric and wall hangings at the exhibit.

All articles are on sale and may be purchased by contacting the art department.

Taylor To Hold Master Class For LC Singers

Bernard Taylor, one of the most distinguished men in the field of vocal teaching will conduct a master class for singers at 10:00 a.m. on Saturday, December 4, in Jarman Auditorium.

Mr. Taylor has taught for over 22 years at the Juilliard School of Music, and has also taught Mr. James McCombs, the voice instructor here at Longwood. He has edited albums of songs which are used widely in conservatories and schools of music. These volumes include collections of Italian, French, and German songs, contemporary English songs and general collections.

Senior Weekend Plans Include Concert, Dance

by Barbara Melton

The Senior Class, reunited with will host its last big weekend as the class of 1966, on Saturday, December 4. Highlighting the weekend, there will be a concert by Dionne Warwick and The Brandywine Singers at 2:00 Saturday afternoon in Jarman Auditorium.

Dionne Warwick has become internationally recognized as an extraordinary and gifted artist. Continuing her upward trend of great successes, Dionne has presented concerts throughout the world. Past hits for Miss Warwick have included "Don't Make Me Over," "Anyone Who Had A Heart," "Wishing and Hoping," and "Walk On By." To name a few. The Brandywine Singers, composed of three male folk-type singers, will also present various musical selections at Saturday's concert.

Mary Kay Richeson has handled the concert arrangements, with the help of the Senior Class sponsor, Dr. James M. Helms. Concert tickets are now on sale to the student body at $2.50 each. A special section has been reserved for the seniors and their dates. It is expected that the 1200-seat Jarman Auditorium will be filled for this performance. Sunday attire is requested for the concert.

An Italian-style dinner, for Seniors and their dates only, will be held on Saturday at 5:30 in the Senate dining hall. The dinner will capture the authentic Italian atmosphere — complete with spaghetti as the main course, red-checked table cloths, bibs, and candles burning brightly in the traditional Chianti bottles. Pud Murdock and Becky Knight have been working with Mr. Penneck, who has been very kind in preparing his special meal for the Seniors.

Continuing the weekend activities, a combo party will be held on Saturday night in the Old Gym from 8-12 p.m. This party will feature the "Royal Kings," a combo from Rasmoke, Va., comprised of five instrumentalists and one Negro vocalist. Tickets for the party are now on sale to the student body at $1.00 per couple. These tickets will be limited as the gym can only accommodate 300-350 couples. Requested attire is dressy school clothes for girls and coats and ties for boys. Ruth Ann Baxter is chairman of the combo party. Marlene Armour is in charge of selling tickets. Decorations in the gym will be comprised of caricatures. Cakes will be sold during the evening, and the sorority rooms will be open to all guests.

Publicity for the weekend is being handled by Bev Cuttrill, Harriet Anderson, Phyllis Boykin and Betsy Taylor.

The Rotunda would like to take this opportunity to give special thanks to Hampden-Sydney for their assistance in providing us with the picture of Dionne Warwick. We are also indebted to the Farmville Record shop for the numerous long distance phone calls they made and for the picture of the Brandywine Singers.

The Brandywine Singers, recording artists for Jay Records, will co-star with Dionne Warwick for Senior Weekend.

"Virginia Beach" Craze Hits Longwood Campus

by Phyllis Hummer

It's no longer the Hitchhiker, Freddy, Jerk, Monkey, Pogoey, Watusi, Frus, Mess-Around, everybody going — the "Virginia Beach" craze has set in and it's the greatest yet!

This new dance started to appear last Spring, having its origin at the "Top Hat," the local Va. Beach pub. Like most other disco-steps, his one was quickly adopted by the local college set and rapidly spread outside of the "Beach" area. Originators and avid enthusiasts of this craze (so reliable sources inform us) are local Va. Beach boys: Russell Smith, Mike King, Leighton Yates, Wayne Lance, and Robert Williamson.

"The Dance" has its own distinct, characteristic movements, consisting of sliding, kicking, intricate hand motions, double jerk . . . At a party you can't miss it — there's always a long line of "V. B.'ers" kicking together.

Favorite combos of the craze are "The Rhondels" and "The Sting Rays" both of the "Top Hat." "The Rhondels" are hoped to be at Longwood for the Junior Ring Dance.

At Longwood, "The Dance" is rapidly taking hold. Early dinner-jerkers may see this being staged nightly in Main Rec. (We hear one of our waitresses has turned part-time dance instructor . . .) One night twenty-five girls and a few Va. Beach "kickers," accompanied by a record player, stampeded the South Cunningham Rec in hopes of learning "The Dance." (Many thanks to the girls on 3rd floor North Cunningham for all this inside info.)

Although the sliding and kicking (essential characteristics of this dance) are sure causes of worn-out soles, and a completely exhausted physical state, the "Virginia Beach" is What's Happening — WE LOVE IT!

Dean Wilson Takes Trip

Dean Ruth B. Wilson attended the Fall Planning Conference of the Southern Intercollegiate Association of Student Governments the weekend of November 19 at Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Georgia.

Members of the Advisory Committee, which is composed of Deans of Women from the member colleges, and the student officers of the Association, made plans for the spring Convention, which will also be held at Agnes Scott.

Letters To Editor

Student Poses Question On AKG Selection Plans

I would like to pose a question which has not yet been answered but which desperately needs an answer. My question is no way concerns the people who were recently tapped into Alpha Kappa Gamma; rather, it concerns those people who were not considered worthy of the challenge in fellow students which Alpha Kappa Gamma implies.

I find it difficult to understand how, when the majority of the student body is aware of the qualities in fellow students which Alpha Kappa Gamma purports to seek, Alpha Kappa Gamma itself does not recognize these individuals.

I believe that an organization such as Alpha Kappa Gamma serves a vital role in the college community only when its membership understands that such an organization belongs to the student body and is entrusted to those students who are worthy of its challenge.

I do not believe that any organization, made up of students, which proposes to represent any faction of the student body, is above question. Any organization in order to function properly, must constantly evaluate itself. It must at all times, keep in mind its purposes and ask itself these purposes to capacity.

I would like to pose a question to the membership of Alpha Kappa Gamma. In your tapping ceremony, it is stated that, "Alpha Kappa Gamma is not so much a honor as a challenge."

I would like to ask you how many of your number consider that invitation a final achievement and how many of you accept the invitation as the challenge it was meant to be.

Sincerely,

Rusty Stephenson

Tapping Service Raises Questions On Leadership

Letter to the Editor:

Certain emotions arise in an individual when something or someone which he respects and believes in turns out to be something less than it should be. Some prime examples of these respectable institutions are one's country, one's government, one's parents, one's teachers, and one's friends. Some of the possible emotions experienced are frustration, disgust, bafflement, and, above all, disappointment. This reader must admit that all of these emotions were experienced after Alpha Kappa Gamma's tapping ceremonies. For three years, Alpha Kappa Gamma was considered to be, by this reader, a group which truly recognized the contributing and sincere leaders on this campus. However, in thinking over the judgment, or lack of it, of this year's organization, this reader has come to some very unpleasant and conclusive.

This reader is a firm believer in recognizing, through honoring, those qualities which are intangible, or difficult to measure objectively. Some examples are integrity, loyalty, sincerity, ability to lead, ability to follow, and attitudes, in general. In fact, sometimes it seems that the recognition of these most important of human qualities is lost in the humdrum of today's grades, "getting ahead," "keeping up with the Joneses," and so on. However, even with a subjective form of judging, it seems that a certain amount of logic would be involved. For instance, is it not logical that those who had sincerely contributed the most in leadership be honored by Alpha Kappa Gamma?

This reader would like to know why some of the most sincere and the most contributing leaders were not honored by Alpha Kappa Gamma. A good seven people have, for three years, worked in the foreground and in the background, with unselfish effort and achievement. In some instances, the activities which these individuals worked so hard to support would have been something less, if it were not for their concern and leadership. There certainly would be room for more than twenty-six, since the quota for membership is much higher than the number honored.

In summation, this reader has come to the conclusion that, in addition to many other situations in life, membership in Alpha Kappa Gamma has assumed a slight tone of depending on who one knows, what one is "in," and of what one is heard.

The disappointment in Alpha Kappa Gamma is great.

Sincerely,

Nevis Born

AKG Society Receives Query On 'Recognition'

Is there any place where you will be judged by "what you are" and not "who you are"? I came to Longwood College hoping to find such a place, but it seems that when I leave I will still be searching.

How much does a person have to do before that person receives the recognition he deserves? Does it take a National organization to point out things our campus organizations fail to see? Maybe one day Alpha Kappa Gamma will stop listening and start looking for themselves. That will be the day Alpha Kappa Gamma becomes the honor society that represents the true leaders at Longwood College.

Sincerely,
Ginny Morton

AKG Receives Much Criticism From Student

When I first came to Longwood I was confronted with the so-called leaders of this school. As time passed, I learned that these "leaders" were periodically recognized in the tapping service of Alpha Kappa Gamma. Now I would like to pose a question to this organization: What are the qualifications of a true leader? The dictionary says that one who leads or commands a group is considered to be a leader, but I believe that she is much more than this. The person who exhibits leadership gives freely of her time, to change or better something. In so doing, her influence and guidance are clearly shown. But there are other types of leaders — those who work behind the scenes — the quiet persons who influence others gradually. How much does one person have to do to be recognized as possessing the qualifications of leadership? I hope that Alpha Kappa Gamma will think carefully on these qualities and will constantly ask themselves, "Who is a true leader?"

Sincerely,
Cam Beckwith

The girls in our dormitory at Arizona State University were buzzing with plans for a Halloween costume party. My roommate, though, was uncertain whether to attend. She is blind, and her seeing-eye dog would have to accompany her, which she thought might prove awkward. She decided to go, however, and when the party rolled around, everything went splendidly. My roommate took first prize-dressed as a fire hydrant.

PAUL GOODMAN

Paul Goodman Column No. Four — For publication week of November 14 to 20, or after.

College students keep asking me if they should quit. My usual answer has been: Life is not a bed of roses in or out of college; stay if there's even a single subject you are really interested in and feel you are learning — unless, of course, the routine is bad for your health or you have to do something dishonorable, like faking to get by.

But I now think this is the wrong approach. The right answer is that I given to the young by Prince Kropotkin half a century ago. Ask yourself what you want to do with these beautiful and useful subjects that are presumably available in the university, and see to it that you set what you need.

If you are in engineering, ask what kind of community you want to make housing, roads, or machinery for; what kind of housing etc. such a community needs; and how best to prepare yourself from the task. The inquiry will certainly lead you into sociological questions, economics and politics, and perhaps even into political actions to make your future possible. (Maybe, at present, we need fewer roads, and your task is to prevent them from being built.)

If you are going for medicine, think about health as well as pathology, and the superiority of preventive medicine to curative medicine. This will give meaning to biology, chemistry, and anatomy; it will certainly lead you into psychosomatics and social hygiene. Here again you may find yourself in troublesome action. And you may find that you are a maverick; for instance, you may begin to see the attraction of the arduous career of general family practice with house visits, during which you can forestall future chronic diseases, instead of the present rage for specialization and office visits, plus psychiatry when it is late in the game.

If you will study law, remember that it really deals with the making of a just society and defense against injustice in any society. This will soon bring you into problems of politics, history, and administration. It will make you a critic of legislation. You might even have some important questions to ask in rhetoric and English, when you realize that bureaucracies are trapped in their routine languages and rituals. Look into the admirable ball project at N. Y. U., manned by students, that has saved thousands of poor people from rotting in jail.

Those in the humanities and history know in their bones that, as Arnold put it, literature is the criticism of life, the touchstone we hold against the actuality; as Dewey put it, it is by appreciation that we judge the worth of what we're next. I doubt that the level of TV, the lies in the press, or the campaign speeches of politicians can stand up under the scrutiny of humanists. Also, the monuments of humanity in literature and the causes of history — perhaps especially the "lost causes" — give us other ways of being men than the roles and motives that seem possible in 1965.

In general, all university sciences and arts have theoretical and methodical parts that are remarkable for their beauty and ingenuity, and something is very wrong with college teaching if students do not come to delight in these things. But besides, especially students of physical science ought also to ask what applications of theory are desirable and worth looking at. (I am surprised that some of the contracted research in some of our universities is not being motivated by asking students, "We use high scientific technology that most of us do not understand, and these students must become the critics and interpreters for us of the political economy of science.")

Needless to say, students who stubbornly insist on getting what they need from the university courses, for better ends than getting a degree, license, and good salary, are likely to clash with the system they are in, with its syllabus and departmentalization and its academic isolation from reality. They will certainly clash with authoritarian control. But then they will have specific causes for anger and conflict. Instead of being passive, and unfulfilled, they will be aggressive and frustrated. This is better than simply quitting in disgust, and it is certainly better than empty griping.

Such a changed student attitude would bring the professors back to life. A professor would have to prove the relevance of his subject, and so find new relevance in it. He would have students with articulate questions, who are the easiest of teach, though often embarrassing to one's ignorance. But most important, in my opinion, is that society could again be irradiated with science and arts. As it is at present, with all our Knowledge Explosion and college-going, there is very little evidence that many people are taking thought.

Campus Action Reveals What's "In" And "Out"

By Phyllis Hummer

From a popular college magazine we learn what's "in" and "out" throughout the country, how college students are getting their "kicks" these days, just "What's Happening" . . .

Flicks are the newest thing around — pop, swinging and boring. Students at the University of Florida pile a car full of kids, bring beer, and watch the drive in horror films three times through. According to a recent poll taken among college pals, the best movie of 1965 is "Beach Blanket Bingo"; runners-up are "Goldfinger" and "Godzilla and the Thing." Harvard and Radcliffe students inhabit the Washington Street "flesh flicks" and "Grace C. Westerns" for their laughs. University of Washington filmmakers go for obscure Japanese films without subtitles. F. Feltz sits the kids, and the wild, Way-Out students all over the country are discussing Andy Warhol's eight-hour films of the Empire State Building, or two people kissing. These films are a new kind of boring, and not meant to be watched — only glanced at. Student film-makers are found everywhere. At Bryn Mawr College a group is filming a horror film, "The Quest for the Golden Hippopotamus" in the public John of the BMC library! Favorites in the art line are Wyeth and deKooning, the "good squaws," and Indiana and Rauschenberg.

Richmond Displays Bishop Art Exhibit

The artistic works of Miss Barbara Bishop, one of Longwood's art instructors, are now on display at the midtown gallery on West Broad Street in Richmond. The show, which began November 14 and will continue through December 11, includes work by Mrs. Joni Plenkowski of Blacksburg.

Miss Bishop said in describing her work, "I work towards an interpretation of nature - grass, trees, interior forms."

Her work in the show was done this summer while she was studying at the American center for students and artists in Paris. A 1960 graduate of Longwood, Miss Bishop did graduate work at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, and taught at Southern Seminary Junior College before joining the faculty this year.

Mr. Charles Dewitt is now responsible for administering all national examinations which are under the jurisdiction of the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey. Mr. Dewitt is keeping a log at the College Entrance Examination the National Teachers Examination, and the Graduate Record Examination.

Active Seniors Receive Honors From Who's Who

Because of their scholarship and leadership, twenty-six Longwood seniors have been selected for membership in Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges. The new members were announced in assembly Tuesday, November 16.

New members of this honorary organization are Teresa Albright, Bobbi Allen, Harriet Anderson, Linda Bassford, Kaye Catron, Ann Chappell, Judy Cundiff, Beverly Cultrill, Sally Fulton, Carol Gibson, Olivia Gibson, Janet Gormus Murray, Nan Gregory, Helena Hall, Linda Huffman, Sandra Jackson, Anne King, Fran Lipford, Jenny McCoy, Louise Merritt, Sally P. Pitting, Mary Kay Richardson, Mary Lea Shouder, Frances Stewart, Donna Weatherly, and Jean White.

There are three criteria for members of this organization: 1) the student's scholarship (at least a 2.50 on the four point system), 2) her participation and leadership in academic and extracurricular activities, and 3) her citizenship and service to the school and her promise of future usefulness.

A senior may be nominated by any senior member of ASG and by a nomination committee that consists of members of the administration and faculty department heads. A third committee, consisting of the President of the College, the Dean of the College, the Dean of Women, and the Registrar, then elects the members to Who's Who from the list of nominees.

German Meeting Features Movie, Slides Of Town

At their second meeting of the year, Deutsch Club Edelweiss showed slides of a German medieval town, Rottenburg, and a movie about Christmas in Germany. Also at their meeting November 18, the newly formed German Club discussed and ratified their constitution.

After discussing their participation in the upcoming trilingual Christmas program, the members of the organization were served refreshments.

Special guests at the meeting held in the Hiner Building were Miss Draper and Mrs. Silveira. Miss Shroer is the advisor to the club.

The College Entrance Examination will be given here three times this year: December 4, 1965, January 8, 1966, and May 7, 1966. The National Teachers Examination will be given here March 19, 1966.

Those wishing more information on these should contact Mr. Dewitt in Hiner Building.

Various Crazes Sweep Campuses Students Learn What's "In" and "Out"

schenberg, the "popsters." At art schools throughout the country everything is coming out in bright colors, with little "pop" and no "op" art. Sculpture is a campus favorite - at Pomona College three-fourths of the football players sculpt! The newest "object art" is dressing. Girls at Sarah Lawrence search local thrift shops for 50-cent bargains - black, beaded evening capes, ostrich-feathered collars, and moth-eaten fur are much in demand. Jeans (wheat, of course) are being worn everywhere and anywhere. Best sellers on campus this year, books "to read the night before an exam" are: The Spy Who Came in From the Cold, Candy, and All I See. Bennington sophisticates are reading "Batman."

It's anything goes in the music scene. Pomona plays Bach and Brahms in concerts three times a week, while Florida prefers the romantic twice weekly. Harvard and Radcliffe have a Russian Liturgical Choir while Bryn Mawr proudly possesses a German Whistling Group. Bennington and Wayne both have student jug bands. The N.Y.U.ers are still freestyle singing at Washington Square, and Bob Dylan is "in" everywhere. In pop music it's "What's Happening Baby?" The Rolling Stones, the Animals, Sonny and Cher, the Supremes, Sound of Music, Detroit, and L.A. bare loud, loud, loud of radios everywhere. Most colleges have several rock-'n'-roll groups which constantly "twist" on campus. The N.Y.U. Student Center has "noontime" - lunch hour rock-'n'-roll sessions with visiting disc jockeys; you pop out of class, wait for an hour, and continue to your next class. Sounds great! Students at San Fernando, working late in the radio studio, often take an hour break to go "mookeys" on the radio. Agnes Scott girls are digging hillbilly music - take their dates in donkey carts to Mountain City, where all join in dancing to the local fiddlers. The ultimate "pop" is laissez-faire entertainment - watching the "telly" in someone's apartment (off campus, of course). "Trivia" has got students going everywhere - a nonsense game designed to test your store of trivial info and drive you crazy in the process. "Faster than the speed of light" ... begins the famed institutes of that "Bumperman," which has become a favorite test for trivia everywhere. Coast to coast students are watching "Shindig!" and "Hottelbo." We hear San Jose is a crazy for "Looney Tunes!" Florida flips for "The Man From U.N.C.L.E.," and Iowa idolizes "The Fugitive." At Wayne State they stay up till five for the late show, no matter what's on.

The New York Times calls this the "Year of the Demonstration." Marching is a favorite pastime at Bryn Mawr College, where they march for peace equally in Viet Nam. Mississippi and Chester, Pa. One marcher was jailed in Mississippi and missed her graduation ... Oh, well. Wellesley students, concerned with the situation in Viet Nam, set up a series of Friday-night seminars on foreign policy. Campus protest sprang up everywhere as a result of the Berkeley crisis. Students at the Art Institute of Chicago decided to protest a clause in the budget which allotted more money to the museum than to the school - and did so by boycotting classes for two weeks. Bennington girls protested recently when the president made them get rid of their celocets!

When many campuses shake boards are the quickest means of transportation to the infirmary - they are outlawed on many campuses. The hearse said is alive all over the country - Harvard Crimson's columns advertised "Hearse wanted for date!" and no one was particularly surprised. Some N.Y.U. girls painted a hearse pink and drove it down to Daytona Beach! San Jose State students prefer old cars - brightly repainted by their owners. Foreign restaurants are "in" everywhere. They range from the Middle East, in Philadelphia, a favorite of Bryn Mawr girls, to the Basque restaurant that Pomona students love. Do-it-yourself foreign restaurants are becoming popular: San Jose cooks Mexican specialties, and three N.Y.U. roommates barbecue food on a hibachi grill in the backyard of their G. Village apartment. Even dorm dwellers are getting into the scene: Bryn Mawr students produce such delicacies as roasted chestnuts "a la hot plate." In their dormitories, Wellesley's Shakespeare Society, in keeping with the British atmosphere of its Tudor-style house, serves muffins and tea. At Radcliffe's Medieval Dinner, meat was served.

When a college allows off-campus housing for students the whole city may become their campus. At Wayne State, social life centers around the apartments - the only girls' dormitory is only half-filled. Many N.Y.U.ers live in Greenwich Village; many boys and some of the more adventurous girls have renovated old houses, from furnishing them creatively to putting in their own plumbing fixtures! At Washington State, located close to the Seattle harbor, some students have converted old houseboats into living quarters. Ah - Dorm life is so melancholy!

El Club Espanol Holds Meeting; Lipford Speaks

Wednesday, November 17, el Club Espanol held its first regular meeting of the year. Presided over by Ginny Hammond, the meeting included several addresses by members of the club. Singing a Spanish translation of Edelweiss, a group of girls from the Spanish Hall performed. Members of the group were Inez Colon, Bette Jones, Beth MacPherson, and Myra Proctor. Also, Fran Lipford spoke of the summer in Panama and Linda Schultz sang for the club members. After a group singing session, refreshments were served to those attending the meeting.

Officers for the Spanish Club this year are Ginny Hammond, president, Sarah Wolford, vice-president, Donna Schulz, secretary, Susan Trainer, treasurer, and Lynn Mallory, publicity chairman.

Freshman Class Elects Members Of Commission

Tuesday, November 9, the freshman class elected their representatives to the Freshman Commission. Since the commission is a part of the YWCA, the nominations were made by the Y-Cabinet and presented to the freshmen at their meeting on Tuesday.

Elected were Linda Brickhouse, Inez Colon, Jane Curie, Jane Erdman, Charlotte Evelyn Kathy Grizzard, Martha Kay Meg Pherson, Kathy Mapp, Alice Putney, Betty Thomason, Esther Williams, and Janet Seafey.

On Thursday, November 11, the Commission elected Jane Curie as their president. Other officers are Esther Williams, vice-president, Martha Kay secretary, and Kathy Grizzard treasurer.

Decorating the Christmas tree in the Rotunda and planning a program for the Christmas banquet are some of the activities of the Freshman Commission throughout the year.

Holyoke girls return from their weekend dates with a new set of expressions - the variety depending on which Ivy she tangled with this particular weekend. The surfing vocabulary invades the campus. Students at the University of Florida and at many western schools; for instance, students at Pomona say "wiped out" (done in). At campuses throughout the country you hear jazz expressions and snatches from rock-'n'-roll songs: "litty gritty" (core, or the quintessence), "wailing" (swinging), "Bopping around" (fooling around), "May the Bird of Paradise Fly Up Your Nose" ... Harvard and Radcliffe substitute nicknames for the card catalogue identifications - "Dumb to Tombs," "Bust to Bust."

Campus Sales

Rules governing sales on campuses have been established through the efforts of the Committee on Financial Aid and a Student Advisory Committee appointed by the Legislative Board. Dean Wilson has met with both groups and agreement was reached on the following regulations:

1. All organizations or individuals must fill out an application blank in the Dean of Women's office.
2. Individuals must have at least a cumulative average of C.
3. Individuals may have permission to sell.
4. Individuals may use their rooms for sales or displays until 7:30 p.m., Monday through Friday or anytime on Saturday. Approval has been received in person by the Dean of Women.
5. There must be no door-to-door soliciting without special permission from the Dean of Women, and no calling on the halls. Intercoms may be used at times approved by the Head Residents.
6. Space in the dormitory recreation room for displays and sales may be arranged through the Head Resident.
7. Approval for selling must be obtained annually from the Dean of Women. Applications may be filled out in the spring for summer and fall selling.

Members of the Student Committee are: Barbara Melton, Glenda Booth, Betty Jo Hammer, Marilyn Green, Eleanor Walms, and Carol Cleary White. Members of the Financial Aid Committee are Mr. Henry Bittinger, Chairman, Dr. Carolyn Weis, Dr. Elizabeth Johnson, Mr. H. G. Magnusson and Mr. Charles J. DeWitt.

Both committees will serve in an advisory capacity to Dean Wilson should any questions arise concerning the sales policy on campus.

Lane And Rubley Attend Council Of Education

Dr. Charles P. Lane and Mr. Earl A. Rubley of the History and Social Science Department will attend the National Council for Geographic Education in New York City on November 26 and 27.

In the head of the department here, Dr. Lane, is State Coordinator for the council in Virginia. At the meeting in New York, there will be discussions, and some of the activities will be held and some papers will be given.

Fulbright Scholarships

Mix Education, Travel

Perhaps the best way to study and travel is to become a Fulbright Scholar. Fulbright Scholars are recipients of U. S. Government scholarships, which are provided by the Fulbright-Hays Act. They are a part of the Department of State's educational and cultural exchange. Their purpose is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries through the "exchange of persons, knowledge, and skills."

Fulbright Requirements

There are four main requirements to be a Fulbright Scholar at the time of application: 2. A bachelor's degree, or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant; 3. A language proficiency in the language of the host country; and 4. Good health.

There are several types of grants available. There are full grants, Joint U. S.-Other Government grants and travel-only grants. Grants are normally for a period of one academic year abroad.

Countries Taking Part

Many countries participate under the different types of grants. Full grant countries include Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Luxembourg, Bolivia, Brazil, Ceylon, Chile, the Republic of China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, and the Dominican Republic.

Other Full Grant countries are Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, The Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Korea, Malaysia, Mexico, Nepal, The Netherlands, and New Zealand.

Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, The Philippines, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, The United Arab Republic, The United Kingdom, Uruguay, and Venezuela, complete the list of Full Grant countries.

Three countries, Poland, Rumania, and Yugoslavia, participate under the Joint U. S.-Other Government program.

Travel-only Grants apply to Austria, Brazil, Denmark

France, Germany, Iceland, Israel, Italy, The Netherlands, and Sweden.

For more information on Fulbright Scholarships, and when, where, and how to apply, see Dr. Maurice P. Sneller, of the History and Social Science Department. Dr. Sneller is the Fulbright Program Advisor for Longwood College, and all applications can be obtained from him, and must be turned in to him.

Language Clubs Plan Joint Party For Christmas

Tuesday, November 16, the officers of the German, French, and Spanish Clubs met in the foreign language library to discuss plans for their joint Christmas party.

At the party, which is to be held December 16 in Cox Rec, each club will present one part of the program. Lucila Koppay, acting as chairman of the project, said, "It will be a completely international affair." All are invited to come to the party, but all attending will bring one small gift to be exchanged that evening.

Committees will be set up consisting of representatives from each of the three language clubs. Advisors to the project are Miss Shroer and Miss VanHulse.

AKG Taps Thirteen In Annual Ceremony

Last week, Alpha Kappa Gamma, honorary leadership fraternity, tapped thirteen students into its membership during its fall assembly program.

Theresa Albright is an English and Spanish major from Richmond. She is the senior representative to Legislative Board and is President of Kappa Delta Pi. Last year, Theresa was a chairman of Major-Minor Elections and was President of the Newman Club.

Ann Chappell, from Martinsville, is a science and biology major. She is vice-president of Alpha Gamma Delta social society. She is a member of Lambda Chi and was the senior representative to Legislative Board first block. Ann is also an active worker in class activities.

Karen Monger Ellis is an English and Elementary major from Portsmouth. She has been active in House Council since her freshman year and was treasurer last year. She is chairman of Alpha Gamma Delta social society. Karen has played an active part in campus activities.

Gerry Edwards, a transfer from Averett, is majoring in Health and Physical Education. This year, she was Chairman of major-minor elections. She is recording secretary of Alpha Gamma Delta social society.

Gerry takes part in many class and varsity sports and this year was a clown in Circus.

Sally Fulton, a Math and English major from Western Cave is President of Phi Mu social society. This year she is also vice-president of the senior class. Sally is a member of Alpha Psi Omega and Kappa Delta Pi.

Helena Hall is from Alexandria and is majoring in Health and Physical Education. She is a member of the Athletic Association Council. This year, she is president of Orchestra and also plays in many class and varsity activities. Last year, Helena was on May Court. She is an active participant in school activities.

Sandra Jackson is an elementary major from Charlottesville. She has maintained a high scholastic average since she has been here. Sandra is also President of Zeta Tau Alpha social society.

Aime King is from Disputanta and is majoring in biology. She is corresponding secretary of Phi Mu social society. She has done much work for the YWCA and is Vice-President of House Council this year.

Margaret "Pudd" Murdock, an art major, is from Richmond. She is a member of Kappa Delta social society. Pudd has done much work for the school and class, especially art work. She has been chairman of many activities.

Donna Weatherly is an English major from Norfolk. This year she is Co-Editor of the Colon and is Vice-President of House Council this year.

Three juniors were also tapped. Nancy Brown is from Richmond and is majoring in English.

Drama Alumnae Requests Grant For Cultural Aid

Betty Ann Atkinson, a 1964 alumnae of Longwood, was on campus recently to get recommendations for a new project she is starting. Miss Atkinson is attempting to get a grant from the government under President Johnson's new legislation for aid to cultural endeavors. She is hoping to receive $10,000 for a Repertoire Theatre she wishes to start.

While attending Longwood, Miss Atkinson was very active in the dramatic field. She was a member of Longwood Players of Alpha Psi Omega, as well as Drama Critic for The Rotunda, and twice being voted "Best Actress."

She is a former member of the Southern Actors Guild, and has participated at Drakes Branch, in summer theatre.

lish. She is president-elect of Legislative Board of which she is treasurer this year. Nancy is also a member of Alpha Sigma Tau social society.

Betsy Jo Hamner is from Richmond and is majoring in Elementary Education. She has been president of the Class of 1967 for two years. This year she was chosen to be Ringmaster for Circus. She is also a member of Sigma Kappa social society.

Tootsie Kay is a History and Social Science major from Colonial Heights. She is rush chairman for Sigma Kappa social society. She is this year's junior representative to Legislative Board. She has been active in House Council and last year was Dorm President.

Club Displays Handmade Goods From Crossmore

Do you like handwoven fabrics? If so, go to the Home Economics Department on Thursdays from 1-2 and see the display of place mats, towels, cloths, etc., woven by the students of the Crossmore School which is located in mountainous Avery County in Western North Carolina. Certain items will be sold and others may be ordered. Over the years Crossmore School has not only housed, fed, and educated hundreds of deprived children — but it has also developed a sustained program of direct and substantial self-aid to many individual adults and families of the surrounding country. The Crossmore School makes use of its native's resourcefulness to expand the limited local opportunities and passes the gains along to its students and the families in the vicinity.

The Home Economics Department cordially invites you to come and enjoy the display of handwoven articles from Crossmore.

Miss Longwood Gives Recital

"I started singing in grammar school under a music teacher from Longwood," says Linda Prichard. Miss Longwood of Miss Virginia Pearson held this summer in Roanoke, and first place winner of the pageant's talent competition.

Linda will give a Junior voice recital on Sunday, December 5, at 4:00 p.m. in the Small Auditorium. She will sing a cycle of Gypsy songs by Johannes Brahms, an Italian aria from La Boheme, a group of English songs, and an aria from the contemporary opera The Telephone by Menotti.

As a voice major Linda is becoming somewhat of a linguist. She must learn the standard rules for the pronunciation of different languages and apply them in singing foreign operettas and arias.

The schedule for recitals has been changed. From now on, the pool will be open at 10:00 p.m. Monday through Thursday and at 2:00 p.m. on Saturdays. Everyone is urged to take advantage of this opportunity.

The Language Arts Classes of Miss Kate G. Trent and Miss Bland recently visited some schools in the Richmond area. These included John B. Carry Elementary, Westover Elementary, Robert E. Lee, William Fox, and Patrick Henry.

LC Actresses; Technical Crews Start Rehearsing

With the close of As You Like It, the Longwood Players have already begun rehearsals for the seasons second play, The House of Bernard Alba, which will be presented Dec. 9, 10, and 11.

The House of Bernard Alba by Garcia Lorca is unusual in that its eighteen characters are women. Parts for the play were cast early in the year. Eight of the roles will be played by freshmen. They are Linda Long, Donna Barnes, Joanne Black, and Sarah Wooten. Other freshmen are Maribeth Nichols, Carol Porter, Cora Uhde, and Margaret Lewis.

Marian Mowbray, and Cheryl Rose are sophomore representatives. Juniors include Carolyn McAdoo, Pat Holmes, Shirley Timberlake, Millie Gwainey, and Courtney Fox. Senior Gibson is also a member of the cast.

Director Mr. David Wiley is busily working with the technical crews as well as the cast. Judy Hedrick is technical director. Filling the role as assistant director is Ellen Miller and as stage manager is Donna Westberry.

Crew chiefs are busily lining up crew members and starting their work. Heading the costume crew is Janice Jesse. Behind the light board as lights crew chief will be Karen Rader. Alice Byrd heading the house crew will be taking care of the box office and tickets. In charge of makeup will be Beverly Hoark. Ginny Morton as crew chief for scenery will put in many busy hours in Jarman's shop. Helena Mast and crew will be taking care of props. In a tiny room behind the balcony Karen Engdahl will be in charge of sound. Susie Holsclaw is handling publicity.

Makes plans now to attend The House of Bernard Alba.

Y. W. C. A. Re-evaluates Methods For Selecting Longwood's Madonna

The Y. W. C. A. cabinet has spent a great deal of time discussing and evaluating the student body's opinion concerning the Longwood tradition of electing a Madonna for the Christmas pageant. In past years there has been a general lack of interest which has shown up in the number of people taking part in the election. All students should participate in this election, thereby not making it a popularity contest.

In past years the girl chosen as the Madonna has been associated with the office of president of the Y.W.C.A. This has not been intentional and it is hoped that it is not a general assumption that the Y' president will win the title every year. In order to acquire a better representation of the student body's choice, the Y' cabinet has revised the election procedures for the Madonna. Each class will nominate candidates for the Madonna, and choose by secret ballot five girls from the senior class to vie for the Madonna title. From the four lists (Fr., Soph., Jr., and Sr.) of five nominees, a list of ten candidates will be composed according to those receiving the most votes. There will be two candidates from each class. The list of ten girls will be placed on a ballot and a general election will be held. The Y.W.C.A. sincerely hopes that this new system of electing Longwood's Madonna will be a better representation of the student body.

SEA Sponsors Travel South For Meeting

Mr. George P. Elliott, Instructor in Education, is going to the Southern Regional meeting of the Teachers of Education Professional Standards, on December 17 and 18. He was invited to attend the TEPS meeting by the VEA, because of his sponsorship of the SEA here on campus. The regional meeting is taking place in Raleigh, North Carolina, and includes all Southern States.

As SEA sponsor, Mr. Elliott is concerned with functions of the organization. A major one is the scholarship in Education presented yearly. This is the third annual scholarship given. It is presented to an upcoming senior of the SEA; and scholarship is named in honor of John P. Wynne, past head of the Education Department.

The scholarship is presented at the Senior Assembly each year. The recipient for this year was Norma Davis.

"POP" Reports Ratings On Variety Of Blouses

Blouses that are easy to care for are practical in the wardrobe of girls and women in all age groups.

Don't rely on a size marking. Choose a blouse that fits your figure. When you have it on and adjusted so that it is comfortable, consider the following points:

1. Does the collar set smoothly?
2. Is there enough fullness at the bust with no diagonal pull - wrinkles below the bust?
3. Is the arm hole smooth with the seam in upper arm hole parallel to center front and center back?
4. Do sleeves hang straight without drawing when the arm is raised or stretched?
5. Is the blouse smooth across the shoulders?
6. Do side seams hang straight without slanting to front or back?
7. Is the blouse long enough to stay put — about six inches below the waist?

Candidate's Conferences Mark Election Opening

by Linda Dyer

In the coming elections, there are many things which the students should keep in mind. First the minor elections are just as important as the major elections, particularly because the elected student will be a voting member of that particular organization. It is very important that the student body attends the conferences to find out where each candidate stands on specific issues.

One should look for qualities of leadership and stability, integrity and scholarship, personality, and a sense of responsibility. A student should vote for the candidate who she feels is most qualified and avoid being influenced by friendship or popularity. The only way to do this objectively is to attend the conferences and to vote in both the primary and general elections. The primary elections are to be held on Monday, December 13, and the general on Wednesday, December 15.

The following people are candidates in the minor elections. Legislative Board: For Vice Chairman are Sandy Byrum and Tootsie Kay; for Secretary are Eleanor Walnes, Alice Bland Collier, and Pam Spigle; and for Treasurer are Margaret Bridges, Kay Boykin, and Patsy Diehr. Judicial Board: For Vice Chairman are Gayle Derivishian, Becky White, Karen Walton, and Pat Finn; for Secretary are Nancy Britton, Alice Rennie, Kathy Stone, and Nancy Walnes. Athletic Association: For Vice President are Diane Davis, Deedie Holdren, and Connie Spradlin; for Secretary, Peggy Wilkins; and for Treasurer are Vannie Gunter and Carol Boythe. House Council: For Vice President are Bruce Flournoy and Mary Virginia Manson; Betty Copley for Secretary; and for Treasurer are Sharon Bannan and Susan Sturm. Y.W.C.A.: Vice President, Carol Rex; Secretary, Ella McDade; and Treasurer, Sandy Curry. Those running for Freshman Counselor are Jane Curle, Kathy Grizzard, Meg Pherson, and Janet Sofy. If any students have suggestions for changes in election procedures, submit these in writing to Gerry Edwards, 132 SC, chairman of the elections committee, or place them in the Student Government suggestion box in the smoker by Friday, December 10.

Astronomy Class Travels To UNC To Observatory

The members of Mrs. Jackson's astronomy class made their annual migration to the University of North Carolina observatory last Wednesday, December 1, to study the stars and planets. The class observed the planet Saturn, its rings, and four of its moons, the Pleiades constellation, and the Moon. In addition, the group listened to a lecture by Dr. Oswald, who also showed them lunar maps and discussed Sideral time.

The trip had several humorous highlights in that Mary Lee Shoulders and Barbara Ragland went wandering off and left the rest of the class waiting for over an hour. The trip had several glowing effects since there was no heat on the bus and to add a classic climax to the whole thing, the bus proceeded to back into a parked car when it arrived back at Longwood. Space travel does have its advantages!

Business Group Meets; Prepares Christmas Fest

Phi Beta Lambda, the business club at Longwood, will be having their annual Christmas party in Ruffner 218 on December 9. The club will make tray favors for the patients at Southside Community Hospital. These favors will consist of apples decorated in the form of Santa Claus. Phi Beta Lambda is also collecting food for a Christmas box to be given to some needy family in the Farmville area.

Longwood students rehearse for Lorca's "The House of Bernarda Alba" which opens on December 9. This will be the last play that Mr. David Wiley will direct before he leaves Longwood to accept a position at the University of Indiana.

Civil Service Announces Exam For Summer Jobs

A nationwide competitive examination for temporary summer employment in the Federal Government as an office assistant or a science assistant was announced Nov. 23 by the Civil Service Commission.

Applicants seeking summer employment in grades GS-1 through GS-4 (at annual salary ranges of $3,507 to $4,641) in such occupations as clerk, stenographer, typist, office machine operator, student assistant, engineering aid, physical science aid, biological aid, and mathematics aid should ask for a copy of Announcement No. 380.

Candidates for the examination should obtain a Civil Service Form 5000-A. This form is available at many post offices, at U. S. Civil Service Commission offices, and at Boards of U. S. Civil Service Examiners. The completed form should be mailed to the Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C. 20415, before January 3, 1966, to enable the Commission to take the 2½ hour written test which will be given in various cities on a Saturday in late January or early February of 1966.

The test, which is scheduled to be given only once, is designed to measure clerical skills, vocabulary, reading comprehension, abstract reasoning, and table and chart interpretation. Sample questions will be provided in advance.

All citizens will be given equal opportunity to compete in the nationwide examination. Those who pass the test will be permitted to file applications with as many as six Federal agencies or installations: three in the Washington area and three outside of Washington.

Throughout the Nation, the names of applicants who pass the test and send their notices of eligibility to Federal agencies along with their applications for employment will be entered on agency rosters in ranked categories determined by their test scores. For example, those who score 95 and above will be in the top group, those scoring 90 to 94 in the second group, and so on. Consideration will be given first to those in the highest category.

In the metropolitan Washington area, there will be a further who pass the test. In each test-score group, the names of those who live outside the District of Columbia, Virginia, and Maryland will be listed first, and will be given first consideration for available jobs. The purpose of this procedure in the Washington area is to give highly qualified people from all over the Nation the opportunity to gain the experience of working for a headquarters agency in Washington. The examination for Office and Science Assistant positions will not be used to fill the following positions:

- the so-called blue-collar jobs;
  - jobs in post offices, such as clerk-carrier, mail handlers, etc.;
  - candidates for postal summer jobs should apply to their local postmaster for the appropriate competitive examination;
  - specialized positions above the grade GS-4 level;
  - certain positions in the National Park Service and the Forest Service, such as Park Ranger, Forestry Technician, etc.
- Further information about Federal summer employment can be found in the Civil Service Commission's pamphlet No. 58, "Summer Vacation Jobs in Federal Agencies," which will be available early in December at most places where application forms are distributed.

Door Decorations

Each year during the Christmas season, Alpha Kappa Gamma sponsors a door decorating contest. The doors are judged on business, attractiveness, and artistic quality. There will be prizes for the best hall with a central theme and for the best religious and best commercial door in each dorm. The judging will be on Monday, December 13. Students may not spend over $1.50 on decorations, and may use no decoration that will tear or deface the doors. All gessoes must be fireproofed (see Mr. Henderson at Building and Grounds).

Winners of the contest will be announced at the Christmas banquet on Wednesday, December 15. Following the banquet, the faculty and administration will be touring the dormitories.

'Bernarda Alba' Opens In Jarman Thursday

The curtains in Jarman Auditorium will open tomorrow night on The House of Bernarda Alba, a powerfully dynamic tragedy by the Spanish playwright and poet, Federico Garcia Lorca. The three-act drama describes a Spanish house of mourning after the death of the only male in the house.

The House of Bernarda Alba is characterized by sexual frustration. Four single women see no prospect of leaving the house for years because of the lack of suitable husbands. The only suitable male, Pepe, is very young and is promised to marry the eldest daughter. Even though Pepe never appears on stage he is a most significant force in the drama. The major conflict involves his presence in Bernarda Alba's courtyard at nighttime.

Mr. David Wiley is directing the play with Dr. Patton Lockwood doing the light design. Mr. Wiley also designed the set. The set and the lighting will produce a highly influential tone which coincides with the meaning of the drama. They depict the tragic somber atmosphere which pervades throughout the play.

The all-female cast of seventeen Longwood Players has worked hard for over a month to present a polished performance. Linda Long will be playing the part of Bernarda; Carolyn Meadoo is cast as Maria Josefa; Pat Holmes as Angelina; Donna Barnes as Magdalena; and Shirley Timberlake as Amelia.

Matrio will be played by Marianne Mowbray; Lynn Gardner will play Adela; Carole Gibson, a maid; Mildred Gwaltney; Poncia; and Prudencia by Cheryl Rose.

Plan now to attend this moving performance. Student tickets are being distributed in the Smoker after meals; these have been paid for by your student activity fee. The House of Bernarda Alba will be presented on Dec. 9, 10, and 11.

First Reading Clinic Opens At Longwood

by Kay Young

This year for the first time Longwood College is operating a Reading Clinic. Students of Education 425, a course offered for the first time in remedial reading on the undergraduate level, work in the clinic with its director, Miss Beatrice Bland.

The purpose of the clinic is to work with children who have average or above average intelligence, but who for some reason have not learned to read. The Longwood clinic has two roles of major importance: it serves as a professional training center, and as a service center for schools in the neighboring counties. The clinic provides elementary education majors an opportunity to develop knowledge and techniques in working with children who have reading problems.

The role here is in training in the diagnosis of reading difficulties and in advising the student on opportunity for learning to read and conduct a remedial reading program.

The clinic serves as a service center; it offers a complete diagnostic reading work-up for selected children of elementary age. The clinic provides services to schools and parents by an individual remedial reading program.

This year the clinic serves fourteen boys and girls in grades 4-6 from Dillwyn Elementary School on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday from 3 until 4 o'clock on Wednesday and Thursday from 2 until 3 o'clock the clinic conducts reading instruction to fourteen boys and girls from Prince Edward Academy in the clinic with its director, Miss Beatrice Bland. This block the program is conducted during the last eight weeks of each semester. Longwood invited schools to send children to the clinic who they thought could profit from it.

At the end of the eight weeks the clinic will give a summary to each parent of the findings of the clinic and of recommendations for furthering the child's reading instruction. In some cases the clinic will ask that the child return for the second block, when the clinic will take in additional children. It is hoped that the clinic will be able to increase its group as more and more students take the course, Education 425.

Madrigals Give Annual Concert On December 15

The Madrigal Singers of Longwood College, under Mr. James McCombs, will present their annual Christmas Concert in the Student Lounge at 5 o'clock on Wednesday, December 15.

The program will consist of a variety of songs including traditional Christmas carols and songs sung in three languages: English, French, and Latin. Everyone is invited.

Academic Freedom Rainy Days Bug You? You Are Not Alone

by Phyllis Hammer

Across the land, from Ohio to North Carolina and from New Jersey to California, the real meaning of academic freedom is being debated. The debate is not confined to the campuses and to the AAUP BULLETIN.

The controversy surrounding the question has become a critical issue in the politics of several states and, indeed, the nation at large. The debate engages not only heretofore obscure professors but governors, senators, and ex-presidential candidates. Academic freedom is once again a national issue.

Freedom of speech on college and university campuses has become inescapably intertwined with the broader question of freedom to dissent in our society, and for many is linked to specific movements or grievances: the communist threat, civil rights, Vietnam and The Dominican Republic, Berkeley.

"In North Carolina, a 'speaker-ban' law was hurriedly passed through the state legislature in the closing hours of the 1963 session. This unique law prohibits 'any known member' of the Communist Party, or any other person who has invoked the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination in loyalty investigations, from speaking on state-supported college and university campuses."

The proponents of the law were motivated by diverse concerns, ranging from anger over civil rights demonstrations in the state capital participated in by some UNC faculty and students to general popular unrest over the 'liberal' teaching at the state university. One of the chief backers of the law, State Senator Thomas White, has candidly commented: 'I don't believe there's a Communist . . . over there (Chapel Hill), but there might as well be as long as the people think there is. They need to reassure people along this line.'

A special commission appointed by Democratic Governor Dan Moore has held public hearings and is now considering proposals to modify or repeal the law; its recommendations are due very soon. The Southern Association of Schools and Colleges has hinted at withdrawing accreditation unless control is returned to the trustees.

It should be noted that such a law has been under consideration in the state legislatures in at least ten other states: Alabama, California, Florida, Georgia, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Virginia, Wisconsin, and Maryland.

The heavy hand of such a law (or ruling to the same effect) is felt in its administration. Narrow minded college and university administrators, worried about maintaining good relations with state legislatures, can virtually control the flow of speakers from the outside.

This danger is illustrated by Ohio State's 'bag rule' and modifications thereof, which in effect denied access to the campus to any speaker not acceptable to the conservative administration. A kind of administrative tyranny has prevailed under which the President of Ohio State, Novice Fawcett, bans from campus anyone distasteful to a faction of the trustees led by former US Senator John W. Bricker.

However, a student protest movement led by the Free Speech Front and Student for Liberal Action appears to have been successful this year. In August, the trustees voted a rule change which restated authority to invite speakers in recognized student groups and faculty advisers, with no limitation on who may speak. A rebuttal can be prescribed by the faculty council.

But the years of struggle at UNC and Ohio State have taken their toll in loss of faculty, both incumbent and prospective. The sense of alienation caused by an atmosphere that stifles freedom is currently portrayed by Professor Eric Solomon, formerly of Ohio State, in THE ATLANTIC, November, 1965. Some three hundred faculty members at the University of North Carolina have signed a document saying they will be impelled to seek ports elsewhere if accreditation is lost.

The most heartening recent development is the failure of the Republican candidate for governor in New Jersey, State Senator Wayne Dutton, to defeat Governor Richard J. Hughes in the November 2nd election.

Dutton's main issue was his attack on Hughes for failure to defend the dignity of a Viet Cong sympathizer on the faculty of the state university (Rutgers). Governor Hughes made it clear that he disagreed strongly with the views of Professor George, but that he also believed in freedom of speech and a university free of political interference.

Just recently a subcommittee of the Senate proposed itself into the controversy on academic freedom. The Senate Internal Security subcommittee staff, by direction of Democratic Senator Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut, published a report on October 20th designed to show that the Vietnam protest movement had been taken over by 'Communist and extremist elements.'

Professors at several colleges and universities were unfavorably identified with teach-ins. The report contained much misleading and false information, especially in regard to the University of Colorado. (See The New York Times, October 29th, 1965). Senator Dodd expressed regret in a letter to the president of the university, but presumed to add: 'I do feel that there is a situation on your campus which calls for action. The report has indicated a Communist influence at Colorado.'

What is at stake in these battles is the raison d'être of colleges and universities, what Dean David Truman of Columbia College has called 'an embarrassed intensity about matters of the intellect, a hierarchy of respect . . . for competence and imagination, an acceptance to the fragile values of civilization.'

To assert these 'fragile values' is not to deny the obligation of the colleges and universities in this country to provide responsible leadership. Rather, it is to reaffirm this obligation. The soap box is not and must not be a substitute for the classroom. But the campuses of the nation must constantly wage against the misguided search for a static security. As Justice Douglas once said: 'The fact that security can only be achieved through constant change . . . There is only an illusion of safety in a Maginot Line. Social forces can sweep around a fixed position and make it untenable.'

Some ideas do have durability however. The Framers of the Constitution were not afraid for men to be free. Today we should be as confident as Jefferson was when he said his First Inaugural Address: 'If there be any among us who would wish to dissolve this Union or to change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.'

Fulbright Grant Brings Scholar From Germany

by Suzan Waltz

An interesting new addition to the Language Department is Miss Hanna Schiroer, who teaches German and French. Miss Schiroer herself is from Germany, specifically from Muehlheim on the Ruhr, in the industrial region of the Rhine. This is her first experience teaching at an American school.

Miss Schiroer studied at the University of Bonn for six years and then did the equivalent of student teaching for two years. In Germany, the system of degrees like those used here is different. She has the title of Studien Assessorin in Germany.

She is in the United States teaching under a Fulbright Grant for one year. She says, "It is a very great experience. I can see many similarities and differences. You can get so close to people here, especially by working with them. A major difference I have noticed between the students of the two countries is that here relations between professors and students are much more natural."

The theatre, concerts, and museums are special favours. Miss Schiroer. She is also interested in politics and present day problems. When asked about the United States, Miss Schiroer readily replied, "I like it, and have been doing a lot of traveling. I enjoy it very much, especially meeting people and learning their attitudes."

Already in her travels, she has visited New York, and hopes to see the South over Christmas vacation. Next on her travel list would like to travel to the West Coast, but, she admits, "It is really impossible to see a whole country in a year."

Seniors Return With Memories Of Good Times

by Suzan Waltz

Student teachers returned from first block with a flush of stories and happenings and many memories. The Redemptorists asked a few to tell some of their more humorous experiences, and also to reveal any advice they have picked up along the way for those just preparing to go. The experiences are some of the following:

Brenda Donovan, who taught second grade in Danville, tells that one of her students told his parents that his very teacher "just sits in the back of the room and tells the other teacher what she's doing wrong." Brenda's advice is: "It's not as bad as you think. Everyone is very helpful, so you just can't go wrong."

E. C. Glase in Lyneburg had Jan Dunbar, a student teacher for World History and Geography. She remembers one day when she called the roll and the entire class answered "here" in unison. A nother time, when watching a movie, one boy kept complaining that he couldn't see the film. She said, "Of course you can." But, one week later, he had very thick new glasses. The advice Jan offers is to "be prepared to understand that you don't know too much. I had to work each night to keep up. And, don't be panicky."

Sydney Phelps recalls that, "They called me 'Miss Belle' for six weeks." She taught the first grade in Danville. She adds, "Don't worry, it's really fun. There is really nothing to worry about. It's very interesting, too, more than school."

"So many funny things happen," says Barbara Garrison who taught English in Colonial Heights. One day she gave a quiz and one boy kept trying to tell her something. Someone finally said that what he wanted to tell her was that the quiz key was clearly in his view. When she graded his paper, he'd made a 75, so "evidently he didn't use it." Another difficulty is learning to call your friends "Miss" and "So-and-So" in school, and if you student teach in smaller towns, you're always running into your old students, say, shopping for something. I answered the door one day in out-of-the- (Continued from page 4)

PAUL GOODMAN

Let me quote some scattered sentences from an article entitled The University: "For youth, there is no future in the comfortable attitude that consists in a continuity in the basic options, varied merely with some consoling modifications having to do with the least real or most scandalous abuses of the system. The young want a profound structural change that offers the possibility of moral justification. At present there is the deepest gap between the young and the adults that we have known in history. There is not only the usual psychological hostility between generations, but the young regard themselves as total neonates, the old as the symbol of bankruptcy. We have had an era of national agrandizement, the 'apoteosis' of spiritual grandeur contained in institutions regarded as basically perfect. The lack of history implied in such an attitude gives its defenders moral impunity: in a certain sense, they are no longer responsible agents. It is the young which have been first aware of the global immobility concealed in it."

These remarks do not happen to be about Berkeley students and the Great Society, but about the recent student protests in Spain. The Marxist author, Enrique Tierno Galvan, goes on to explain that the crisis is the unfeasibility of Franco's feudal capitalism and the clamoring of youth for the opportunities of "neo-capitalism." But I doubt that this is the essence, for let me describe a movie I saw recently:

'Witty' Grieving About Life

A young fellow goes to the University in order to avoid being drafted. He chooses his major at random, but when it comes to writing his senior thesis he cannot perform and is flunked out. He is immediately called up for induction. He spends his last day of freedom quarreling with the woman with whom he has been living, picking a pointless fist-fight and getting knocked down, pursuing a chance sexual opportunity for a kick, engaging in "witty" grieving about life with a friend.

The movie is Jerzy Skolowski's No Identification Marks and is about the University of Warsaw. Yet apart from Polish faces, there is not a detail of gesture, incident, idea, motivation or lack of motivation that I could not identically replicate in New York City. Evidently the disaffection of these young people has to do with issues more basic and universal than the ideological, economic, and institutional difference, Free Enterprise, Communism, Feudal Capitalism, or whatever, that loom so large or the steamed and adult commentators of the United States, Spain, or Poland.

Particular Slogans Differ

Of course, the particular slogans of protest depend on each nation's political problems and traditions. For example, our marches against fallout or the Vietnam war do not occur behind the Iron Curtain, where "peace" is strictly a government monopoly; but young Communists demonstrate madly by poetry readings and riotous May festivals, whereas we cushion free speech by swamping it and we regularize dissent music by commercial competition. (Censorship implies that ideas and feelings have political power, not like with us.)

Nevertheless, as always, it is the style and the moral attitude that reveal the underlying truth; this is one identical protest of the youth in the developed countries. The style is unkempt; the morality is existential authenticity. The protest is a sudden reaction to creeping anomie and the drift to 1984, whether fascist, State socialist, or democracy-by-consent.

The uniform message is that the system of the previous generation has become irrelevant to the radically new conditions of modern life. The adults have not confronted the fact that warring major power-structures are too dangerous to tolerate, and that national boundaries are obsolete in the One World. They do not know a human use for high scientific technology. They cannot cope with urbanization, but let it drift like a glacier turning into an avalanche. Their "basically perfect" systems do not allow another generation to grow up with real choices. Since this bankruptcy of ideas is everywhere the same, the student protest is really everywhere the same.

ABOUT: THE PSYCHOLOGY OF GIVING

What makes some gifts so successful — while others, perhaps much more expensive, get a reception that's merely polite? Often the difference is simply the knowledge of a little psychology. Do give a present that won't cause anxiety; a fragile knife-knack is the wrong gift for a woman with children. Don't give cash; it's like telling the recipient that you think he needs money. Do put flattery into your gifts: the right cologne or toilet water, for example, flatters a woman's femininity. And do learn how to listen for hints — there's more of a knack to it than you may realize! Thought-provoking tips that are sure to be well-received. (#139)

New Building On LC Campus Honor Former Staff Members

Longwood College plans to name two major campus buildings, now under construction, for a recent president and former faculty member.

A new dormitory designed to house 209 girls and head resident will be named in honor of Miss Florence H. Stubbs who was a member of the Longwood faculty for 37 years.

The new student activities building, on which construction began last summer, will be named in honor of Dr. F. G. Lankford, Jr., who resigned this year after serving 10 years as president of the college. Dr. and Mrs. Lankford now live in Charlottesville where he is a member of the faculty of the University of Virginia.

Action to honor Dr. Lankford and Miss Stubbs in this fashion was taken by the board of visitors at a quarterly meeting held in November.

A popular teacher of sociology at Longwood prior to her retirement in 1954, Miss Stubbs founded the Longwood chapter of AKG and later served as adviser to our chapter of this national fraternity for leadership.

As a resident of Farmville since her retirement, Miss Stubbs continues to serve as adviser to Kappa Delta social sorority. She is a charter member of the Virginia Social Science Association and the Southern Sociological Society, and she is credited with originating plans for the first observance of Founders Day at Longwood.

During his 10-year tenure as sixth president of Longwood, Dr. Lankford directed the college during a period of growth and development that saw the student body increase from 780 in 1955 to a current enrollment of 1461 students. The faculty increased from 55 to 98 members during this period.

Under Dr. Lankford's leadership, academic standards were raised, and more modern equipment and techniques were introduced into the classrooms. In recent years 40 percent of the faculty have been holders of Ph.D. degrees, an increase in professional rank that has added to the college's effectiveness and prestige.

In the Lankford era, the physical plant expansion included three new dormitories, doubling the size of the library, a conversion of the old training school building into modern classrooms, a home management house, and a new gymnasium, plus extensive renovation in the main building to provide larger dining room space and additional classrooms. A fine arts building and additional dormitories are assured as a result of his foresight and vigor our efforts to meet future needs.

One of his most significant contributions to Longwood was the securing of a special board of visitors as the state's governing body with whom the president would be closely associated in administering the college.

Scheduled for completion in June of 1966, and in plenty of time for use in September, the four-story dormitory of 54,468 sq. ft. is being erected on the southeast corner of Madison and Ely Streets at a cost of $714,800, including both building and fixed equipment by Motley Construction Co., Inc. Thompson and Payne, of Roanoke, have served as architects and engineers in planning the building.

The student activities building, consisting of two floors totaling 34,685 sq. ft., is being built on the southwest corner of Madison and Pine Streets at a cost of $704,468, including both building and fixed equipment by Andrews, Large and Whilden, Inc. of Farmville. Scheduled for completion in February of 1967, the building will provide space for the student government association, student publications, various student clubs, and other student activities.

Dramatics Club Offers Program On Garcia Lorca

Preceding the Longwood Players' production of The House of Bernard Alba a symposium on Garcia Lorca, its author, will be held tonight at 7:30 in the Student Lounge.

Mr. David Wiley, professor of speech and drama who is directing the play, will be the moderator. Three speakers will open the session. Dr. Patton Lockwood, professor of speech and drama at Longwood, will speak on the "Theatrical Aspects of Garcia Lorca." Speaking on "Symbolism in Lorca's Poetry" will be Mrs. Anita B. Ernout, a Spanish teacher at Longwood. Ouelia Koppany, who came here as a foreign exchange student last year and returned again this year, will talk on "Lorca's Life." After the talks an open forum will be held.

The conclusion of the symposium is preview performance of The House of Bernard Alba will be held. Members of the Central Virginia Arts Association are coming as special guests to the symposium and will attend the preview.

Education Class Teaches Reading To Area Pupils

cludes Bole's Reading Inventory, Bond's Developmental Reading Test, Dolch's Basic Sight Word Test, Gray's Oral Reading Test, and McCullough's Word Analysis Test.

The most exciting thing about the clinic is the use of Dr. Rose Sabaroff's linguistic reader. Dr. Sabaroff, of Harvard University, developed this reader, and asked ten areas in the United States to use it on an experimental basis this year. Longwood is one of the ten areas. The areas include California, Georgia, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Texas, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Virginia. The situation here at Longwood is the first and only experiment in the United States where the technique is used in a remedial reading situation. Under this plan the child is taught to think the word, say the word through the context provided, and then to write the word. The child uses all the basic facilities of visual discrimination, auditory discrimination, association, substitution, and kinesthetic.

There are six seniors who did their student teaching first block and who are now engaged in this class, Education 425, and the Reading Clinic work. These include Suzanne Bowles, Norma Davis, Helen Grigsby, (Mrs.) Sandra Mays, Judy Moore, and Jean White. Dr. Janet Blinger, Mrs. Helen Liles Page, and Miss Kate Treat form a committee of assistants for the clinic. Mrs. Wecker assists the clinic in administering individual tests.

Miss Bland is a 1959 graduate of Longwood College. She obtained her Masters from the Teachers' College of Columbia University in New York. She is now a candidate for her doctorate in Language Arts from the University of Virginia where she has studied under Dr. Ullin Leavell. Miss Bland has worked previously in the reading clinic at Columbia State under Dr. Marian Jennings. For the past eight years she has served as Elementary Supervisor in Henrico County with the special assignment of remedial reading for the county.

The concept for this clinic, which has just gotten underway here at Longwood, was designed by Dr. Rose F. Spicola who is presently on leave of absence for one year.

Active Senior Has True Spirit Of LC

Helena Hall, a smiling senior, physical education major from Alexandria, is active in many phases of student life at Longwood. For this reason, she has been chosen for this week's Sports Spotlight.

Helena has been a member of the varsity hockey team for two years. She has also been active in class sports, including participation in the class swimming meet her junior year.

Helena has a particular interest in modern dance and she has been a member of Orchestria since her freshman year. This year Helena is president of Orchestria. She has also attended several modern dance master classes, including the one held by Jose Limon in Richmond last year.

To round out her interests in sports, Helena is a member of the A. A. Council.

Last year Helena was an usherette in Circus. She was also a representative to the May Court last year.

Helena was recently tapped into AKG. She has also been named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

By enthusiastic participation in all facets of school life at Longwood, Helena has shown herself to be a possessor of the "true spirit" of Longwood.

Canham Speaks To LC On Self - Government

The Student Lounge was filled to capacity Nov. 29 when Erwin D. Canham, Editor-in-Chief of the "Christian Science Monitor," discussed the topic "Who is winning the World-Wide Struggle for the Minds of Men?" Mr. Canham began this discussion with another question, "Does it matter?"

Canham feels that national self-government, the idea of securing nationalism by rebellion, federalism, the improvement of the eternal lot of poverty and disease by the application of new knowledge, the acceptance of the goals of universal education and communication, and the acceptance of popular culture are the principles now sweeping the world. He stated that although this is a "triumph of an idea in which we have our share" it is a disillusion to think that the US alone is advancing these ideas. He stated that these ideas are free to anyone who wishes them and that other countries can copy our approach to these basic ideas.

Mr. Canham further stressed that as a powerful and affluent nation "the US should stop worrying about popularity and gratitude." He believes that these terms contradict each other since it is not possible to be powerful as well as popular. He went on to explain that "ours is a unique and difficult role" because we are in a paradoxical position having much power which we aren't able to use. As a result of this he feels that we have reached a "stalemate of terror" and have a "mushroom cloud hanging over our heads." Therefore our economic, moral, and ideal tools must be used more than our military tools.

Canham feels that we should make our own life have more quality and that "What we are and not what we say will speak for us." He further stated that the revolution of raising expectations which he mentioned previously are an American style triumph even though we are not completely responsible for these. He concluded expressing the idea that we should be grateful that the world is not dominated by the US because we live where "the adventure of the human race was never more challenging."

The Round Robin Tournament in volleyball began on Monday, November 29 with approximately 350 participants. Games are now being held each week Monday through Thursday at 6:45 and a play-off to determine the winner of the Round Robin Tournament.

Following the tournament one team will be selected for each class by all girls with eight 10:00 in each gym.

Six volleyball leagues have been formed with seven teams in each league. Each league will have one winner.

These six top teams will have practices. These four class teams will play each other for the ten points toward the color cup.

The volleyball managers this year are Bess Mann and Patty Duke.

Lawson Speaks To 'Y'

Dr. Doug Lawson, dean of Randolph-Macon College, is becoming a familiar face on Longwood's campus as a popular speaker.

He has been a guest of the YWCA on many previous occasions, the last being a critique on the Feminine Mystique. Many students heard Dr. Lawson as he participated in a panel discussion at the Wesley Center concerning birth control.

Dr. Lawson was born in Newport News, Virginia, and attended Warwick High School where he was president of the student body. In 1957 he received his B.A. degree. In 1960 he received his B.D. degree Magna cum honorary fraternities. Dr. Lawson is an ordained Elder in the Methodist Church and has served as a minister in Hampton, Virginia, and Madison, New Jersey. In 1963 Dr. Lawson was appointed the first full time Chaplain of Randolph-Macon. In 1964 he took the position of Dean of Men and also served as Professor of History and Speech.

Laude from Drew University. From Duke University Dr. Lawson earned his Ph.D. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Pi Gamma Mu and Omicron Delta

Dr. Lawson was here December 6-7 when he led discussions on "The Masculine Mystique."

Students Choose Hall To Reign At May Day

by Noel Byrd

Helena Hall, a senior from Alexandria, Virginia, will reign as May Queen this year. The Maid of Honor is Marlene Armour, a senior from Hampton, Virginia.

The May Court consists of representatives from all of the classes. The Seniors are: Judy Onuf from Roanoke, Virginia; Connie Perkins from Norfolk, Virginia; Mary Kay Richeson from Germany; and Jane Brown

The only Freshman on the Court this year is Kathy Mapp from Richmond, Virginia.

This is the fourth year on the Court for Connie Perkins. On the Court in previous years has been Marlene Armour, Helena Hall, Jane Brown, Ann Casteen, Ginny Daughtry, Betty Jo Hamner, and Mary Kay Richeson.

The May Queen, Helena Hall, is a Physical Education major. Her activities are many. She is President of Orchestra, a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma and the Athletic Association. Helena was recently elected to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. She has been very active in Intramurals. Helena's future plans are to get married in July and to teach in Alexandria.

Marlene Armour, the Maid of Honor, is a Business Education major. Marlene is Vice-President of Delta Zeta sorority, Secretary of Phi Beta Lambda, and a member of the Student Education Association. Marlene plans to teach in Hampton, Virginia next year.

In a campus-wide election held just before Christmas vacation began, Mildred Gwainne, a junior English and Dramatic Art major, was elected to serve as May Day Chairman. Penny Good, a senior Business Education major, was elected as business manager.

Plans are now in the making as to the general theme of May Day and the program that will be performed. No committees have been selected at this date; however, Millie, would appreciate students informing her of their interest to serve on one of the committees.

Reading Course Increases Speed, Comprehension

The English Department wishes to announce that students may register for the half-semester Craig Reading speed and comprehension course for the second semester. The course may be taken at any two periods a week convenient to the student who registers on the card of either of the two Reading Improvement sections and takes TBA for the time. Students taking the course have averaged between 100 to 200 words a minute increase over their beginning rate, the highest gain being over 600. For more information, talk to Mr. Gresham.

Dr. Newman will attend the annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania January 11-12. The meeting will focus on the relevance of the college experience.

HELENA HALL, MAY QUEEN

New Drinking Rule Begins Trial Period

It was announced in the assembly yesterday that the Legislative Board of Student Government had passed a serious revision to the social rule concerning Longwood girls' drinking of alcoholic beverages at Hampden-Sydney. The meeting of the Board was called at 7:30 p.m. by Jenny McCoy on January 10 for the purpose of considering the drinking rules and to come to a final decision concerning them.

LC Professors Will Participate In Conference

The State Department of Education will sponsor a conference in Williamsburg, Virginia, on February 18 and 19. It is for all state teachers of history, government, and geography.

Dr. Charles F. Lane, Chairman of the Department of History and Social Sciences, will present a paper on "The Basic Structure of Geography as a Discipline." Mr. Harold K. Magnuson, Assistant Professor of Geography and History, and Mr. Earl A. Rubley, Assistant Professor of Geography, will discuss the high school geography project, dealing with course content improvement and development of geographic materials at the tenth grade level.

This project was originally sponsored by the Ford Foundation, but since has been sponsored by the Association of American Geographers, and is backed by the National Science Foundation. For the project, 10 or 12 teachers were selected and paid to experiment with methods of teaching geography. Currently, their findings and materials are being compiled to carry out plans for writing a high school geography text.

Other speakers at the meeting will be Dr. William Cartwright from Duke, and Dr. Dorothy McClure Fraser from Hunter College. They will talk on "The Impact and Expedition of Research and Development Projects for Instructional Programs in Social Studies."

- 1) A student may not drink under the following conditions:
  - a. Within the city limits of Farnville unless in the company of one or both parents or guardian
  - b. At any social function sponsored by Longwood College or any Longwood College organization.
- 2) Girls are expected to comply with the Virginia State law which forbids drinking while riding in a car.
- 3) A student may not have alcoholic beverages in her possession while on campus or within the city limits of Farnville.
- 4) In any case, her conduct, upon return, must be above question. If a student's sobriety is questioned at any time, or if any drinking rule is broken, an immediate investigation will be made, the matter will be dealt with severely, and her parents will be notified.

English Dept. Initiates Course In Set Design

This coming semester a new dramatic arts course will be offered; this is to be a course in scene design and is numbered Dramatic Art 302. This will be a lecture-laboratory course dealing with the concept of scene design, the practical application of basic principles to modern staging methods, the function of scene design in its relation to the play, and the visual contribution of design to the production as a whole. The course will include procedures and presentation techniques, theater building, analysis of equipment needs of educational producing groups. The prerequisites are Dramatic Art 101, 102; R 9 will meet for two periods a week for two credits.

Winter Graduation Bestows 61 Degrees

by Kay Young

Sixty-nine degrees will be awarded to deserving Longwood graduates on the afternoon of Sunday, January 30. Of the graduates, five will receive Master of Arts degrees in Education; the remaining degrees are 44 Bachelor of Science degrees, seven Bachelor of Arts, four Bachelor of Science in Business Education, and one Bachelor in Music Education. The graduation exercises will begin promptly at 3 o'clock in Jarman Auditorium.

Dr. A. Purrell Bailey, well-known Methodist minister in the state of Virginia, will be the speaker. Dr. Bailey is Superintendent of the Richmond district of the Methodist Church. Born in Accomac County, Dr. Bailey received his A. B. degree from Randolph-Macon College. He received his B. D. degree from Duke University and his Master of Theology from Union Theological Seminary. Dr. Bailey received an Honorary Doctorate of Divinity from Randolph-Macon College. Married and the father of four daughters, Dr. Bailey served as chaplain in the United States Army from 1944 until 1947. He has served in Methodist churches throughout the Methodist Conference.

Before becoming Superintendent of the Richmond District, he was pastor of Centenary Methodist Church in Richmond. Dr. Bailey is author of the syndicated "Daily Bread" and of the radio broadcast, "Daily Bread."

Dr. Elmer N. Hassell, pastor of the Farnville Methodist Church, will be the participating minister. Dr. Hassell has served Farnville and Longwood College for the past three years. Before coming to Farnville, he served in two other college communities: Pace Memorial Methodist Church, Richmond, and Trinity Methodist Church in Lexington.

Mr. James K. McCombs, Voice Professor at Longwood College, will sing.

A dinner for the graduating seniors and their guests will be held in the college dining hall at 1 o'clock on January 30.

The 61 graduates include: Mollie Johnson Allen, Lucy Anne Alvis, Evelyn Shaw Allen, Nancy Calhoun Barnes, Patsy Hutley Barr, Linda Nelle Bassford, Janice Lynette Branan, Alice Jones Byrd, Sara Peterson Carnes, Barbara Clevenger, Judith Marie Cox, Lucy Forrest Cralle, Mary Carlton Curling, Bette Gay Evans, Barbara Irene Gay Pass, Betty Josephine Flora, Vicki Sue Monk Gambill, Judy Roberts Garnett, Rachel Golding Gentry, Beverly Lois Goodes, Royce Rankin Harwood, Linda Louise Hewitt, Louise Flord Johnson, Celia Stanford Jones, Sybil Louise Elliott Keaton, Patricia Norman Killmon, Linda Luncford Leather-wood, Otis Harrison Lovelace, Jr.; Betty Carolyn Martin Mueller, Roy L. Miller, Barbara Fletcher Monrore, Betty Barnes Moss, Sydney Diane Phelps, Dorothy Daille Pritchard, Wilma Register Sharp, Bonnie Coleman Shumate, Mamie Harrell Sink, Susan Lynn Smith, Linda Carol Spinner, Joyce Ann Swope, Judith Linda Tate, Flora Neatour Townes, Suanne Bloxom Turnbull, and Dorothy Maher Ty-singer, who will all receive degrees in Bachelor of Science.

Glenda Dianne Bigger, Jacqueline Schmidt Davis, Karen Lee Diederich, Sally Ann Grayson, Lucy Heartwell Lee, Anne Purrell Smith, and Sandra Jean Spencer will receive Bachelor of Arts degrees.

Judy Anne Rice, Jacqueline Forrest Taylor, June Carolyn Williams, and Dorothy Reed Year will receive degrees in Bachelor of Science in Business Education.

Karen Templeton Gibson will receive the Bachelor's degree in Music Education.

Master of Arts in Education degrees will go to Ellen Hunter Thomasson, Charles Hunter, Betty Jo Sandus, Jean Leslie Andrywa, and Frances Houghton Moore.

Dr. Sprague To Speak Jan. 16

Dr. Rosemary Sprague, professor of English at Longwood College, will speak on "Robert Browning: A Twentieth Century Man," before the members of the Poetry Society of Virginia at 3 p.m. on Sunday, Jan. 16. The meeting will be held in the Empire Room of the Jefferson Hotel.

Dr. Sprague's biography of Browning was released in September, 1965, and is entitled "Forever in Joy." She is also the author of eight books for children. Dr. Sprague is also the author of the Crowell Poets Series.

House Council Urges Students To Use Caution

Ever feel like you'll never get across the street? This seems to be quite a general feeling among Longwood students when trying to cross High Street.

Well, finally there seems to be a solution. The town council along with Longwood's House Council are working together on a campaign to prevent the above feeling. It is asked of everyone to please use the crosswalks marked on High Street. In return, the city police are stopping cars which fail to yield the right of way to the pedestrians. A second offense is punishable by court for the drivers who fail to stop.

A campaign is being stressed for all people to obey the crosswalk signs and yield to pedestrian signs. Farnville citizens are just as concerned about this problem as Longwood students are, so the two must work together in order to achieve success.

As a plea from House Council, all Longwood students and faculty are asked to please do their part in this campaign and use the pedestrian crosswalks. Please to use these crosswalks whenever possible. There is nothing more precious than life!

McCraw Class

Sponsors Annual Pancake Supper

The McCraw Class of the Farnville Methodist Church will hold its annual pancake supper on Saturday, February 5 from 5:30 until 7:30 in the church social hall.

Longwood students and faculty are cordially invited to attend this supper.

The cost for "all you can eat" is $1.00 for adults and $.35 for children twelve and under.

Musical Beds

Along with the end of one semester and the beginning of another, come many headaches — exams, registration, etc. However, the biggest immediate problem is not academic in nature at all but concerns the problem of housing for seniors. And it is a problem that is growing needlessly out of proportion.

It all began last spring when we all drew numbers to sign up for rooms for this semester. It seems as though now the policy is that those seniors who were not to student teach during the first block were moved into the dormitories in September have first rights to the rooms they now occupy. This sounds fair and proper at first glance, but it is a fallacy in reasoning when one considers the matter further.

The result is that for the second semester, many seniors who student taught first block are being shuffled and shifted around the dorms as though they are mere checkers on the charts of housing.

It is certainly bad enough that these seniors had to be "thirds" in the rooms for the last half of this semester. Now they are being forced to move into another room for the first half of next semester and then will have to move again when the second block student teachers return in April.

In other words, the rooms are being reserved for those seniors who were fortunate enough to have been here in September. In some cases, their rooms in senior dormitories (if there still exists such a concept) are being assigned to freshmen who will live in the senior dorms until the student teachers return and will continue to live there until the end of the semester. In short, the wishes of the freshmen are being given preference over those needs of the seniors. This seems grossly unfair.

Would it not be much simpler to begin with a clean slate and have those seniors who student taught first block draw numbers again for room assignments in the same manner as the second block student teachers did last spring? It is only logical that the returning seniors should be the "thirds" in the rooms (since it was decided that the seniors would have to bear "the curse" this year).

The first block student teachers have paid the same amount for room and board and have spent just as much time here at Longwood as the seniors. Does this mean that they are being rewarded for their service? As it is now, they are being reduced to nothing more than victims of confusion, lack of insight, and poor planning.

Are You Cheating

Yourself?

When registration time rolls around, how do we determine which classes we wish to take? Do we conscientiously consider which courses will be of the most value to us in the future? A wise student chooses courses which will strengthen her major and prove profitable to her after graduation. She also takes courses which she as an individual finds challenging and interesting. One of the purposes of a college education is to develop a well-rounded, knowledge-seeking individual.

Too often girls at Longwood College are unduly influenced by irrelevant factors when they sign up for classes. Just because several of our friends are taking a class, doesn't mean that the class will be interesting for us. Do we avoid certain classes because of hearsay? Just because one student finds a certain professor hard, doesn't mean that everyone will have difficulty under him. The girl who tells us that a certain class requires entirely too much work may be an extremely lazy student herself. Think twice before using hearsay as a basis for choosing classes. How many of us avoid good classes just because of the time they are taught? A student really isn't that important, especially if you peal, and Saturday classes haven't killed anyone yet.

A college education is a privilege of which every girl at this school should take full advantage. We have come here to receive an education. If we do not, we can blame no one but ourselves. We have paid for this opportunity and if we fail to utilize it, we are only cheating ourselves. Begin now thinking carefully and maturely about the courses you wish to take second semester. Above all, remember not to cheat yourself at registration.

MAKE THESE NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS

Next year may well be a happier experience for you and your family if you ring out a few of your old ways you are dissatisfied with, and ring in some constructive changes. Be as objective as possible in dealing with fellow workers so you can judge their true worth. Try to criticize constructively and accept criticism graciously. Be realistic about your capabilities. Don't avoid issues — meet your problems head-on. Develop ways to increase the feeling of family togetherness.

Longwood Girls Make New Year Resolutions

by Janet Faires

With the new year always come resolutions. We look back on the old year and promise ourselves we will not make the same mistakes.

Leading Longwood this year in resolutions are the ambitious and naive — our freshman class. Out to set the college world on fire, their resolutions cover practically everything from studying to Hampden — Sydney. Approximately half of the freshmen came back from their vacations determined to change their major, thus solving their academic problems. One freshman girl was heard to remark she had resolved not to keep her lights on past 2:00 during second semester. Then there are the girls on second floor Ruffner who, from the signs they are displaying, have apparently decided to try to ban Hampden — Sydney for their year's project. The third floor of Tabb has resolved to yell "Plush" to prevent scarlet signals.

A majority of the sophomores have decided not to write their "match" friends after meeting them. It is rumored that at least one sophomore has resolved to stay away from fire alarms.

Juniors, on the whole, are thought to be after less sleep and more bridge during the new year. They also hope not to follow the seniors' shining example in having their ring dance.

The seniors, who after four years of seeing the campus world on fire, ended by burning a hole in their pocketbooks, apparently have resolved to pay their debt as their only resolution.

Of course there are some resolutions that should be made. The Green and Whites could resolve to win something even if it's just the award for the "Best Losers of the Year." Writers for the Rotunda could resolve to get their stories in on time.

Of course, all Longwood girls have resolved to kick in the crosswalks since so many of the townspeople have apparently decided to stop for them.

Many Longwood Ladies have resolved to wear their body which they got over Christmas to the fire drills since there are more of them than snow storms. Chl is very "secretly" rumored to have resolved to get their uniforms out of mothballs and walk again.

It is also rumored that many upperclassmen are considering pooling funds and buying wood stoves to heat their rooms as well as their water.

Now we have only to wonder how long any of these resolutions could possibly last. Can second floor Ruffner do without Hampden — Sydney? Can any freshman girl live off at five hours of sleep a night? Will there ever be a fire drill so girls having boots can wear them? Will the seniors succeed? Will the upperclassmen make it through the winter?

There are some people who understandably have a hard time keeping their resolutions, however. One male teacher made a new year's resolution to stop smoking. When two of his students found this out they satidically sat in front of him smoking during class.

Recent Pop Fad "Pierced Look" Not Really New

by Phyllis Hummer

Coebs with the new local look may think they're starting a new fad, but actually they're following a fashion that dates back into early history. Earliest records show that people first had their ears pierced as a cure for weak eyes. A more practical reason for ear-piercing was protection from theft: Sailors wore jewels in their ears to protect them from piracy. Pierced ears used to be the trademark of African virgins looking for husbands. European "grandes dames" who did not want to lose their family jewels, sported them upon their ears.

The Babylonians, Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans all practiced the art, as well as women in Golden Age Greece. Ear piercings were listed in Plato's will. During the Middle Ages, only peasants had their ears pierced, but with the coming of the Renaissance the nobility adopted the fashion.

With the introduction of costume jewelry and "fake" jewels, came the screw-on earrings. In this country, practically replaced the pierced earring — until recently. A couple years ago only a handful of girls had punctured lobes — now is more unusual to find a girl without "holey" ears. Jewelers are commenting that this fad is spreading like a virus, and their earring sales are at an all-time high.

The idea is outrageous to the parents of many a coed. Perish the thought of permanently scarred ear lobes!

Most doctors can perform the simple operation in a matter of minutes for a fee ranging from $5 to $25. (Yes, ear-piercing is minor surgery!) Many parents consent to such an operation only because they know that if the doctor does not do it, some girlfriend is ready and willing. The only necessary equipment is a needle, some ice (for numbing the ear lobe) and some thread to pull through the punctured lobe. Nowadays, earrings are immediately inserted. To avoid confusion, they are usually of gold or some gold

PAUL GOODMAN

Here are some notes I prepared for a philosophical symposium on "Freedom and Order: Focus on the University" (Conference at Western Reserve-Case Institute, in Cleveland). My position is classical anarchism.

Freedom and Order are not dialectical or polar, but are related as cause and consequence. Right order is the form of free functioning. The conflicts that arise in freedom usually produce creative solution. But imposed "order" is chaos, and administered "harmony" destroys function and produces inanition.

In our present educational practice, we observe the following destructive impositions: 1. School methods appropriate for children are extended to high school and college years and hinder maturation. 2. Restriction to schooling as the one institution for education and growing up results in miseducation for, probably, 80%, including most of the bright. 3. Academic methods and environment take the life out of subjects and activities that are not properly academic. 4. Imposed schedules and the extrinsic motivation of grading hinder learning, which is always a conscious process and often individual in time and style. Most schooling makes people stupid. 5. When teaching and learning are harnessed beforehand to extrinsic National goals and the drive to union cards and licenses, the result is sole-playing rather than task.

It is better, with all deliberate speed, to let the present university structures fall apart into their simpler communities and for their order to be reconstituted according to motivations of immediate teaching and learning and the intrinsic motivations of teachers and students. (This does not necessarily mean scattering the populations. A university city of many thousands has great advantages. It does mean radically decentralizing the administration.)

In educational (rather than school) policy, we ought: 1. To open a variety of ways of being educated. E.g. academic, apprentice, technical training administered by corporations, self-study, work in subsidized non-commercial real-cultural enterprises, collegiate experience for the non-verbal and even illiterate (as in the Danish Folk High Schools), etc. There should be public support of universal education, but only a small part of the money given to school administrators. 2. To open numerous opportunities for leaving and re-entry, to encourage trying out and maturation at one's own tempo.

3. In school policy teaching and learning is a complex ethical and psychological relation but it is sociologically quite simple, consisting of small face-to-face communities. Therefore, 1. Drop all administrative machinery of admissions, requirements, grading, etc. Restore these functions to teachers and students. The functions of administration are janitorial, book-keeping, and protecting the educational community in the general society. 2. Make the small communities entirely self-governing in both academic and social matters. 3. Let curriculum be determined by what teachers want to teach. By confrontation with free teachers, students will sooner find themselves and learn what is relevant or irrelevant to their own interests. 4. When a student finds a subject interesting to himself, let him demand that the teaching meet his present needs and prepare him for the uses that he wants to make of his studies in the future. Such demand by the student reinvigorates the teacher and makes his thought relevant to the present and future. 5. These two principles, of faculty judgement of importance and students demand for preparation for life, are sufficient to relate school and society. Society will then get the best use of its universities as providing earnest and intrinsically motivated professionals, experts, and scholars.

Our present educational abuses are due to the imperialism of extra-mural demands and of the School establishment that seeks to aggrandize itself. A result is the immense inflation of educational costs. I estimate the mark-up as 3 to 400%; it is expensive to try to cement parties that do not naturally cohere, and to pay for administration that is fundamentally irrelevant.

By its peculiar double-think, the School establishment will agree to most of the above propositions. (Indeed, they are the truisms of Lehrfreiheit and Lernfreiheit.) And nevertheless, the present practices will be maintained and become worse. The inevitable crises will be met by adding new levels of superstructure — e.g. Guidance or Honors courses — without changing any of the mistaken, but administratively profitable, premises.

Letters To Editor

As a Longwood freshman, I consider our loss of a tenderfoot in '62, looking back and recognition for our wish to have more of those privileges. Achievement to be most disappointed — namely the Seniors. But after rocking in the cradle of Longwood for three academic regalia, their 1:00 and a half years, how can we a.m. Saturday permission, and demand respect. Instead of being allowed to mature, we better dormitory with all beds firmly on the floor, just to mention paternalistic Longwood elders, better known as "those who are with this image of the ears."

Senior went the general respect! It is evident that the prestige of both the faculty and the un- of "the Senior" can disintegrate. Now as I enter to more. The only "honor" left the second semester of my am- to be now is that of owning our year, I wonder why I ever academic regalia. Frankie Wynne

The policy of THE ROTUNDA'S "Letter to the Editor" column is to print all signed letters submitted by either faculty or students. We encourage you to respond to any articles in the paper or to any issues on campus by sending us letters.

Tourney Ends Second Season; 350 Participate

by Karen Ruder

This past week saw the finish of the second year of the Round Robin tournament. Altogether it was the most successful tournament held. Approximately three hundred and fifty girls participated forming forty-two teams. A big hand goes to Bess Mann and Patty Dole, the volleyball managers who worked so hard and so long to make this the enjoyable success that it was. A thumbs also goes to Miss Mary A. Heintz, without whose cooperation and assistance things would never have worked.

Yesterday the play-off for the ten points towards the color cup was held. The team which won the most games won the points for their particular color.

In the Round Robin tournament itself, winners were announced in each of the five leagues. The winner in League A was the "Flores"; in League B, the "C"; in League C, there was a tie between Alpha Gamma Delta I and MAH; in League D, there was a tie between the Senior Sophistesses and the Seven Seekers; and League E was won by the Nitty Niners.

A hearty thank you is well deserved by all those who participated in the tournament and helped to make it such a success.

Lawson Shows Mystique Of Status - Seeking Male

by Jenny Gregory

Dr. Douglas A. Lawson, dean of men at Randolph Macon College in Ashland, gave three lectures to Longwood students concerning the "Masculine Mystique." He began his series of lectures by telling of the "Image of the Masculine Mystique." Next at a required assembly he presented to the students a talk entitled the "Problem of the Masculine Mystique." He concluded his lectures by giving the "Solutions of the Masculine Mystique."

Dr. Lawson's first two lectures dealt basically with the same ideas. He began his talk by re-examining some of his ideas he presented last spring in his lectures concerning the "Feminine Mystique." He said that a female has to become a person and an individual before she is able to become a woman, wife, or mother. He then proceeded to say that the main problem of the masculine mystique is the status-seeking male. He becomes so involved in trying to acquire the material things in life that he loses his own identity and independence and becomes a sort of puppet with society pulling the strings.

Dr. Lawson drew a tremendous crowd of interested students for his last lecture concerning the "Solutions of the Masculine Mystique." He restated the problem which is that of a man's false search for security. Then he gave four solutions. First of all he said to begin now to be honest with yourself as well as with others. Secondly, he said to be open to truth. Dr. Lawson commented that although this second solution was similar to the first, it was important enough to be in a class all its own. A willingness to change took a third position in the solutions. Last of all, Dr. Lawson believes that a man should learn to live insecurely and to be concerned about the important things in life such as that of poverty in other nations instead of being so concerned about material wealth.

After his last lecture, Dr. Larson stayed to answer questions presented by many interested students. From this overwhelming response of the student body it may be seen that Dr. Larson's talks were quite effective and made many people think a little more closely about the point he was trying to put across.

All students should see their faculty advisors between now and registration to work out a tentative schedule.

Jobs Overseas Require Little, Provide Much

GRAND DUCHY OF LUXEMBOURG — The American Student Information Service announces that there are still more than 20,000 summer jobs available in Europe to U. S. college students. The jobs are being filled on a first come, first served basis and the ASIS is granting a $250 travel grant to each of the first 5,000 applicants.

Some positions pay $400 a month with no previous experience or foreign language ability required. Room and board are often included. The most requested jobs are resort work, office work, life guarding, sales work, shipboard work, factory work, child care and camp counseling work, farm work and restaurant work. Interesting summer work not found in the U. S. is living as a guest of well-to-do European families in return for teaching their children English.

Job and travel grant applications and detailed job descriptions (location, wages, working hours, photographs, etc.) are available in a 36-page booklet which interested students may obtain by sending $2 (for the booklet, overseas handling and air mail postage) to Dept. IV, ASIS, 22 Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg.

Congratulations goes to the Varsity Swimming team and their coach Miss Mary A. Meintz for their first season. The team placed third in a four school meet and fourth in a six school meet. They certainly made an excellent showing for their first year and represented Longwood well.

Ripley Coaches Varsity Team For First Time

Recently, the Varsity Basketball team was chosen. They are Sharon Williams, Dianne Davis, Sandy Long, Connie Galloway, Elizabeth Parker, Sue Powell, Vannie Gunther, Linda Atkinson, Becky Bondurant, Martha John Blair, Jane Curle, Anna Petis, Lynne Rochal, Lisa Hammer, Pat Ingram, Glenny Padgett, and Linda McCulloch.

Coaching the varsity team is Miss Faye Ripley, a graduate of Longwood. The team has worked out a new defensive strategy: they start out using diamond zoning and then switch to man-to-man defense. According to the team members, this new technique is working out very well and keeps the basket well-protected.

This year's varsity basketball managers are Sharon Williams and Vannie Gunther. The elected team captains are Dianne Davis and Connie Galloway.

The team's first game is on February 10 with Lynchburg College.

alloy. The "do-it-yourself" method all too often results in infection, and holes that are out of line.

The girls argue that their holey lobes will save Dad money because earrings can no longer get lost. This rationalization is quickly forgotten as soon as she goes to the jeweler to purchase her first pair of earrings and gapes at the outrageous price tags. Pierced earrings are comfortable to wear, and can be worn even by girls with very short hair. But most important of all, pierced earrings are fun to collect. Fanciest are the dangling Gypsy or Victorian types, but most popular are the simple gold, pearl or jade buttons.

Spotlight Recognizes Senior Phyl Lasley

If you ever hear strange singing up and down second floor South, don't be too shocked; it's only the voice of Phyllis Lasley, chosen for this week's Senior Spotlight.

Phyllis, a native of Keswick, takes active part in numerous Athletic Association activities. This fall she was a proud recipient of a blue blazer. Phyllis is also a member of the Monogram Club and Orchestras. Among her other activities while at Longwood are varsity and class hockey, class volleyball and basketball, and membership on the A. A. Council.

Being what one may call an "outdoor girl," Phyllis is fond of almost any sports activity, one of which is horseback riding. Phyllis has other favorite pastimes of painting and eating chocolate.

In three weeks this vivacious Health and Physical Education major leaves Longwood to do her student teaching in Roanoke. Good luck, Phyllis!

BSU Sponsors Cheerful Cherub

Every exam period the Baptist Student Union sponsors a tradition at Longwood — the Cheerful Cherub tradition. The purpose of the cheerful cherub idea is to brighten the pre-exam week with a little friendship and fun. To participate is simple:

1. Put your name and room number on a small slip of paper and place it in the box designated for your dorm. At the same time draw from that box the name of another. You will be her Cheerful Cherub.

2. Each day, beginning Monday, Jan. 17, through Friday, Jan. 21, you will secretly leave a small gift for the person whose name you drew. In the past, bubble gum, rubber balls, candy, coloring books, and note tablets have been popular gift items. Some Cheerful Cherubs have gained renown for the poetry which they deliver along with their gifts!

3. On the last day, Friday, Jan. 21, you will reveal yourself as a Cheerful Cherub and deliver the last gift personally. Of course, your Cheerful Cherub will reveal herself to you too, and you and your Cherub will have made a new friend! What better way could we begin exam week?

Antioch College Frosh Dispense With Grades

YELLOW SPRINGS, OHIO — (I.P.) — Antioch College recently launched an experimental program for first-year students this year which deals with the problems of anonymity, generalization vs. specialization, and rigidity of curriculum. Each student is to receive a faculty preceptor, who will guide and advise the student so that he can properly pursue his academic tasks.

To meet the problem of specialization - generalization, Antioch will dispense with freshman general education courses. Instead the faculty of each major academic will present questions in the fields of the humanities, the social sciences, and the physical sciences.

The college has dispensed with grades to encourage freshmen to risk new or previously troublesome subjects; to enroll in a seminar with a "tough" professor; to participate in as many academic offerings and Community Government activities as time and talent permit.

The student and preceptor, who have been measuring his progress toward stated goals at least every two weeks, will decide at the end of the year what second-year work for which he is qualified.

LC Students React; Laud 'Bernada Alba'

by Ann Tweedy

The magnetic performance of the Longwood Players' portrayal of Lorea's powerful tragedy was highly believable and was met with appreciation by the audience.

Mr. David Wiley, director, who will be leaving Longwood after having served skillfully for ten years, should be extremely proud of his handwork on this play which is one of the most interesting to have ever been presented here.

Audience reaction to Carolyn McAdoo's chilling interpretation of the insane grandmother, Maria Josefa, was most receptive. Carolyn was able to achieve with excellence a combination of pathetic lunacy and warm humor.

There was close audience identification with all of the roles, but because of Adela's role the students may have felt most sympathetic with Lynn Gardner. With conviction Lynn transmitted to the audience desire, frustration, and fear of detection.

Millie Gwaltney as the housekeeper, Poncia, was a shimmering foil for Linda Long; as Bernada, Linda was a dictator-mother, a keeper of the classic whose man-like strength against emotional crises trembled, rose, and burst at each opportunity. Linda's powerful voice and her physical stature could not have been more perfect for the part of Bernada.

The polished performance, the fascinating set, lights, and colorful outdoor music gave a dynamic dimension to an already-interesting play. The interplay of light and patterned shadows seemed symbolic of the underlying themes.

Although it was not intended to be a comedy, The House had its moments of humor. There was such concrete identification that it was almost a relief to break the stark realism with nervous laughter. At such points as "referral to the house as being a 'nunnery,'" the students in the audience broke up. This was not out of disrespect, but rather out of compassion and sympathy for the plight of the Spanish daughters. When the sisters complain of not feeling well because of lack of male companionship, the courted Augustas, played by Pat Holmes, said that she felt fine. Pat was so human that, again, the audience found it almost necessary to laugh.

THE POINT IS, WE WERE THERE. Everyone from Ellen Miller, assistant director, to the very fine lighting crews and Dr. Lockwood, to costumes and props, and certainly to Mr. Wiley made it possible for us to experience Lorea's play not as just a viewing of a drama, but as a feeling for the characters and situation. The play compels. Lorea's tragedy has about it a timeless, ageless quality, a universality of truth, which the Longwood students could easily appreciate.

To Mr. Wiley, Dr. Lockwood, the cast and crew, we give sincere thanks for excellence.

English Society Takes Sixteen As Members

The annual fall initiation of Beore Eh Thorn, honorary English society at Longwood, was held on Tuesday, December 14, at 4:00 in the YWCA Lounge.

Sixteen girls were accepted into the society. Following the initiation ceremony, a tea was held for the new members.

Those who were initiated were Della Anderson, Diane Berger, Pat Dameron, Gerry Daniel, Joan Faulker, Mary Gompf, and Helen Grigsby.

Other new members include Derek Jenkins, Lucile Korman, Kay Moore, Linda Miller, Linda New, Betty Virginia Ryals, Diana Whitford, Mary Jo Wright, and Frances Wynne.

FROM THE BOARD

This year the Legislative Board of Student Government has abandoned its previous policy of reviewing every rule in the handbook. It was decided that the dropping of this policy would leave the Board free to indulge in more constructive activities, such as the establishment of an academic affairs committee, an effective speaker program, and the various NSA services. The Board has been very pleased with this arrangement.

There is, however, one major limitation of this system of student government. The Legislative Board must rely even more heavily upon individual students to bring matters to the attention of the class representatives. Since the representatives have no set schedule of rule evaluations to present to members of the class, or opinions, these representatives need the suggestions of classmates.

The Board members have begun work on several items brought before them this semester: a special committee has been established to evaluate our rules concerning Hampden-Sydney, the election system for class representatives has been changed and NSA information on travel within the United States and abroad is being gathered.

We can't help but feel, however, that there are many other services which the Board could perform. As our student body continues to grow, it is becoming more and more difficult for class representatives to contact a representative portion of their classmates. Although we try to get student opinions, we cannot be aware of the ideas of everyone. We urge each member of the student body to approach her class representative, or any member of the Legislative Board, if she has any suggestions on rule changes, government projects, or policies. The following is a list of Board members and their addresses:

Nancy Brown—S. C. 201
Tootsie Kay—S. C. 210
Pam Spigle—M. C. 140
Kay Boykin—N. C. 165
Nancy Spain—S. C. 209
Jean White—S. C. 318
Theresa Albright—W. 226
Goy Rice—S. C. 228
Lucy Flannigan—S. C. 211
Patsy Diehr—N. C. 383
Alice Collier—M. C. 339
Mary Jones—Tabb 220
Cam Thomas—R. 325
Betty Lu Weaver—Day Student

If you cannot "catch" one of us, or if you would like to present your idea to the entire Board, or if you're just plain interested in seeing what happens at a Legislative Board meeting, please feel free to attend our weekly meetings at 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday nights in the Student Government Room located in the Student Building. The agendas for these meetings are always posted one day in advance on the bulletin board beside Dean Wilson's office.

Elliot Attends Meeting On "The Career Teacher"

By Frankie Wynne

"Remaking the World of the Career Teacher" was the theme of the Regional Conferences of the National Commission on Teacher Education and Professional Standards attended by Mr. George Elliot, instructor of education, December 17-18 in Raleigh, N. C.

The ten southern states were represented at the conferences by college professors, public school teachers and college students.

During the two day discussion special emphasis was placed on four major areas of concern to the "career teacher." One area was the assessment and misassessment of American teachers. The problem of assessing teachers to courses which their degrees do not qualify them to teach is a growing one and one of special interest to those entering the profession.

More effective induction of new teachers was another major emphasis area. The NCTEPE is searching for ways to encourage local school systems to develop orientation and induction programs for beginning teachers to ease their adjustment in their career.

The third area was continuing education for teachers. Improving in-service education, several objectives need special attention. These objectives include substantial leaves with pay for elementary and secondary school teachers to give them a chance for further study, more individualized professional growth programs, closer cooperation between schools and colleges in planning in-service education programs, and classroom teacher involvement in determining continuing education needs, policies, and procedures.

The last major emphasis area covered the displaced school personnel. Many teachers have been displaced because of school integration, and recent college graduates have not obtained teaching positions because of school integration. A survey, partly sponsored by NCTEPE, will be used as the basis for planning preventive and remedial action in connection with this problem.

The NCTEPE has organized committees to study and submit proposals concerning these and other problems confronting the "career teacher."

In the Library Exhibition Room for the month of February will be an exhibit of sculpture of Carl Rosenburg. In the West Wing art department Jan. 26 - Feb. 15 will be an exhibit of water colors by U. S. artists.

"Democracy has to be born anew every generation and education is the midwife."

Scientist Probe Into Sex Life Of Cabbage

Editor's Note: The following is a reprint from The Sunday Star of Washington, D. C.

By PEG BRACKEN
Star Special Writer

I have a glimmer of good news to start the new year — good news for the people who are bored by our current bountiful supply of gamey books. I mean the artfully dirty books and the dirtily artful books that load down the racks at the bus depot.

More and more people are becoming bored with seeing these around, of course, including the people who write them. Take those Angry Young Men. They're petulant middle-aged men now, and I think the reason they're petulant is that they're bored with all the bedroom business. It used to be that a novelist could have an interesting time plotting his book, with complications, crisis, and climax. But now it's just a climax on every page, and clinically detailed, at that.

WELL, THINGS are looking up. At this yawning point in time, with most of us wondering what'll We Play Next, comes word of new horizons opening before us.

Way up in Ithaca (that's New York), science is making a

Students Confer With Newman

The first Presidential Press Conference was convened on Thursday, January 6. The purpose of this conference was to promote the exchange of ideas between the student body and the administrative heads of the college and the major organizations.

Dr. Newman, Dean Wilson, and Mr. Wamsley represented the college administration at the conference. Student leaders on the panel representing the five major organizations included Jenny McGow, Linda Bassford, Bobbie Allen, Cookie Hawthorne, and Ann Gwaltney.

Members of the student body were encouraged to ask any questions concerning policies or issues which they wished clarified.

Upon asking their opinions of the conference, the following seniors had this to say:

Barbara Ragland: "I feel that it was very beneficial and informative. This is one way in which the student body can communicate with the administration in understanding various policies and procedures pertaining to them. I hope these will be continued in the future, and perhaps even on a wider scale."

Harriet Anderson: "The Presidential Press Conference can and should provide a vital and much-needed link between students and the administration. Students often have many legitimate complaints or criticisms about administrative policies and academic procedures. The new Presidential Press Conference could, therefore, well serve as a method for the airing out of student criticisms and for the promoting of better understanding between the two levels. The conference might also work two ways, however, with the administration being given an opportunity to give their criticisms or ideas about student life and activities."

study of the actual behavior of the cabbage. What the Ithaca scientists want to know is why some cabbages reject pollen of their own species but readily accept the pollen of others. And they're spending $32,000 (negotiable lettuce, that is) to find out.

Now, I admit that my first thought was, if that isn't science all over! Always complicating things. The way I've always looked at it, some cabbages have it and some don't. But that isn't the way science looks at it. They have to poke and prod and try. If you've wondered why cabbages have been looking a little greener than usual lately, this is probably the reason.

HOWEVER, THE MORE I thought about this rooting around in the vegetables' love-life, the more clearly I could see that it's probably the happiest development in years. Sexy, but different. Aside from THE SEX-UALITY OF THE DATE, a film which used to pack them in a Palm Springs, and the few shaggy vegetable stories I know of, the thing is mainly unexplored.
